Frank Bergen Writes on the Methods of County, City, Borough and Township Government, Outlining a Greatly Simplified Plan That Is Less Costly and Cumbersome.

[From The Elizabeth Daily Journal.]

Aside from the temporary embarrassment of the National Government the public question in which the people are most deeply interested at the present time, is the problem of municipal reform. The existing methods of conducting the administration of municipal governments, except in rural districts and in rare instances elsewhere, do not satisfy the people. Taxes accumulate, discontent increases, sporadic movements for reform break out here and there, and end in nearly every case in relapse to the former condition. Advice is freely poured forth by the press in the form of books, essays and editorials. Petitions, memorials and remonstances seem endless, and yet, year after year, the difficulty of administering the local government of a thickly settled locality increases. The reason is plain enough, but a practical remedy seems to elude all who try to find it.

The fact is that the influence of various socialistic theories during the last half century has laid on local governments numerous duties which they were not originally organized to perform, and the slow and discordant efforts that have been made to adapt the ancient forms of local government to modern uses have given rise to a vast mass of law, ranging from ordinances to constitutions, which have been construed in different ways by voluminous decisions of the courts. It is obvious that successful administration of such governments is next to impossible. One is rather surprised to find that their break-down is not more serious than it is.

The common experience of a municipal office holder, anxious to serve his fellow-citizens faithfully, is something like this: He is elected, by the impulse of some agitation, on the faith of his character, or because he may have been successful in some other career, and enters hopefully on the discharge of his duties, only to find himself embarrassed and perplexed by obstacles which he never appreciated before. After a few futile efforts to redeem his pledges, or gratify his ambition, he becomes disgusted or indifferent. He tries to attend to the public business at odd times, generally evenings when he has nothing else to do, and acts largely on rumor, gossip or current items of news he happens to read. If, feeling his helplessness, he falls under the influence of some one who is more familiar with the ropes, he becomes the subject of a boss, and loses the confidence of the people. By and by his constituents grow impatient at his conduct or inaction; he is turned out of office as a disappointment and sent back to private life fully convinced that the people in a republic are extremely ungrateful.

There is another class of officials who seek office for less worthy purposes. Some lively citizen, commonly called a hustler, gets his friends out to the primary, secures the nomination and is elected. He firmly believes that it is his duty to get something, not for himself directly, but for some of the friends who were most active in his support. He commences business in the caucus of his party, and must get a doorkeeper at least to show his constituents. Later he develops a strong desire to get something for the ward, township or locality in which he happens to live. Other members of the same board or body understand their duty in the same way, and so it often happens that the conduct of officials, who pass for honest men, becomes a raid on the public treasury instead of an administration of the government for the general welfare of the people. I do not believe that dishonesty is nearly so extensive among public officials as is commonly supposed. The true cause of the failure of municipalities to meet the just expectations of the people is rather the wretched system of government which has come into existence, and which is itself largely responsible for a false conception of official duty.

Since this question grew into importance and pressed forward for solution, the public mind has turned in different directions in search of a remedy. In 1875 it was thought or hoped that reform could be effected if special legislation were abolished, but that movement was not a success. Later a cry went out for one man power with direct responsibility to the people at stated intervals, but that theory of petty temporary monarchy failed to take root deeply. About the same time, schemes for local government by means of bi-partisan bodies were devised, and to some extent put in practice, and later still a few sublime characters began to advocate non-partisan government in the centres of the population of a country whose government would perish with its partisanship.

There has also been more or less talk of trying "business principles," whatever they are, as a means of local government. If it is intended by this to establish a practical form of government over a given locality, adapted to its needs for the time being, and then to elect men of intelligence and integrity to administer the government within, if not according to, the law, there is much to commend it. If it means that political institutions that grow out of traits of human nature older and as tough as civilization itself, should be conducted as one would run a grocery store, a lumber yard or a bank, it is an unsound proposition. There is no better time to repeat and emphasize this fact than at present, when the practice of mingling the methods and avarice of business with the legitimate functions of government at Washington has culminated again in wide-spread disaster. In a country where officials are changed frequently, where the people are familiar with the methods of business, and but few make a study of the science of government, if there is such a thing, it is no doubt wise to employ business methods as far as practicable in conducting the routine work of government, but a good government, which is one of the grandest achievements of human effort, should not be degraded to the status of a mere commercial pursuit.

But no one can come to an end of a discussion of this subject while dealing in mere generalities. Any practical reform must be achieved by a concrete operation. Instead of trying to tell other people how other localities should be governed, suppose we discuss among ourselves how the government of Union county could be changed to our advantage. This county contains 101 square miles; its territory is bounded and intersected by several streams that provide surface drainage. Cranford is the central point, and no extremity is more than eight miles distant. The land is generally level, interrupted by a few considerable hills, but there seems to be nothing in the physical features of the county to interfere seriously with the suggestion I wish to make. Spread over this small territory there are no less than fifteen municipal governments, including three cities, nine townships and two boroughs, in different stages of development, and a county government underlying them all. The population of the county by the last census (1890) was 72,467, and is probably over 80,000 at the present time. In the offices of these several governments there are about 180 officials, not counting policeman, constables, school teachers, justices of the peace, overseers and surveyors of the highways and overseers of the poor. There are at least a hundred of these minor officials. In a word, there are about 300 people busy with more or less activity in the work of governing Union county. It is probably true to say, and I speak respectfully, that not one of these numerous officials ever read the laws they have been appointed to administer, and it is equally true that if they should do so it would not add much to their efficiency, for the reason that the vast mass of law which smothers them is simply inscrutable, both to the professional and the wayfaring man.

The assessed value of property in Union county for purposes of taxation last year was $34,613,387, and the aggregate debt of the fifteen municipal governments in the county is $5,113,011, bearing interest ranging from four to seven per cent., but nearly all at four. The annual interest charge is about $225,000. During the year 1894 the taxpayers of the county were called upon to pay to their respective collectors in cash the sum of $899,700. Deducting from this the sum of $225,000 paid for interest on debts, and we find that the people of this county paid last year the enormous sum of $674,700 for government, and probably not more than half a dozen of the taxpayers believe that they received the worth of their money. It must be conceded that a system of governments which produces such inadequate results for the amount expended should be reformed. It is a condition that is far behind and below the enlightened and progressive spirit of the age.

I am in favor of adopting the advice of Hamlet and reforming it altogether, being careful, however, at every step to remember that a government which does not fit the people cannot succeed. I believe that a radical change can be made which will bring the government of Union county in harmony with the sentiments of the people, diminish the cost of administration and add greatly to its efficiency. My suggestion is this: Abolish every municipal government in the county except the county government itself, and diminish the functions of the board of Chosen Freeholders to the lowest degree consistent with the constitution; then erect a new government over the entire territory of the county, based on a practical theory in harmony with modern ideas. Let the governing body proper consist of five or seven persons, to be elected, well paid and required to devote their whole time to the public service; define the outlines of their power with extreme clearness, and provide but few regulations for their conduct within the limits of their jurisdiction. Many of the so-called safeguards of legislation relating to municipalities are in fact sources of embarrassment and pitfalls. I am convinced that it would be better to circumscribe the general jurisdiction of a governing body clearly, and leave the methods of exercising the powers conferred largely to its discretion. This is necessary to the vigor and efficiency of the government.

It would be necessary to establish executive departments of the government, such as fire, health, street and police departments, but I do not think that any member of the executive departments, except the head officer of each, should be elected by the people or appointed by the governing body. The people in a thickly settled locality are too busy with their own affairs to spare the time required in a short campaign to make sufficient examination of the mental and moral fitness of candidates for mere clerkships and other minor offices, and the governing body should by all means be entirely free from the annoyance of the office-seeker, and, as far as possible, from dictation of the boss. Let the governing body establish the executive departments by ordinances, appoint the head officer of each, and remove him at pleasure. It is necessary for the governing body to have this power in order to maintain discipline, so as to conduct their important and complicated work successfully. The other officers should be chosen by a civil service commission.

The merits of the cause of civil service reform have been much obscured by the ridicule of its enemies and the folly of its friends. But the system has grown up slowly, between both obstacles, to a strong position, and can no longer be regarded as a subject fit only for a short plank in a platform to please the Mugwumps and make the delegates smile. In the last number of the Atlantic, Mr. Theodore Roosevelt gives an interesting account of the progress and condition of the movement, entirely free from cant, although a little overloaded with enthusiasm. I am convinced that a radical and genuine plan of reform of municipal governments must include a provision for the selection of the minor executive officers by the approved methods of civil service reform.

This, in mere outline, is a form of local government I venture to suggest for Union county. It could be established by a statute which no doubt would be passed if the people desire it. A few of the advantages of such a change are (1) the territory would be rid at once of an oppressive mass of local laws and ordinances, complicated so as to be unenforceable by a still greater mass of inconsistent general laws. These laws for the most part are the experiments and failures of centuries, transmitted with increasing volume from age to age. We need a local government resting on the spirit of the age in which we live, and not on tradition and mistakes alone. (2) Its practical and efficient methods of administration would provide much better service to the people at much less cost than we get from fifteen different governments with rapidly changing officials, who attend to the public business in the evening and at other odd times. The success of the great commercial corporations is largely due to the fact that the governing body consists of a few persons, who consult rather than debate, and talk instead of declaiming. To this extent, at least, there is no objection to the substitution of business methods for the common practices of local governments. The value of such a change will be appreciated by anyone who has observed the difference between the action of gentlemen in a board of directors, and in a common council. (3) The population of Union county has doubled since 1870, and is likely to increase still more rapidly in the future. The inevitable course of events will force its territory under one local government sooner or later by the gradual process of annexation of the smaller to the larger towns. This is the common history of the growth of cities. The interests of all parts of the county are sufficiently identical to make it desirable that its growth and public improvements should be according to a common plan.

At present four municipalities in the county are preparing to construct separate sewer systems. Roselle intends to construct a trunk sewer to tidewater. Cranford will connect with the Rahway system. Westfield and Plainfield propose to try the plan of intermittent filtration. All of these systems will be constructed for local convenience only, and must of necessity be temporary expedients. In former years large sums of money were expended by the various municipalities of the county for the improvement of highways, and nearly all was wasted. We never dealt with the problem successfully until the unity of the whole territory of the county and the interest of each part in all other parts were recognized. May it not be so with the other public improvements which the increasing population of the county make it necessary to construct?

There are also objections to the proposition. The one most obvious is the unequal debts of the different local governments. In fact some of them are entirely free from debt. But this objection will seem to diminish on examination. Where the debts are there also are large quantities of taxable property, and the most costly of the necessary public improvements have been made. The rate of interest on the large debts is four per cent., and it is not unreasonable to expect that the saving in taxes by reason of a rational administration of the proposed government would go far toward paying the interest on the debt of the consolidated town.

It may also be objected that the proposed plan would give too much power to the governing body. But it is impossible for men to accomplish satisfactory results in dealing with difficult matters without freedom to act as good judgment may dictate, according to the actual conditions of the moment. As it is impossible to foresee remote conditions or emergencies, so it is impossible to prescribe how men can act to the best advantage years before they are called on to act at all. The plan, however, calls for a distinct demarcation of the limits of the power of the governing body, but leaves it comparatively free to act within those limits. That body would be responsible for the government of the whole territory; public attention would be fixed on the conduct of its members, instead of being divided as at present among numerous officials. The office being responsible and dignified would attract men of capacity, and its importance would lead to the selection of the best men who could be impressed into the public service when the necessity of doing so is properly appreciated. On this point the fate of all forms of popular local government must turn. The form of the government furnishes opportunities more or less convenient for the service or betrayal of the people by those entrusted with power. Some students of the subject seem to think that the form of the government is of more importance than the character of the men chosen to administer its power. I do not think so, although it is no doubt true that the form is one of the essential attributes of a good government. Herbert Spencer, who is regarded as the wisest of all men who have studied government profoundly, declared, before the strain of pessimism grew darker in his mind, that "the belief that by due skill an ill-working humanity may be framed into well-working institutions, is a delusion. The defective natures of citizens will show themselves in the bad acting of whatever social structures they are arranged into. There is no political alchemy by which you can get golden conduct out of leaden instincts." We must all bow to the dictum of this great man, but the progress of the cause of good government cannot be stopped by a disagreeable fact. It may be that the character of no popular government, whether of a nation or a town, will long remain above the level of the civilization of its inhabitants, but civilization is constantly progressing, and it is clearly the duty of the people to establish and maintain a form of government at least up to the level of their common intelligence. It is certain that our local governments in this county are not.

Dashing Into the Enemy.

Feb. 10, 1862, was the date of a naval affair known in war history as the capture of Elizabeth City, N. C. It was not of great importance except as it extended the area of Burnside's conquest at Roanoke. But it brought about the liveliest half hour's helter skelter fighting imaginable for battles on water. After the taking of Roanoke the Confederate "mosquito fleet" ran away through Albemarle sound to a refuge in Pasquotank river just below Elizabeth City. The Union commodore, Rowan, quickly gave chase with his nondescript flotilla, consisting of 12 vessels rigged for war purposes out of old ferryboats, tugs and river steamers. Regardless of hidden obstructions or torpedoes, the gallant commander pushed on and found the Confederates in line behind a fort on Cobb's point, mounting four 32 pounders. Opposite the fort the heavy schooner Black Warrior was anchored. She mounted two 32's. The "mosquito fleet" was in line between them. The 32's all opened on Rowan's ships at long range, but he steamed boldly up and at a half mile ran up on the masthead of the flagship the signal, "Dash into the enemy!" Crowding on all steam and firing as they went, the Union captains sailed in. The Black Warrior fired a few rounds and then burst into flames. The gunners of the fort ran away, and by the time a naval crew got there to take their places their friends and enemies were so hopelessly mixed that they dare not fire a shot for fear of hurting their own people. The Confederate flagship Seabird started to fly away, but the Commodore Perry—fitly named—with the heroic Flusser on the bridge, ran her down and sunk her. Five out of six vessels were captured or destroyed. The hero of the day was Gunner's Mate John Davis of the Valley City. A Confederate shell tore its way into the gunroom and set the woodwork on fire. Davis had been serving powder from an open barrel, and with the flames darting about and sparks flying in all directions he threw himself across the opening of the barrel head, covering it with his body until the fire had been subdued.

Fighting For Acadia.

Feb. 11, 1747, is noted in colonial annals as the date of a desperate struggle between New England colonists and the French in Acadia. Bands of New Englanders, numbering when united about 600, had made their way to Minas, where they were lodging in the houses of the settlers waiting for the opening of spring to commence a campaign and expel the French. In the height of the Canadian winter 350 French, led by De Villers, marched across the snow and ice from Cumberland, a marvelous journey of seventeen days. When warning reached the New Englanders at Minas, they refused to believe that the French could stand the rigor of a winter's march.

Arriving at Minas, De Villers told off ten detachments to attack the first ten houses. It was after midnight and snowing at the time, so that the sentinels on guard could not see the assailants until they were within rifle range. The French dashed through the fire, killed the sentinels and forced in doors and windows with axes. The leader of the New Englanders, Colonel Noble, arose from his bed, and with his officers fought until overpowered and killed. Noble, his brother and three others fell together. In this attack 70 of the New Englanders were killed, 60 wounded and 70 captured. The French lost 7 killed and 14 wounded. De Villers was shot through the arm. Next day the defenders of the remaining houses made several sorties to recover the ground, but finding themselves cut off from their ship and stores, with only a day's food and eight rounds of ammunition in hand, capitulated. They were allowed to march out with the honors of war and return to Boston.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—Just at the time when the Winter is at its worst, when all the defense that warm clothing, warm houses and good food can yield is most needed: When in-door work is scarce and out-door work is impossible: When every charity should and must be doing its utmost: Just now, that is to say, the funds of this association are practically exhausted. True, all bills are paid to February 1st: True, again, we do not use or need a large sum of money—only about $500 annually—since the association aims rather to help its beneficiaries to become self supporting than to give alms: But what we do need, that we must have and have at once. And if the community believes our work to be in itself wise and useful, and wisely and usefully conducted, then the least the community can do is to support that work with sympathy and money, especially money.

We solicit subscriptions for annual memberships at $2.00, or for life-memberships at $50.00: We earnestly hope for forty or fifty annual "sustaining" members at $10.00 each, since we should then have a solid basis for regular business. But we will gladly receive for any sum from $1.00 upward, for the need grows greater as the mercury goes lower.

Cupid, the little god of love, will be given tribute in The Daily Press tomorrow by a special copyrighted St. Valentine's page, of literary and artistic excellence.

The best fiction by the modern masters is copyrighted to Daily Press service, in the six-day serials which have become so popular. Rudyard Kipling will tell his newest tale in Friday's and Saturday's issues; and Mrs. Alexander will begin a powerful novel in Saturday's issue also. You don't want to miss 'em.

To the largest and best newspaper in Union County, the Elizabeth Daily Journal, The Press is indebted for the article from Frank Bergen's pen, printed in this issue, on "Condensed Government". It is an able review of a novel theme, and will be read and discussed with thoughtful consideration by voters of both parties. The Journal was so neighborly as to lend The Press the use of the type in which the article was already set.

A valuable library for Jerseymen is a collection of the Annual Reports of the State Geologist. The volume for 1893 has just been issued, and is a credit to the painstaking research of Geologist John C. Smock and his assistants. There is just one way to know New Jersey, and that is through these geological reports. Accompanying the latest volume is a series of valuable maps, including one which shows the territory of the extinct mammoth lake Passaic, which it is believed once covered the central New Jersey interior.

"She Couldn't Marry Three."

The above title seemed to arouse the curiosity of the New York public, so much so that on the opening night the house was packed to the doors. The success of the play was instantaneous, and during the entire New York engagement the theatre was crowded. The play is an unqualified success; the scenery beyond anything seen yet; the company a powerful and evenly balanced one, and Miss Lillian Kennedy as the heroine "Bess" presents a characterization which for histrionic ability has never been surpassed on the American stage.

The experience of Geo. A. Apgar, of German Valley, N. J., is well worth remembering. He was troubled with chronic diarrhoea and doctored for five months and was treated by four different doctors without benefit. Read Papers on China.

A most interesting missionary service was held yesterday afternoon under the auspices of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies of the Presbyterian churches in the chapel of the First Presbyterian Church.

Mrs. Milliken, president of the First Presbyterian Church society, was in charge and conducted the devotional exercises. The subject under consideration was China, and representatives from the various churches read papers as follows:

Methodist, Mrs. Luckey; Congregational, Mrs. Dwight; Trinity Reformed, Mrs. Schenck; Baptist, Mrs. Wyckoff; Presbyterian, Mrs. Pruden.

Mrs. Remsen reported for the Christian Endeavor work in China and a letter was received from Mrs. Morris in India, who is supported by the Missionary Society of the Presbyterian churches of Plainfield.

The service closed with sentence prayers by the women.

Young Women to Make Sweets.

The young women of the Presbyterian churches will give an exhibition of candy making, and conduct a sale of the same, in the Crescent Avenue Church parlors, Tuesday afternoon and evening, March 5. In the evening there will be an exhibition of live dolls. A large committee of which Miss Tracy is chairman have the matter in charge.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE, Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN, 214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R. VanZandt, of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave., Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. R. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

FORMAL OPENING OF OUR

Grocery Department!

MONDAY, FEB. 11.

A few plain remarks in connection with this new departure we think is opportune.

A few months ago I rented and fitted up at a heavy expense my present elegant and spacious stores, with the intention of giving Plainfield a department store second to none in the State.

As I have progressed from one improvement to another, I find that if I fulfill my plan, I must, of necessity, add a first class Grocery Department, in order to compete with New York and Brooklyn department stores, as many of my patrons are buying these goods there, and I desire me to furnish them with their Groceries together with their Dry Goods, Housefurnishings, etc.

I am very much surprised as I have talked to people in regard to this movements, to find that there is such a large proportion of this trade going to New York department stores, and I shall make a strong effort to induce it to remain at home—where it belongs.

I shall do all I can to counteract the too prevalent idea abroad that Plainfield is an expensive place to live in on account of the high prices on articles of food, as real estate agents often say they are obliged to meet this objection when trying to sell or rent houses to New York and Brooklyn people.

We shall, therefore, sell our goods, which will always be of the best quality to be had, at what may be known as cut prices

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Upset, But Happy.

A gay party of Plainfield's young people met at the home of Lester Baldwin of Rockview avenue last evening and went to Westfield on a strawride.

Just before reaching Westfield the sleigh turned out of the bad ruts in the middle of the road and tried to drive at one side but the incline proved too great and the young people were spilled out into the snow. Fortunately the team was not going at a high rate of speed, and Louis Cooley had the presence of mind to spring at once to their heads, while the rest of the party gathered themselves up and climbed back to their places in the sleigh. No one was seriously injured, although there were sundry bruises and strains. The young people then righted the sleigh and proceeded on their way sedder but somewhat wiser.

The Misses Bessie Baldwin, Mabelle Smith and Louis Cooley acted as chaperones.

The rest who enjoyed the evening's experiences were Miss Eleanor Williams, Miss Elsie Smith, Miss Marion Safford, Miss Maud Honeyman, Miss Nellie Schutt, John Hull, Aubrey Hull, Lester Baldwin, Fred Bonny, Langdon Howard, Charles Turrill and Douglass Drake.

The Musical Club.

Mr. and Mrs. B. O. Bowers of LaGrande avenue entertained the Musical Club at their lovely home last evening, and a programme of high merit was enjoyed. It included the following:

Violin Solo—The Post, Schubert—Arthur Freeman; vocal solo—'Twas April—Miss Delphine Bowers; zither and violin solos—Miss Benz and Mr. Petrie; vocal solo—Hark, Hark, the Lark; Who is Sylvia, Schubert—Mrs. Collins; violin solo—Schubert's Serenade—Mr. Petrie; vocal solo—Arthur Freeman; zither and violin solos—Miss Benz and Mr. Petrie.

At the conclusion of the above the club partook of refreshments daintily served. An evening of rare pleasure was thus brought to a close.

Funeral of Miss Terry.

The funeral services of Miss Tillie Terry were held yesterday afternoon from her late home on Richmond street. Rev. Cornelius Schenck conducted the ceremony.

A very large number of friends and relatives were present, attesting the high esteem in which decedent was held.

There were several floral tributes among which was a handsome pillow from the Independent Fife and Drum Corps, and a beautiful bunch of roses and smilax from the Women's Relief Corps. The pall bearers were: A. Wilson, Arthur Adams, Henry Adams and Herbert Bodine.

Interment was in the Methodist cemetery.

A Dinner to Miss Cox.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. Marion Ackerman gave a dinner at her home on Ninth street to a few select guests in honor of Miss Cox of New York. The occasion was one of pleasant social intercourse. The dining tables were decorated with American beauty roses, and the trimmings were of the same color, lending a bright effect to the cozy room. Max Wiertz catered.

The following were present: The Misses Dumont, Corey, Lawrence, Waldron, and Walz, Messrs. Munger, VanBuren, Walz, Wharton, Waring, and Dr. B. VanD. Hedges.

Dance in Friendship Hall.

A largely attended and very enjoyable dance was held in Friendship Hall, New Market, last evening. Guests were present from Elizabeth, Jersey City, Bound Bound, Somerville and Plainfield. Quite a large party went in a sleigh from this city and enjoyed the pleasant ride as well as the dance which followed.

BROOKLYN'S CITIZENS OBJECT.

Greater New York Opposed—No Instalment Consolidation for Them

Albany, Feb. 13.—The senate cities' committee yesterday gave a hearing on the Greater New York bills. Mr. Dykeman for the Citiens Loyal league of Brooklyn representing 55,000 enrolled names opposed both bills. He said Brooklyn's people wanted no such union as that proposed. The city led in the fight for good government and did not want a share in New York's wealth. He did not think the Stranahan-Green commission had been faithful. It was created as a commission to inquire into the desirability of union but changed itself into a body to appeal violently for votes and called itself the Greater New York commission.

They held out the bait of an equal tax rate and so was on the skirmish line by false representations. The Lexow bill violates every principle of home rule. Its advocates seem afraid to trust the people and so come to Albany for legislation. If the Lexow bill passes every function of the board of aldermen in New York which are exercised by supervisors elsewhere will come to an end. This result makes it unconstitutional. The Reynold's bill is equally objectionable. The people don't want consolidation by installments. The people should pass on the question by voting on the proposed charter.

He Was Out of Work.

Pittsburg, Feb. 13.—Henry Stahlberg, a carpenter, 51 years of age, residing at 198 Otem street, Allegheny, committed suicide last night by hanging himself with a silk handkerchief to the bed post in his room. Despondency over failure to secure employment and inability to meet the payment of a mortgage on his property, was the cause. He leaves a widow.

They Will Call at Cherbourg.

Hamburg, Feb. 13.—The Hamburg-American Steamship company has arranged to have its steamers call at Cherbourg on both eastward and westward passages. The Western railway of France will run special trains to Paris in connection with the steamers. The new plan will not affect the Southampton service.

Charged with Embezzlement.

Washington, Feb. 13.—The chief postoffice inspector ha received a telegram announcing the arrest at Lewistown, Pa., of James Gilmore, late postmaster at Broken Bow, Nebraska, on the charge of embezzlement.

Another Verdict for Dr. Kennedy—A Philadelphian Cured of Gravel.

Philadelphia, Pa., Item.

Since the investigations of the claims made for Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy by the press, they have received letters from every State in the Union, and find the remedy fails in few cases.

The opinion of the average physician has been that kidney and urinary troubles could be cured only by long and persistent treatment. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy acts quickly, curing obstinate cases in a very short time.

One of our best known citizens, Mr. John J. Neill of No. 2437 North Eighth street, was a sufferer from gravel, in speaking of his case, said: "I had a very bad attack of gravel, and Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, taken about one month completely cured me. I cannot say too much in its favor."

Favorite Remedy is prescribed with unfailing success for all diseases brought about by an excess of uric acid in the blood. In rheumatism, dyspepsia and nerve troubles, it has made many cures that were considered beyond the aid of medicine. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy can be obtained of all druggists at $1 a bottle or six bottles for $5.

There Was No Trouble.

James Caufield of Johnston avenue declares, and his guests corroborate him, that the christening party at his home was a most orderly and pleasant event. The story of the neighbors that there was disorder, is emphatically denied by all the parties interested. The Press regrets to have been misinformed in its previous publication concerning the matter, and cheerfully gives Mr. Caufield the benefit of this correction.

NOW ON HAND,

Diphtheria Antitoxine.

FOR IMMEDIATE DELIVERY.

So limited has been the supply of GENUINE ANTITOXINE heretofore, that sales have been made only on condition of immediate actual use. But amid so large a population as ours, an urgent demand for the new treatment may arise at any hour, night or day, Sunday or week-day. And delay in obtaining it might result fatally. I have therefore, with some difficulty, and at considerable expense, provided a complete outfit of Antitoxine Serum (with injector) and am prepared to meet such demand. The cost of an outfit (Serum of two powers and Koch injector) is now about $12 being only one-fourth of the earlier price. At present sales will be made only on the order of a practicing physician.

DRAMA AND OPERA.

PLAYS THAT ARE OCCUPYING THE BEST THEATERS IN NEW YORK.

Most of Those Named Will Have Long Runs and be Heard of Later On the Road. The Old Homestead Leads All. One Case of Comic Opera.

Of actors whose names are printed as big in the bills as the titles of the plays in which they appear, we have a good variety on the New York stage, and the entertainments they offer are uncommonly attractive. H. Beerbohm Tree and several members of his company have done so well with "A Bunch of Violets" at Abbey's that no change will be made for some time. Mr. Tree and some of his actors took a flying trip to Washington and took part in a charity matinee, returning in time for the evening at Abbey's.

William Gillette still fools the mother-in-law in "Too Much Johnson" at the Standard. That jolly farce has been put into German for use in Berlin, and now it is said that it is to be brought out at the Paris Cluny in French. The Parisians will then have an opportunity to judge of Mr. Gillette's alterations of the original piece, which was acted in Paris several years ago.

Fanny Davenport will continue the highly dramatic and pictorial representations of "Gismonda" four weeks longer at the Fifth Avenue. Her artistic taste and business enterprise are being well rewarded. William H. Crane will later come to this theater for a month with "His Wife's Father," a comedy thoroughly Americanized by Martha Morton from a German piece that has been successful in Berlin.

Kathryn Kidder is still enacting at the Broadway, in "Madame Sans-Gene," the semi-histrionic woman who rose from laundress to countess, and figured at the court of Napoleon Bonaparte. This comedy is fortunate to be here at a time of revived interest in Napoleonic subjects. It is a good illustration of people and scenes in the period of the first empire, and so is a lesson as well as an entertainment.

Ada Rehan is dividing honors with Henry E. Dixey at Daly's, where she is the principal comedian in "The Orient Express," and he is the chief burlesquer in "A Tragedy Rehearsed." Mr. Daly has written his version of "The Critic" up to date, putting in some jokes of what he would probably style "contemporaneous human interest," and providing pretexts to travesty "Trilby" and other current things.

Denman Thompson is on his legs again and they are not lame enough to hurt his performance of the New Hampshire farmer in "The Old Homestead," at the Star. The long life of that drama is marvelous, but it can be accounted for because the homely, honest humor and sentiment appeal again and again to audiences with small loss of effect through repetition. The expectation is that no other play will be needed at this house until late in the spring, if at all this season.

Of the plays that depend upon their own merits aided only by a general excellence of a company in which no one member is dominant, "The Masqueraders" is the oldest in the length of its stay here. Its hundredth performance at the Empire is not far off, and tokens to be distributed then are being made.

"The Fatal Card" was a bold melodramatic experiment, considering that no such work of harsh sensationalism has ever been presented at Palmers; but our fashionable public, ever ready to be pleased with a novelty, has joined with other sorts of people in going to see this play of crime and explosion. Its term has been extended to March 11, and then Mrs. Langtry will follow with "Gossip," an English adaptation of a German piece, the original of which is Italian.

"The Case of Rebellious Susan" remains on trial at the Lyceum, and the wife's plea of innocence, only filed recently, seems to incline people to hear the evidence over again. This play with a purpose teaches its lesson indefinitely, perhaps, but with much merriment, and no comedy at the Lyceum has been better treated in the acting.

"The District Attorney" is extremely well acted at the American, where it is retained indefinitely. The Americanism of the Klein-Fiske drama is thorough and complete without being rampant, the theme and characters belong to New York, and the work is excellent stagecraft. The timeliness of the subject, the authors explain, is entirely accidental. The work was completed before the Lexow disclosures had been made, and the play's illustration of political methods was planned without any thought of Parkhurst.

"A Milk White Flag" at Hoyt's will have an actor new in the role of the Colonel who boasts that Napoleon looked like him. This successor to Mr. Stanley is Harry Conor, who has been the hypochondriac in "A Trip to Chinatown" ever since that farce began. The season of the present play at Hoyt's will end in three weeks, and then will come the Frohman production of "The Foundling," with Cissy Fitzgerald dancing and Annie Russell in a short piece to precede it.

"The Twentieth Century Girl" has been submitted at the Bijou to the process common to travesties, that of eliminating poor matter and putting in that which is amusing. A batch of songs were sung for the first time last week, and Bettina Girard joined the company. Mr. Lederer says he is looking for another theater in which to produce "The Mimic World," in order not to disturb the present entertainment, which will be good for months.

"Rob Roy" is sure to reach a 150th performance, as mementos are already promised for that occasion. Dave Warfield is now the town crier, but the cast remains unchanged in other respects. This is the only comic opera now in the city, and it is getting the reward of monopoly. By and by "The Vale of Avoca," which has been produced out of town, will be brought to the Herald Square.

"Little Christopher" holds its place tenaciously at the Garden, and its 150th performance is only a week off. Souvenirs then, of course. The variety show imbedded in the burlesque is a good one, containing a judicious selection of original and other specialties.

A VETERAN OF THE WAR.

The Reason of His Refusal to Draw a Pension From Uncle Sam.

He entered the ranks of a volunteer regiment in 1861, became a captain before the close of the first year of his service, fought in many battles, was wounded time and again, was twice promoted for gallantry on the field, and was the colonel of his regiment when it was disbanded at the end of the war. Soon afterward he went into business, made an unexpected success in it through his energy and perseverance, raised and trained a family, enjoyed life as the years passed, accumulated a fortune before he was 60, and has at last come to the conclusion that he will take things easy as the nurse of three fads so long as he lives.

"Do you draw a pension colonel?" he was asked by one of the friends of his boyhood.

"A pension!" he replied, promptly. "No, sir, I wouldn't take it. The pension ought to be on the other side in my case, and I'd like to give a pension to the government to which I owe everything, from my health to my bank account, from my scars to my self assertion. You know what a raw, timid, shambling, careless, useless weakling I was when I was a youngster, forty years ago, up in the Green Mountain State. I was good for nothing, couldn't learn the trade at which I was put, got only $2 a week with board, which was mostly mush and maple molasses, and would have kept on in that way all my life. At Lincoln's first call for troops I got excited and joined the regiment, which was made up of Green Mountaineers. We wore the uniform and drilled and shouldered arms and fired our guns and waited for the rebels. I had to straighten up and keep step, and keep my eyes and ears open, and go through the drill, and obey orders, and live on rations, and sleep in a wooden barrack, and salute the colonel, beside lots of other things. In three months I had become a different Vermonter. I was quick as a flash and orderly as a martinet; I could shoot at a mark and hit it; our company was better drilled than any other in the regiment, and I was one of the best men in it. I had become a soldier, eager to fight for Vermont and the American Union. We were sent to the front. I marched like Napoleon Bonaparte or Ethan Allen, and was not afraid of old Jeff Davis or any other rebel in Dixie. We were sent to the front; we soon had a skirmish, in which I got that scar on my face, but I was out of the hospital in three days fuller of fight than ever. That made me a corporal, and I can tell you that I knew I was one. We had bigger battles after a while, and I had a hand in two of them. I had found out what war was. Before the end of the first year of service I was made the captain of a company in place of a captain who had been shot. There was one scrap after another in one State or the other. There were hard duties, rough fare, long tramps, short encounters, dangerous raids, grewsome scenes, and all kinds of experiences in camp and field. I began to feel like a veteran of the Moscow campaign. I was hardened and bronzed, and held several bullets under the skin, two of which I carry in my pocket. It would be a long story, but I became colonel of the regiment, and you wouldn't have known the trifling, shambling youngster who was your friend up in Vermont when we were there together. After four years, when the enemy had been laid low, we were all mustered out of service, and I took hold of the first business that came to hand and had good luck in it, with vicissitudes.

"Take a pension from Uncle Sam for making a man of me! I wouldn't draw it. I owe our uncle of the starry flag everything I have in the world, and I'd like to pay him a pension. He drilled me and trained me, and put me in the way of evolution, and made me practical, and taught me the need of order, and gave me vigor, and he gave me my keep while he was doing it, beside fair pay after I got up. If it hadn't been for him, I might have been getting $6 a week by this time, in Vermont, with milk and maple molasses; but our old friend Tom, who didn't enter the army, is still scratching gravel or less than that. As for the disabled men of our regiment who need a pension from Uncle Sam, I am glad they get it."

SPECULATING ON TIME.

Cycling Authorities Look for a Mile to Be Ridden in 1:25 This Year.

Bicycle racers, after reviewing the records created during last season, are speculating as to where the one mile figures will be placed this year. Racing authorities in this country predict that, with such men as Johnson, Bald, Tyler, Sanger, Titus, and L. Calahan in harness the one mile track record will be lowered to 1 minute 25 seconds. When Willie Windle reduced the mile record to 2:25 in 1890, and in the following year lowered it to 2:21, the performance was regarded as marvelous.

In England early in 1892, when F. J. Osmond, the English champion, rode a mile in 2:16, it was not deemed possible to put the record under two minutes. Now the system of record breaking has been improved, and while some remarkable one mile records may be made upon special straightaway courses this year, it is the track record that is interesting the majority of riders.

The Pope's Health.

Pope Leo XIII has authorized his physician, Dr. Lapponi, to communicate to the medical faculty such information about himself as may be of interest to them. Dr. Lapponi says that the Pope's health at the present time is perfect, as it has been for nearly the whole of his long life; his eyesight is so good that he can read without glasses; he looks fragile, but is stronger than might be imagined; he needs but little sleep, not more than three or four hours a night; his mind and memory are in the best condition; he is an indefatigable worker, attending to the details of his world wide duties every day of the year.

What Dr. Lapponi says about the Pope's habits of living is very interesting. He is exceedingly abstemious in his diet. For breakfast a cup of coffee with bread; for dinner, soup, a modicum of meat, and a vegetable, with a small glassful of Bordeaux wine; for supper, soup with bread, and the same quantity of wine. For a man 85 years old, or, indeed, for an intellectual man at any time of life, there could not be a better dietary.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

THE REPUBLICAN PLAN FOR MAKING TREASURY DEFICIENCY GOOD.

Ex-Speaker Reed Introduces a Bill Providing For a Popular Loan Subject to Recall At Any Time. Lafe Pence to Be a Monopolistic Vice-President.

Congressman Lafe Pence, of Colorado, who is one of the most prominent young members of the House, and who has been conspicuous during the present Congress as one of the leading lights among the Populists, has been elected vice-president of the Port Jervis, Monticello and New York Railroad, which runs from Port Jervis to Monticello, including a branch from Hugenot Junction to Summitville. It is understood that he will be also elected vice-president of several other roads belonging to the Haines system at the annual meeting of the directory to be held soon. Under this new arrangement Mr. Pence will make his home in the East, and he will probably be located at Kinderhook, N. Y., which is the home of the Haines brothers. Congressman Pence has been selected for the vice-presidency of these different railways through the influence mainly of Congressman Haines, of New York, who regards him as one of the brightest young men of his acquaintance.

Senator Don Cameron has long enjoyed the reputation of being the most successful log roller in Congress, and his abilities in that line are now being put to a severe test. When Mrs. James G. Blaine a few weeks ago made a ninety-nine years' lease of the property on which stood the historic old house in which her husband died, to a party of Chicago capitalists as a site for a new theater building, Mr. Cameron was much annoyed. The Blaine property adjoins his charming old residence on Madison place, and, although he had not opposed Mrs. Blaine in her desires to dispose of her property, he was none the less indignant. The Senator layed low as usual, however, and only lately his plan for preventing the erection of a theater has become known. An amendment has been offered to the sundry civil appropriation bill by Senator Gray, providing for the purchase of the site of the old Blaine house by the government, as it adjoins the vacant lot next to the Department of Justice building. The argument for the passage of the amendment is that the government needs another vacant lot for some future purpose, and that therefore it should be secured before the theater building is erected. The friends of the lessees of the Blaine property are making a strong fight against Senator Gray's amendment, which has been referred to the committee on public buildings and grounds, of which Senator Cameron's chum, Mr. Vest, is chairman, and his colleague, Mr. Quay, a member.

Ex-Speaker Reed's financial scheme was made public by the introduction of a bill in the House. In support of it Mr. Reed said it was possible that the science of statesmanship might be exhibited in the administration bill, but the art of statesmanship certainly was not. What was needed was a measure that would meet the crisis, if there was a crisis, in national affairs. Legislation to provide the necessary amount of revenue to meet expenses would have prevented the present difficulties. The cause of the trouble was not the existence of $500,000,000 of demand notes; they were a mere bagatelle as compared with the ability of the country to pay. The first cause of the trouble was the passage of the tariff bill, which has so far resulted in a deficiency of $107,000,000 in revenues. The next and other cause was the management of the treasury, by which the business department, in the absence of revenues, drew upon the reserve of the banking department, instead of borrowing money on its own account to meet the demands upon it. "The President in this exigency," said Mr. Reed, "has appealed to Congress, and we are face to face with the situation. We are willing to help our country, irrespective of party advantage, but it must be done in accordance with what we believe to be right, proper and honest." The trouble, Mr. Reed said, was due to the reissuance of greenbacks after being redeemed, together with a failure of receipts to meet expenditures. The remedy for the trouble was, in his opinion, to separate the two departments of the treasury, and give to the business department sufficient receipts to meet the expenditures. The proposition which he had to make was, that to meet the deficiency in receipts, the Secretary of the Treasury should be authorized to issue 3 per cent. certificates of indebtedness in sums of $50 or $100, and multiples thereof, leaving the gold in the banking department untouched for the redemption of the greenbacks. This would enable the people to determine whether or not they really wanted gold in exchange for greenbacks, and their possession in the treasury might be a guide to know what to do with them in the future. The surplus which Secretary Carlisle predicted, if it should come to exist, could be used to take up the certificates of indebtedness, which might be of two years' duration, or even less if desired. The advantage this plan presented over the present plan of procedure—popular rumor crediting the issue of $100,000,000 within a few days—was, said Mr. Reed, that these certificates would take the place of long-time gold bonds. Should the government desire to redeem them that would be just the time when they would go up, and a premium would have to be paid for them. The bill proposed by Mr. Reed contains the following: "To enable the secretary to pay the current expenses of the government, so long as the current revenues shall be deficient, he is authorized and required, from time to time, in his discretion, to issue, sell and dispose of, at not less than par, such an amount of certificates of indebtedness of the denomination of $25, $50, and $100, or any multiple thereof, as may be needed for that purpose, bearing not to exceed 3 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually, and redeemable at the pleasure of the government, in coin, after two years from their date, with like qualities, privileges and exemptions provided in the act approved Jan. 14, 1875. The secretary may, at his discretion, sell and dispose of the same for not less than an equal amount of lawful money of the United States, and at such postoffices as he may select, and the secretary shall use the proceeds thereof for the purpose provided for in this section, and for none other." ROGER LEWIS.

METROPOLITAN NOTES.

Interesting Facts and Opinions Chronicled by the Daily Press of New York.

Since the introduction of the use of anti-toxine in diphtheria and croup cases a marked decrease in the mortality of children suffering from the two diseases has been noticed by the board of health. From Dec. 15, 1894, to Jan. 12, 1895, the total number of cases reported was 933, with the number of deaths as 273, or 29 per cent.

From Jan. 12 to Jan. 26 640 cases were reported, of which 119 proved fatal. The death rate, however, was reduced to 21 per cent.

For the manufacture of anti-toxine guinea pigs are needed. Fanciers, who dealt in pigs, have supplied the market, but the supply is not equal to the demand.

Fame and fortune, the health authorities say, await the boy who will raise guinea pigs for use in the laboratory. Seventy-five cents is paid for a healthy pig two months old. A pair for breeding purposes cost $1.50.

The female litters four times a year, with four in a litter, but one of the number dies shortly after birth. It is almost impossible to get a guinea pig for use in the laboratory at present.

Fanciers have been compelled to send to other cities in order to meet the demand made upon them by the makers of anti-toxine.—N. Y. Sun.

Mr. George Gould is the only member of his family who has ever displayed any decided liking for the more cheerful side of life. Ever since his return from Europe he has been moving continually from one sport or entertainment to another. Recently he has been taking a party of society people through Canada in a private car, having just finished a season of stag and fox hunting. There is a well-grounded rumor abroad that he will not only be as prominent as ever in the yachting world next season, but that he is going into horse racing on a lavish scale. Neither of his brothers displays any particular interest in sports, but the head of the Gould family has grown to be a decided enthusiast. Long before his father's death he was a daily visitor at the New York Athletic club. He is something of an authority on boxing and on the finer points of track athletics. Toward the close of the elder Gould's life, however, his oldest son devoted himself almost exclusively to business. It was not until he purchased the Vigilant that Mr. George Gould developed to the fullest extent a love of sports.

Many women have visited Trinity cemetery, 155th street and Amsterdam avenue, in the past few days to see the marvelous "blanket of flowers," which was said to "cover the casket" of Mrs. Wm. Waldorf Astor, and which was to be "renewed every morning for a year" by Mr. Astor's order. Mrs. Astor was buried on Jan. 9, not in a vault, but in a grave, in the northwestern corner of the Astor plot. On the day of the funeral the mound of earth was covered with pine boughs. The evergreens have not been removed, and except at one corner, which has been uncovered by inquisitive visitors, the grass is covered with snow. The laborers in the cemetery have swept a path through the burial plot, and about the grave a path has been trodden by men and women. All this annoyance and disappointment is due to Joseph Fleischman, a florist. On the morning of the funeral he told the reporters that he had the contract to supply fresh flowers every day for a year for the grave. For this he was to receive $100 a day, he said, and in all he would receive $40,000 from Mr. Astor. On the day after the funeral Mr. Fleischman sent to the newspaper offices a typewritten story of the alleged contract given to him by Mr. Astor. He was, he said, to furnish 4,000 fresh lilies of the valley and 4,000 violets each day. He repeated this statement, and then, being confronted with the facts, admitted that he had invented the whole story.

LEBANON COUNTY ENGLISH.

The One Defect of a Pennsylvania Dutch Beauty Who Was an Heiress Also.

"The most beautiful girl I ever saw, either in face or form," said the bachelor doctor, "was over in the good old Pennsylvania Dutch county of Lebanon. I met her at a party, and fell in love with her even before I knew that she was worth $100,000 in her own right and before I had been introduced to her. The moment I saw her I was resolved to try and win her. I was dead gone. I couldn't rest until I was introduced.

"An embarrassing silence followed the introduction. I had expected a friend at the party, and hadn't seen him. I broke the embarrassing silence by asking my enslaver if she had noticed whether he was present. A flush deepened her cheeks. Her beautiful eyes grew brighter. Teeth of matchless white gleamed between her red lips as she opened them to reply. And this was what she said:

"I haven't saw him, yit. I guess he hasn't come already."

"That was good Lebanon county English, but somehow I didn't try to win the girl."

Those Irrepressibles.

It was at a large party. A gentleman had the misfortune to break a glass. Little Lena, who was standing near her mamma, raised herself on tiptoe and whispered, loud enough for all the company to hear:

"And one of the borrowed ones, too!"

Later in the evening the hostess gave one of her little daughters a nice apple.

"Now, give your mamma a kiss, there's a dear," said the child's uncle.

"I'm not allowed to when she's painted her face."

Little Paul was sent with a bunch of flowers to the manager's wife on her birthday, and waited in silence after he had been dismissed.

Lady—Well, my young man, what are you waiting for now?"

Paul—Mamma said I was not to ask for a piece of birthday cake, but wait till I got it.—Tagliche Rundschau.

Almost an Accident.

"Speaking of narrow escapes," observed Mr. Chugwater, reaching for his second cup of coffee, "did I tell you I was on a train the other day that came within three feet of being run into by another train going full speed?"

"For mercy's sake, no!" exclaimed Mrs. Chugwater. "How did it happen?"

"The train that came so near running into ours," he rejoined, buttering a biscuit, "was on the other track and going the other way."

It was several minutes before Mrs. Chugwater broke loose, but when she did she made up for lost time.—Chicago Tribune.

IN SEARCH OF A MOTHER

Miss Wright's Cruel Sepation from Her Parent.

Her Mother Disowned for Marrying a Music Teacher, and When Widowed, Was Forced To Part with the Infant Child on Account of Her Destitute Condition.

Jersey City, Feb. 13.—A western lawyer sent to Counselor Frank P. McDermott, of this city, a letter yesterday containing a curious story of a daughter who is anxious to find her mother. The young lady is Miss Jennie Wright, who is 18 years of age and resides in Green Falls, Mont., but her parents lived formerly in this state.

Miss Wright's story, told to her counsel, B. F. Turner, who communicated the facts to Mr. McDermott, is substantially as follows: Her mother was an only daughter of wealthy people and when quite young married her music teacher, in opposition to her parents wishes. After the marriage the couple removed from New Jersey to New York city, where three children were born to them. Shortly afterward the father died, leaving the widow without any means to support her young family.

The widow was too proud to appeal to her parents for assistance since they had disowned her after her marriage to the music teacher, and in her desperation she applied to the aunt of her dead husband for assistance and this aunt advised her to give the children to people who were able and willing to care for them.

Gave Up Her Children.

Seeing no alternative and broken with grief, suffering and privation, she reluctantly consented to part with her little ones. The youngest child, Jennie, then a mere baby, was wanted by a family providing they could adopt it without the mother learning the name, and the aunt readily consented and the child was handed over to them without the mother ever having seen the people to whom her baby was given. In some way the story of the widow's destitute condition reached her parents' ears, and at once they sent for her and the children.

Great was their sorrow when their daughter told them that she had been obliged to give baby Jennie away to strangers whom she did not know.

A vigorous search was made for the baby, but in vain. The family who had adopted Jennie learned from the aunt who made the transfer that they were being sought after, and they suddenly left New York city for the west, where they have resided ever since.

Jennie's foster parents have never revealed her mother's name. The young woman's first name is the one given to her by her mother but that of Wright belongs to her foster parents.

Miss Wright winds up her story by saying, "Nothing will please me so much as to hear from my mother."

EXILES WANT DAMAGES.

Cranston Denies the Dynamite Story Claiming It Was "Hatched."

Vancouver, B. C., Feb. 13.—Cranston, Mueller and Johnston, the three exiles from Hawaii, have entered suit against the captain of the steamer Warrimoo and the Canadian Australian Steamship company, for $50,000 each. They claim false arrest and imprisonment, that they were not given a trial, and that they were held as prisoners on the Warrimoo without any warrant whatever.

Cranston was seen by the United Press representative in reference to a statement contained in a Washington dispatch, in which he is charged with having designed to use dynamite. When asked about the matter, Cranston laughed and said there was no truth in it whatever. He said the story was hatched so that some excuse might be given for their unjustifiable treatment.

Did They Exceed Their Power?

Chicago, Feb. 13.—The argument in the Pullman quo warranto case was resumed yesterday in Judge Baker's private chamber. Attorney Runnells, representing the company, continued his arguments in support of the pleas filed in answer to the bill of the attorney general. Mr. Runnells spent most of the forenoon reading authorities and contended that the company had not exceeded its corporate powers.

This Fire a Mystery.

Mount Holly, N. J., Feb. 13.—The large winter hotel at Browns-Mills-in-the-Pines, owned by the Forest Springs Hotel company, was entirely destroyed by fire yesterday together with its contents. There was no one living in the hotel and there is no clue to the origin of the fire. As the place has no fire department, it was impossible to save the building. The loss is $150,000, insurance unknown.

La Gascogne's Captain Gets a Medal.

Paris, Feb. 13.—The directors of the General Transatlantic Steamship company have voted a gold medal to Captain Baudelon of the steamship La Gascogne, and have adopted resolutions expressing their felicitations on the skill, courage and sang-froid shown by him on the perilous voyage just ended.

"What Fools These Mortals Be."

Altoona, Pa., Feb. 13.—About 30 Hungarian miners employed by J. L. Mitchell & Co., near Bens Creek, gathered in one of their shanties yesterday and proceeded to get on the outside of several jugs of whiskey. The celebration wound up by John Cushua being shot through the heart and instantly killed by one of the party.

Robbed a Country Store.

Norwich, Conn., Feb. 13.—The country store of W. E. Manning, Bozrahville, was burglarized last night. The burglars entered by a back window. They carried away $18 in cash, two coats and about $25 worth of goods.

The Thermometer's Freak.

Denver, Feb. 13.—Early yesterday the thermometer registered 20 degrees below, the coldest in Denver's history. At noon the cold spell broke and the thermometer rose to 30 above.

THE END IS NEAR.

Brooklyn's Strike Almost Over—Strikers Waive All Demands.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 13.—The trolley strike in this city is practically over. President Lewis of the Brooklyn Heights Railroad company will decide to-day whether it should be carried on any longer or not when he gives his answer to a proposition that was submitted to him by Judge James Tighe and ex-Assemblyman James F. Graham.

The men appeared for D. A. 75 and offered a proposition to the effect that the men now on strike should be taken back to work. They were closeted with Mr. Lewis and the directors of the company for about two hours.

In the proposition the men ask for nothing more than that they be given a chance to go back to work and they waive all of the demands they made when they went on strike. They ask, however, that when a non-union man leaves the company his car will be given to the oldest man in the company's employ.

President Lewis promised Mr. Tighe and Mr. Graham that he would answer their proposition to-day. After Mr. Tighe and ex-Assemblyman Graham left Mr. Lewis' office the latter called the board of directors together for the regular monthly meeting. It is said that the proposition made by the men was talked about and that all of them seemed to be satisfied with it.

IN MEMORY OF LINCOLN.

His Natal Day Generally Observed in Speech Making.

New York, Feb. 13.—Yesterday was "Lincoln Day," observed in most cities with speeches from prominent men. The traits of character in Abraham Lincoln made him famous as a leader and master in the greatest crisis in our country's history. Lincoln had, while on this earth, sublime faith in the people. He walked with them, reasoned with them, he recognised the importance and power of an enlightened public sentiment and was guided by it. He, unlike many of the present day, invited rather than evaded examination and criticism.

Lincoln, as a statesman was a true democrat. He would not sell his party for so many pieces of silver. It would be useless to review the story of his life, for the world knows that by heart. It is the pride and possession of every American citizen, rich and poor, black and white, without distinction and without exception.

In his composition there was nothing of hatred, nothing of envy, nothing of jealously, nothing but a boundless charity and boundless love toward all. He lived a great life, he worked great deeds and at that supreme moment, he died a great death. If our noble hero could return to this world and examine the political situation of this country, what would he say? Echo answers what?

BRADY ON TRIAL FOR MURDER.

Miss Maloney Testified To Witnessing the Shooting of Perdue.

Norwich, Conn., Feb. 13.—The trial of Alexander Brady, charged with fatally shooting Frederick C. Perdue, a soldier from Fort Trumbull, on the night of May 13, 1894, at New London, was begun in this city yesterday. Drs. Hiram B. Thomson and Elisha Munson testified to the fatal nature of the wound in Perdue's left breast. William H. Burke, a New London policeman, testified that Brady charged Lizzie Maloney with the crime and asked that she be taken to the Winthrop hotel and locked up, as she was weak-minded and confinement in a cell would make her crazy.

Miss Maloney testified that she witnessed the shooting, that she was with Perdue when he was shot, and identified Brady as the man who shot him. Said she knew him well.

Miss Kate Ann Sullivan identified Brady who said to her on the night of the murder, as she approached: "Keep off, or you'll be shot."

AFTER TREASURER TAYLOR.

He Misappropriated over $367,000 of South Dakota's Money.

New York, Feb. 13.—The state of South Dakota is plaintiff in an action just begun in the supreme court of this state to recover a judgment for $250,000 against the sureties on the official bond of W. W. Taylor, the defaulting treasurer of South Dakota.

Taylor had been state treasurer for two years, and his term expired in January last. Prior to the qualifications of his successor, he disappeared, and an examination of his books revealed the alleged fact that he had misappropriated more than $367,000 of the state's money, which, as treasurer, he had received from sales of bonds and other state obligations. No trace has been found of him and it is the general impression that he has fled either to Central or South America.

N. & W. Railroad Embarrassed.

Philadelphia, Feb. 13.—Fred J. Kimball and Henry Fink, who were recently appointed receivers of the Norfolk & Western Railroad company were yesterday appointed ancillary receivers by Judge Dallas in the United States circuit court to take charge of the company's property in this district. The security was fixed at $40,000.

Seventeen Prisoners Escape.

Huntington, W. Va., Feb. 13.—Seventeen prisoners escaped from the Cattlesburg, Ky., jail last night by a tunnel that they had dug under the bastile. Two of them are charged with murder. Three were recaptured later. The surrounding country has been warned to look out for the others.

Give Time To Repent.

Fort Smith, Ark., Feb. 13.—In the United States court yesterday Bill Cook, the notorious outlaw, was found guilty on half a dozen counts and sentenced to fifty years in the New York state penitentiary at Albany. He took his sentence unflinchingly and will start for Albany to-day.

Wont Receive Catholics.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 13.—The czar caused an intimation to be given to the Armenian Catholics that he will not receive them. The Catholics who had started for St. Petersburg are therefore returning home.

Self Binding Inventor Lead.

Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 13.—John H. Gordon, the original inventor of the self-binding reaper, died in this city yesterday, aged 55 years.

DECIDES UPON A PLAN

Ways and Means Committee Will Help Carlisle.

No Gold To Be Used To Meet the Deficiency in Expenditures—The Time of Payment Kept Secret—Bimetalism Declared To Be the Policy of the Government.

Washington, Feb. 13.—The house committee on ways and means consumed one more of the ten days within which the treasury has an option to make the new bonds payable in gold, and make decided progress toward an agreement upon a plan to be reported to the house.

After being closeted for two hours with Secretary Carlisle, the committee talked over the situation, delegated the framing of an agreement to a sub-committee of three democrats and two republicans, and late in the afternoon learned that its sub-committee had dropped partisan differences and taken common ground.

The resolution reported by the quintet at the last meeting was one to authorize the secretary of the treasury to issue $62,000,000 in 3 per cent. bonds, payable in gold, with the proviso that none of the proceeds shall be used for current expenses, and the further provision, requested by Secretary Carlisle, repealing the law which requires the government to redeem national bank notes and requiring banks to redeem their notes in the first instances.

Carlisle's Administration.

Inquiry was made if there was a minority report and Mr. Reed said that there was not, although he believed a wiser plan would be to provide for increasing the revenues. Mr. Bynum (dem., Ind.) proposed his resolution as a substitute. Mr. Wheeler (dem., Ala.) offered a resolution reciting that Secretary Carlisle had admitted that the issue of gold bonds would compel all future issues to be made payable in gold, that bimetalism had been declared to be the policy of the government, that this would be an abandonment of bimetallism and therefore declaring that the committee considered it expedient to adopt the president's recommendations.

Mr. Bryan (dem., Neb.) offered another resolution recommending that the secretary of the treasury should pay all obligations of the government in either gold or silver, whichever was most convenient.

After a brief discussion the committee adjourned until this morning.

The Secretary Before the Committee.

Secretary Carlisle came before the committee shortly after 10 o'clock. He presented a type-written copy of the contract which had been called for. It was drawn in legal form, covered two type-written pages and bore the signatures of John G. Carlisle, secretary of the treasury; J. Pierpont Morgan, for J. S. Morgan, of London; August Belmont, for N. W. Rotschild, and was witnessed by Francis Lynde Stetson, of New York, formerly President Cleveland's law partner.

The principal features of the contract were made known in the president's message. Upon one point the secretary particularly enjoined the committee to maintain secrecy, and that was regarding the dates for making the payments for the bonds. He asked for secrecy, he said, at the request of the financiers who have agreed to take the bonds, and because they feared that bankers would corner the gold of the world against them at the time it would be needed if it was known and the methods by which it was to be obtained. Accordingly the committee adopted a resolution pledging its members not to reveal the terms of the document so far as it concerned the payments.

Many questions were asked the secretary, which he answered in order, giving the amounts of all kinds of money in the treasury and much other information not new.

P. T. Barnum Bought This Property.

New York, Feb. 13.—Helen B. Rennell, a granddaughter of the late Phineas T. Barnum, has brought a suit in the supreme court for a partition of a portion of the estate left by her grandfather. The property is located in various parts of Brooklyn, 1,562 feet along Irving avenue. It was purchased by Barnum in 1852, and has increased greatly in value. A portion of the estate was left to Helen B. Rennell, Caroline C. Thompson, Nancy B. Clark, Nancy Barnum and C. B. Seedley, the children of Mrs. Thompson and grandchildren of Barnum.

Demanded Their Share.

Pittsburg, Feb. 13.—The Banksville coal miners in the Saw Mill Run district, to the number of 600, are out on strike for an advance in the rate of mining coal to 79 cents per ton. The miners had heard of fancy prices being charged for coal during the cold weather and demanded their share of the advance, which was promptly refused by the company.

Wants a Greater Troy.

Troy, N. Y., Feb. 13.—The Citizens' association of this city has decided to present a bill to the legislature for the formation of a greater Troy. It is proposed to take in West Troy, Green Island, Lansingburgh, portions of North Greenbush, and Brunswick. This would give the greater Troy a population of over 100,000.

THE DAILY PRESS

ESTABLISHED MAY 10, 1887. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1895. TWO CENTS A COPY, $5 A YEAR.

TO HONOR WASHINGTON.

Plainfield Indians Have a Good Time and Arrange for a Bigger One.

A large number assembled in Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque wigwam last night to witness the beautiful ceremonies of adoption, as exemplified on two candidates by the degree team of the tribe. The work was most excellently and impressively performed in all its beautiful detail and as a visiting member of a neighbor tribe remarked, "Nothing could have made the work more impressive and beautiful—it was perfect in every detail Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque can congratulate herself in having the finest degree team in the State".

This is flattery indeed, coming as it did from an officer of another tribe. Yet the steadily increasing membership attests the truthfulness of the remarks.

Following the adoption several interesting speeches were made by members of the tribe and plans were discussed for an entertainment to be given in honor of the Father of his Country, which will follow the regular meeting on Wednesday evening, Feb. 20, to which palefaces will be invited.

At the conclusion of the council the Haymakers held an interesting and well attended meeting, several new propositions for membership being received and many plans discussed for the furtherance of the best interests of this band of merry-makers. A small but influential member of the Hayloft strongly advocated the introduction of the Rainmakers degree, which would follow the touching ceremonies of degree 101. The matter was taken under advisement by the members, and the loft adjourned.

JUST A LOVE STORY

is what most folks like to read, if it is original in plot, and felicitously told. And it is just that kind of a love story which Mrs. Alexander, the author of "The Wooing o' It", and other powerful novels whose names are in everybody's mouth, has written in

"SETTLED OUT OF COURT".

This tale is one of the masterpieces of a masterhand. It will appear in The Daily Press, beginning Saturday, Feb. 16, and will run for six days. Do not miss an instalment. You will read the story in The Daily Press or nowhere.

Wreck on the Central.

The westbound Mauch Chunk express which passed through this city at 5:08 last evening, manned by Engineer Joe Litz and Conductor Funct with his crew, broke down half a mile east of Asbury, both sidebars of the engine dropping down from their place. Engineer Litz was badly scalded. Fortunately no one else was hurt. The train was delayed about an hour, another engine being ordered from Phillipsburg to take the place of the one disabled.

Kicked on Late Hours.

As Cabman Dick Mead pulled up to the curb at the North Avenue station this morning to take a fare who had just stepped from the 12:38 midnight express, his horse began to kick, and did not finish until he had broken the shafts and bent the dashboard. Needless to say Mead did not accommodate the fare, but pulled the disabled vehicle across the avenue, and started on horseback across the brook to procure another pair of shafts.

Killed by an Engine.

Dennis Bradley, seventy years old, while clearing snow out of switches on the New Jersey Central Railroad, opposite the freight-house in Elizabeth yesterday, was struck by a freight engine and instantly killed. He had worked on the road twenty-five years.

Still Deeply Drifted.

Teamsters who have occasion to drive along Park avenue on the outskirts of the city are much troubled in passing one another for quite a distance, owing to the high snowbanks which encumber both sides of the thoroughfare beyond Randolph road. It is especially difficult in the darkness at night.

—Franklin Council, No. 41, J. O. U. A. M., expects to make arrangements at the meeting this evening to attend the parade of Juniors in Brooklyn, Washington's Birthday.

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. REMODELING THE BANK

Elegant New Home Planned for the First National.

GETTING DOWN TO STREET LEVEL

New Front to Be of Limestone, Light Brick and Terra Cotta, in Italian Renaissance Style — Upper Stories to Contain Fine Offices.

The improvement in the First National Bank Building, which has so long been talked of, and championed continually by The Daily Press, is at last to be accomplished, for now it has been definitely decided to make the long contemplated alterations.

At the latest meeting of the Board of Directors, Architect A. L. C. Marsh, of the firm of Marsh, Israels & Harder of New York city, submitted complete plans and estimates, prepared in accordance with the previous directions of the Board.

Chief of the alterations proposed are an entirely new front, and changes of the first and second story beam levels so as to bring the banking floor down to the street. Above the banking floor the building will have all the appointments of a first-class office building, and it will be one of the finest in town.

The style of the Italian renaissance will be followed in the design for the new front. The first story will be of limestone, and the upper portion of light brick and terra cotta, altogether making a decided novelty in the commercial architecture of Plainfield.

It is expected that within a few days contracts for the execution of the work will be signed.

STOPPED TRAINS FOR FUN.

Belcher Had a Good Time Playing with Jersey Central Engineers.

A young man who gave his name as Herbert S. Belcher and says he lives in Brockton, Mass., has been having fun with the engineers on the New Jersey Central Railroad for two or three days. He had made a practice of standing in the middle of the track between stations, jumping up and waving his arms in front of an approaching train, and then laughing at the engineer when the train was brought to a standstill.

Occasionally he varied this performance by lying prostrate on the track and compelling the train to stop. He has oscillated between the Bayonne end and Jersey City. Word was telephoned from the Bayonne police station yesterday to the Ocean avenue station in Jersey City. A policeman was sent out, and found him lying on the track near the Pamrapo station. He was taken into custody and will be held for examination by County Physician Converse as to his sanity.

TO SAVE THE PALISADES.

One Bill Protecting Them Ready for Gov. Werts.

Trenton, Feb. 13—The House today passed Senator Winton's bill intended to preserve the Hudson River Palisades, and it will now go the Governor. There is no doubt that he will approve it, since he drew it, after a personal inspection of the Palisades, in company with Senator Winton.

The act is to go into effect immediately, and the company will be restricted from blasting rock from the top of the cliff. Senator Winton says there will be no interference with the right of the quarrymen to break and sell the loose rock at the foot of the Palisades, of which there are millions of tons—enough to supply the demand for many years.

As the State owns the lands under water along shore it will be impossible to obtain grants to erect docks and wharves for the shipment of broken stone except in compliance with the conditions which the State will exact.

This bill will go far to preserve the Palisades, but Senator Winton has another pending, which provides for the appointment of a State Park Commission to acquire by condemnation and purchase lands needed for public parks or reservations. The Commissioners are also empowered afterward to dispose of such lands under restrictions and limitations. By this bill, if it is passed, the lands of the stone companies having grants along the Palisades may be acquired, and the work of destruction be ended.

Tough Digging.

The blasting done in the cellar of the Blatz house on Somerset street is said to be not as successful as supposed. Thos. McGann, who is superintending the digging, says it is money and labor lost, as the breaking up is below the frost and the top still has to be broken with sledges and wedges. It has taken two teams and from five to seven men about ten days to accomplish what could ordinarily have been done in one or one and a half days.

A CHARMING RECEPTION.

Plainfield Society Entertained by Mrs. Groendyke and Mrs. Foster.

The Mercer avenue residence of D. N. Groendyke afforded an aspect of cheerfulness between the hours of 4 and 7 yesterday afternoon, when a reception was given by Mrs. Groendyke and Mrs. John Gray Foster to a number of friends. The house had been beautifully trimmed with ferns and smilax, while the dining table was arranged with much taste in yellow and white. From the chandelier four yellow streamers covered with smilax descended to each corner of the dining table, and daffodils and freesia added to the fragrance and prettiness of the scene.

The donors were assisted in receiving by Mrs Denes M Van Vliet, and Mrs Scott Foster of New York, Mrs S J Hegeman of New Germantown, Mrs A W Haviland, Mrs F H Andrews, Mrs Van Nest Talmadge, Mrs James B Joy, Mrs William Stillman, and Mrs D C Ivins. At the table Mrs John M. Clark and Miss Bessie Day presided.

Among those present from out of town were the Misses Graham and Van Vliet of New York, and Miss Van Derbeek of New Germantown.

PLAINFIELD WINS.

Likewise Leads in the Race for the Journal Trophy.

Say, did you ever go fishing? If you enjoy the sport you should have been present at the Trade Temple alleys last evening and seen "Our Boys" throw out their lines, get their "hooks" into the lignum vitæ spheres and catch the pins almost as fast as the sunburned, perspiring automatons at the lower end of the alleys could put them up, while the crowd of onlookers stood around with "baited" breath, watching one after the other of the Plainfield bowlers (who only caught one crab all night) assist in piling up still another of their frequent "1600" games. No doubt the Plainfielders present would have enjoyed seeing, or rather hearing, our bowlers make an old time grand stand finish with vocal and instrumental accompaniment by Jack Petrie et als, but out of courtesy to the gentlemanly Cranford Country Club bowlers who put up a good, although a losing game, the voice of the rooters was low in the land, though they all joined in the hearty "three cheers for Cranford" proposed by Captain H. C. VanEmburgh with "tiger" aftermath, which followed the conclusion of the game.

But to particularize: the Plainfielders moored their boat to the alleys at 8:30, climbed into their fishing jackets and cleared decks for action, caught the first strike and kept gathering them into their net in one, two, three order, and loaded them into their dory to the tune of 1611 at the windup, while Cranford had only captured 1489. Yet the fact that "Ours" were victors by 122 pins does not by any means indicate that the game was devoid of interest, for there were brilliant plays on both sides.

The event of the evening was the ease with which Waters, who already as good as has the high individual average prize which is offered in the present tourney, wrought his friends up to the highest pitch of enthusiasm over his possibilities of his winning also high score (now held by Cooley, 215, of the Arthur Kulls), and let them all down again by breaking in the very last frame, when a strike or even a spare would have sent him above high-water mark. It was too bad, yet his 205 was the record score of the game last evening, in spite of the slip up. The 199 which Wilbur gathered in was rather pretty work also, if anyone should inquire about it. Last evening's game was to have been the last of the Journal Trophy series for the Plainfield boys, were it not for the postponed game with the E. B. C's of Elizabeth, the date of which is not yet announced. However our local favorites lead with 9 games won, 2 lost and one to play, and the trophy is practically theirs unless extraordinary hard luck should tie them for fist place, which is hardly within the range of probabilities.

FESTIVAL OF DAYS.

Pleasant Social Event in the Seventh-Day Baptist Church Parlors.

The church parlors of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church were well filled last evening with an appreciative crowd who came to attend the "Festival of Days" given by the Women's Sewing Society of that church.

The class rooms were turned into booths representing the days of the week. The first one, Monday, was under the able care of Mrs. Charles Dunham, who was assisted by Miss Grace VanSickle. Above the booth was the word "Monday" formed with clothespins, while those in charge sold soap, blueing, clothespins and other like articles.

The next booth contained a large Tuesday in beeswax, and at the counter Mrs. Hattie Stillman sold gingham aprons, flatirons and beeswax to the passersby.

A large Wednesday in letters made of spool labels attracted attention to the third booth, where under the charge of Mrs. F. A. Dunham and Mrs. Maxson the many notions needed on mending day were sold.

Thursday was represented by a sweeping-day booth under the charge of Mrs Van Syckle where sweeping caps, brooms, aprons and the like were for sale. Whisk brooms were artistically arranged above the booth to form the word Thursday.

The next one was the candy booth where delicious home-made candies were dispensed to the throng of generous customers who surrounded it the whole evening. Miss Bessie Titsworth assisted by Frank Hubbard was in charge of the sweets. The candy was all made by the young women of the church and every one pronounced it a success.

And last but not least was the restaurant prettily decorated in red with the waitresses in white caps and aprons. Here a bountiful dinner could be secured and largely was it patronized by the good people of the church. This successful department was under the control of the following: Miss Lena Tomlinson, Miss Mabel Maxson, Miss Grace Lewis, Mrs. Joseph Miller, Mrs. Robert Gorton, and Miss Ernestine Smith.

JINGLE BELLS.

One Young Man Lost His Hat, and They Say Some Lost Their Hearts.

Although the sleighing was far from the best, a happy party of the young people of this city met at the residence of Miss Bertha Thorn on Craig place, and there clambered into a large boxsleigh preparatory to a strawride. After a very pleasurable ride almost to Springfield, the sleigh was turned about and the homeward journey begun. On the way they stopped at a Scotch Plains hotel, and enjoyed a dance, after which refreshments were served.

The return to Plainfield was replete with amusing and exciting incidents which added much to the enjoyment of all. One young man lost his hat on East Front street, but recovered it on his return.

Among those who braved the cold to be present on the ride were: Miss Bertha Thorn, Miss Eleanor VanDeventer, Miss Mamie Steiner, Miss Edith Hurlbut, Miss Sadie Douglass, Robert Douglass, Mr. Steiner, Wilbur Cornwell, Mr. Finch. Two older people chaperoned the party.

Luckily He Escaped Injury, But His Carriage Was Wrecked.

This morning at 9:30, while Dr. Endicott was coming down Front street behind his bay colt, the latter became frightened just above Washington avenue by an approaching trolley car and bolted for the sidewalk. He soon brought up against a telegraph pole and clearing himself from the carriage started at a lively gait down Front street to Watchung avenue and then through North avenue where he was caught by John Morton, the iceman, who ran out from Blair's stable and at the risk of serious injury grabbed the frightened animal by the bridle and stopped his mad career. The horse was uninjured.

The carriage is almost a complete wreck, the shafts, wheels and axles being broken and bent. The Doctor and his driver fortunately escaped without injury.

THE SHOOTING CASE.

Plainfield Boys on Trial in Elizabeth.

JUDGE CODDINGTON'S ELOQUENT PLEA.

Case Given to the Jury at 11:30 Today, and No Verdict Reached at 3 p. m.

The trial of Peter Kane and James Welsh on the charge of manslaughter, which has attracted such widespread interest, began at Elizabeth yesterday morning before Judge McCormick, the court-room being packed to the doors with a crowd eager to listen to developments in the case.

Many witnesses were examined during the trial, among them Dr. Mravlag, who conducted the post mortem examination, Drs. Simpson and Hedges who attended Evans at the time of the shooting, ex-County Surveyor Quien, who had prepared diagrams of the locality in question, and many others.

Following the testimony Judge William A. Coddington made a most eloquent plea in behalf of the boys, during which the crowd that thronged the court-room was moved to tears, many of the jurors also being visibly affected. The Judge spoke feelingly of the extreme youth of the boys, of their previous good character, of the regard in which they were held by the entire neighborhood in which they lived, of the absence of any possible motive on their part for the crime alleged, and for the poor heart-broken mothers, both of whom are respectable, hardworking widows, and one of whom, the mother of fifteen-year-old James Welsh, lives in Ireland, leaving her boy here without a guardian or the refining influence of a home, to earn his own living as best he may. Judge Coddington appealed directly to the fathers among his auditors, and asked them how they would feel if one innocent though careless act should cast a lifelong stigma upon one of their dear ones around whom they had thrown the refining influence of home and education. Judge Coddington seemed fairly lifted out of himself by his earnest eloquence, and the courtroom was as still as death, everyone of the great concourse of people listening intently to catch his forceful and telling oratory. Seldom indeed has an audience been so fully overcome as was that which listened to the Judge, almost spell bound, for more than an hour and a half. As Judge Coddington sank exhausted into his seat the Plainfield delegation rose and surged forward to silently press his hand, so overcome were they that they could scarcely speak. The same scene was enacted in the lobby, as the Judge passed through after court had adjourned, many jurists who had been present pressing forward to congratulate him on his masterful plea.

This morning Prosecutor Marsh summed up for the State, and Judge McCormick charged the jury, which went out at 11:30.

Elizabeth, 3 p. m.—The jury is still out at this hour.

HEARTS.

There's a Club of Them, and They Play Every Other Week.

Miss Bessie Baldwin entertained the Heart Club, of which she is a member, at her home on Rockview avenue last evening.

After two hours of progressive hearts a generous collation was served and then dancing was the order of the evening.

The gay party broke up at 11. Those who attended were the Misses Percy Emmons, Lillian Glenn, Florence Serrell, Elsie Jobes, Mary Luckey, Mabelle Smith and Clara Long; Messrs. George P. Smith, Seymour G. Smith, Jr., Sydney R. Titsworth, Volney F. Green, B. O. Bowers, Jr., Clifford M. Crane, Herbert Schutt and Lester Baldwin.

RUDYARD KIPLING

never wrote, and never will write—and nobody else ever will write, because nobody can—a better story than "A Disturber of Traffic", a tale of seafaring life in the Eastern seas. But Mr. Kipling has written just as good a story in something the same vein, and yet with a freshness and originality all its own. It is called and is a tale of an Indian boy who grows up to his father's trade of piloting vessels through the strange rivers down to the seas where every drop of water has a romance to tell. You will read this story, first published, and fitly illustrated by the best newspaper artists, in The Daily Press Friday, Feb. 15, and Saturday, Feb. 16. It is brand-new, and copyrighted to Daily Press use.

—At the German Reformed Church, Feb. 28 and March 1, two interesting illustrated lectures will be given.

MINERVA'S BALL.

Pleasant Celebration of St. Valentine's Eve by the Rathbone Sisters.

The first annual ball of Minerva Temple, No. 4, Rathbone Sisters, was held in Red Men's Hall, West Front street, last evening. The attendance of members and friends was large, and the manner in which the women conducted the affair was highly creditable to them. At 9:30 the grand march was started, led by Mrs. I. H. Boehm and George Houseman, followed by 25 couple.

At its conclusion the programme of the evening was enjoyed, while Guttman's orchestra discoursed excellent music.

During the intermission all adjourned to the banquet hall, where a sumptuous supper was served.

The merry party then returned to the dancing hall and danced to an early hour.

The success attained at this first dance is chiefly due to the following committee: Mrs I H Boehm, Mrs B Thatcher, Mrs B Moore, Mrs D Pope, Mrs W Lyons, Mrs R Mattis, Mrs Stevens and Mrs Blimm.

As floor manager Samuel Robinson was a success and to him much credit is due for the able way in which he arranged the sets.

HYMENEAL.

Boone—Thompson.

The marriage of Miss Clara Louise Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Thompson of Central avenue, to William Arthur Boone, son of Dr. W. C. Boone of West Seventh street, will take place this evening at 7, at the home of the bride. The best man will be Alexander Coe Thompson, brother of the bride. There will be no bridemaid. Rev. Father Boone of Baltimore, assisted by Rev. Father Smyth of this city, will perform the ceremony. Only the immediate families of the bride and groom will be present, as the wedding is to be a modest home affair. Mr. and Mrs. Boone will reside in Brooklyn.

And It Was Zero, Too.

With chattering molars and fingers and toes tingling with a sensation caused by exposure to the frigid blasts of this northern clime, A. E. Lea, a native of Porto Rico in the West Indies, experienced his first sleighride over the immaculate white while a guest a few days ago of A. E. Stover of Ninth street and G. W. Squires of the borough. Coming from the land of continuous sunshine and flowers to an atmosphere where even the most acclimated inhabitant was forced to seek the warmth of glowing fires, he was greeted with a feeling no doubt that made him wish for his personal comfort, that he was back in the land of bananas. Mr. Lea is now engaged in the same office in New York with Messrs. Stover and Squires. They will sing to him that "Sunshine Will Come Again", with apologies to Charles Gardner.

Photographed the Scene.

G. Thorn, the photgrapher, was in Elizabeth yesterday, summoned there to give evidence in the action against Peter Kane, one of the boys charged with firing the shot by which Monaco Evans was killed. Mr. Thorn made the photographs of the ground on which the fatality occurred, and was called to testify in that particular.

Cards, Dancing, and Supper.

A social gathering was enjoyed at the home of Miss Bertha Wheeler of Mountain avenue last evening. After cards and dancing were enjoyed, the young people were invited to the dining room where a hearty collation was served.

Among those to enjoy Miss Wheeler's hospitality were Miss Lissa Livezy, Miss Reba Tinsman, Arthur W. Vail, R. Frank Vail and Carl D. Pfender.

GOV. M'KINLEY TALKS

Admits There Is a Crisis Needing Consideration.

Says the Danger of the Country Is Indifferentism—Business To Revive by Keeping the Wheels of Industry Moving—Capital Scorns Idleness But Loves Work.

Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 14.—Gov. McKinley in his speech at the banquet of the chamber of commerce, last night said in part:

These are times when the wisest words are wanted and the careless should be unspoken. I wish more than ever in my life for the power to speak the words which, at a crisis like the present are so much needed. The people throughout the country are at this moment giving more sober consideration to the duties of citizenship than probably at any previous period. They are studying conditions in national, state and city governments. They are reflecting upon their responsibilities and power in relation to these conditions, having uppermost in mind the possibility to improve them.

"What can we do to better them?" is the inquiry engaging every thoughtful mind and which comes almost unbidden from every tongue.

The People's Government.

Government of the people is the people's business, and if they neglect it, government and people both suffer. The great danger of the country is indifferentism. What we need is a revival of the true spirit of popular government, the true American spirit where all—not the few—participate actively in government.

The business life of the country is so closely connected with its political life that the one is much influenced by the other. Good politics is good business. Mere partisanship no longer controls the citizen and country.

The Wheel of Industry.

The business men of the country have devolving upon them a grave responsibility. It is no easy task to keep the mighty wheels of industry in operation. Idle wheels mean idle men and idle capital. Both draw upon their accumulations, and each is unprofitable when the other is unemployed. Think of the vast capital invested in manufactures in this country, and what skill and watchfulness are required to keep it at work.

Our home markets have consumed heretofore five times as much of our manufactured products as Great Britain exported of hers to all the markets of the world. Our products are carried to our own people and distributed among them with greater facility and at cheaper rates, taking into account distance, than products are carried in any other country in the world.

How are we to get back what we have lost? How is the vast capital now invested in manufactures to be preserved and made profitable? Only by keeping it busy and constantly at work. Capital scorns idleness; it loves work if for no other reason than that it loves gain. Capital in manufactories which are shut down is not like money on deposit subject to call, or in the strong box hoarded away, which, while it earns nothing, keeps the principal sum intact and unimpaired. The closed mill depreciates the value of machinery and buildings and land and everything connected with it, and it is ever wearing away the capital invested in it. This is followed by impoverishment to the owners, injury to the community in which it is located, and destitution to those who have been employed.

A Good Diagnosis.

Every business man would, therefore, rather run his factory than close it, because he wants his investment to earn him something. When closed, his capital, so far as any immediate profit is to come, is stopped. It is with him a question whether he can run with as little loss as he can stop. If he can, he will always run. If he cannot, he is bound to stop. He cannot run at all if there is no demand for his product. Production requires consumption. Markets are inseparable from manufactures. The manufacturer must have a market; he wants the best market if he can get it, and he has come to learn where it is and how to get it. He knows, as he never knew before, how he lost it.

A Serious Consideration.

The general situation of the country demands of the business men, as well as the masses of the people, the most serious consideration. We must have less partisanship of a certain kind, more business, and a better national spirit. We need an aggressive partisanship for country. There are some things upon which we are all agreed. We must have though, money to run the government. The outflow of gold will not disturb us if the inflow of gold is large enough. The outgo is not serious if the income exceeds it. False theories should not be permitted to stand in the way of cold facts.

No Enquiries Needed.

We cannot afford to quarrel over the past; nor is it profitable to indulge in inquiries as to where the responsibility of the condition rests. It is enough for us to know it is here and upon us. Whatever differences we may have had, we must all agree now that the situation is one that requires the highest sagacity in statemanship and the broadest patriotism in citizenship.

The way to stop loans is to stop deficiencies. The reserve is sure to be drained if you cut off the supply. I agree with the president that a "predicament" confronts us, and I am sure there is wisdom and patriotism ample in the country to relieve ourselves from that "predicament" or any other and to place us once more at the head of the nations of the world in credit, production and prosperity. We await the prosperity that has been long prophesied.

25,000 Miners Idle.

Palermo, Feb. 14.—The discontent and distress in Sicily have been increased by the closing of many sulphur mines. More than 25,000 miners have been thrown out of work. Very few have money to support them for a month, as their wages have long been barely sufficient for their daily needs

WANT THE LAW REPEALED.

Woman Suffrage Bill Agitated by the Ladies of Hartford.

Hartford, Conn., Feb. 14.—There was an animated public meeting of the committee on woman suffrage in hall of the house yesterday. The bills considered were those conferring the right of municipal and presidential suffrage on women, and one repealing the law of 1893, coferring on women the right to vote at school meetings.

Addresses in favor of the extension of the suffrage to women, were made by Mrs. Yates, of Maine; Mrs. Bacon and Mrs. Forbes, of Hartford; Miss Fenner, of New London; Miss Babcock, of Stonington; J. L. Cowles, of Farmington, and John H. Brocklesby, superintendent of schools of this city. Representative Hall, of Waterbury, who introduced it, favored the repeal of the law of 1893.

ANXIETY FOR ST. AUGUSTINE.

The Steamer Nine Days Overdue with Eighteen Men on Board.

New York, Feb. 14.—The steamer City of St. Augustine, from Jacksonville, Fla., lumber laden, for New York, is now nine days overdue. She has not been heard from since she was seen by the schooner Ida Lawrece on Feb. 5, off the coast of North Carolina.

The captain of the St. Augustine is J. H. Gaskill and the chief engineer, Peter Murphy. Her crew numbers eighteen men including officers.

Mr. Warren Ray, her agent in this city, thinks the ship is being delayed by severe storms and that eventually she will come into port, as she is completely seaworthy, a new vessel and manned by thoroughly competent officers.

Sold Oleomargarine.

Chicago, Feb. 14.—Internal revenue officers have discovered an extensive scheme among west side grocerymen and dairy storekeepers to defraud customers by selling oleomargarine for butter. Two arrests have been made and forty-seven more complaints will be presented to the next federal grand jury. Ample evidence, it is said, has been obtained by Officer Frank E. Kennedy, sent from Washington to secure the indictment of every storekeeper for selling over the ten pound limit without a wholesale license and for selling in unstamped packages.

The Vice-President Kicked Her.

Chicago, Feb. 14.—Thomas H. Wyckes, vice-president of the Pullman Palace Car company made no answer to the order of Judge Tuthill when the divorce suit of his wife was called and a default was entered in the case. The defendant had been ordered to plead, answer, or demur within five days. Mrs. Wyckes charged that her husband kicked her, threw a glass of water at her, struck her in the face and threw food at her besides refusing to speak to her and depriving her of the comforts suitable for her social position.

Held for the Grand Jury.

Boston, Feb. 14.—Walter A. Scott the young man who was yesterday arrested charged with the murder of Coachman James Slamin at the Back Bay, on Dec. 5, was held to await the action of the March grand jury. Robert J. West, who was arrested three weeks ago for the alleged murder of Slamin, is in jail awaiting the action of the grand jury. This is the case where two bag snatchers were intercepted by Slamin, who they shot and killed.

Moore reported at the annual meeting of the New York Biscuit company held here, that at the close of the fiscal year of 1894 the assets amounted to $11,821,043; the earnings, after paying interest and other charges were $545,390, or 6-10 per cent. on the capital stock of $9,000,000.

Office of Citizens' Organized Aid Association, 101 North Avenue.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—Just at the time when the Winter is at its worst, when all the defense that warm clothing, warm houses and good food can yield is most needed: When in-door work is scarce and out-door work is impossible: When every charity should and must be doing its utmost: Just now, that is to say, the funds of this association are practically exhausted. True, all bills are paid to February 1st: True, again, we do not use or need a large sum of money—only about $500 annually—since the association aims rather to help its beneficiaries to become self supporting than to give alms: But what we do need, that we must have and have at once. And if the community believes our work to be in itself wise and useful, and wisely and usefully conducted, then the least the community can do is to support that work with sympathy and money, especially money.

We solicit subscriptions for annual memberships at $2 00, or for life-memberships at $50 00: We earnestly hope for forty or fifty annual "sustaining" members at $10 00 each, since we should then have a solid basis for regular business. But we will gladly receipt for any sum from $1 00 upward, for the need grows greater as the mercury goes lower.

H. P. REYNOLDS, Treasurer.

THE WAR IN THE EAST

40,000 Chinese Troops in a Perilous Position.

The Japanese Bombard Tung-Chow. They Land 25,000 Men in Yung Cheng Bay—In Full Possession of Wei-Hai-Wei—Admiral Ting To Be Received with the Honors of War.

Vancouver, B. C., Feb. 14.—The following Oriental advices have been received per steamer Empress of China, under date of Tokio, Feb. 1:

On the 17th of January a part of the Chinese forces in Manchuria made a second attempt to recover Hai Cheng. The strategical position of the Chinese in Shin Kong now is most perilous. Their line of defense and of direct communication with their chief base of supplies at New Chwang having been cut off by the Japanese, all their troops, some 40,000, in the districts southward of Hai Cheng have to choose between one of two ways of getting back to China proper, namely, either by driving the Japanese out of Hai Cheng and thus recovering command of the direct route to the coast or by taking the highway from Moukden to Pekin.

Japs Have Advantage.

The Japanese, however, moving along the coast from Hai Cheng can strike the Moukden-Pekin road by a march of seventy-five miles whereas the Chinese retreating from Moukden must march 135 miles to reach the same point. When Hai Cheng first fell into Japanese possession, Gen. Sung commander-in-chief in Manchuria, appreciating the gravity of the situation made immediate attempt to recover the town. Moving northward at the head of 10,000 men, he took up a strong position.

Anxiety Felt.

A good deal of anxiety was felt in regard to the landing of the third Japanese expeditionary force, now in possession of Wei-Hai-Wei. In the case of Port Arthur the great risks generally attendant upon planting an invading force on an enemy's territory were lessened by latitude of choice as to place. The troops were carried to a point more than 100 miles from their final objective, and it was known beforehand that no opposition had been organized by the Chinese but the third expeditionary force had to land somewhere on the shores of a province shore where large numbers of troops were said to be massed, where ample precautions against surprise were believed to have been taken, and where the topographical conditions necessitated the choice of a place within at least forty or fifty miles of the point to be attacked.

Hence, there was every reason to anticipate vigorous resistance. In view of these circumstances, the Japanese adopted a simple device. They sent three powerful cruisers to bombard the important fortified coast town, Tung Chow, forty miles westward of Che-Foo and more than 100 miles distant from the landing place really in view. The cruisers performed the task in a most thorough manner on the 18th and 19th of January, with the result that news of the Japanese landing at Tung Chow was widely circulated by telegraph.

Chinese Unprepared.

In effect the ruse was quite unnecessary. The Chinese, as usual, were totally unprepared. For more than three weeks they had known that a Japanese expedition was about to visit Shan Tung, and they had known also with as much certainty as can attend such knowledge, that the place of debarkation would be Yung Cheng bay, 27 miles east of Wei-Hai-Wei. Yet the sum total of their preparation at the threatened point was an earth work mounting four guns and manned by 300 soldiers. Just before dawn on the 20th the Japanese flying squadron steamed into Yung Cheng bay. Snow falling thickly, obscured the view from sea and shore alike.

They Ran Away.

The little band of Chinese artillery, emboldened by ignorance of the enemy's strength, opened fire. They made more pits and the veil of snow lifting for an instant, a full perception of their peril came to them simultaneously with a shrapnel shell that killed four of their number. They fled at once, and the business of landing the expeditionary army began and was continued without hitch or hindrance. Transports arrived in three batches on consecutive days carrying a total combative force of about 25,000 of all arms. Every Chinaman in the vicinity of the landing place ran away when the facts of the situation dawned upon them.

Admiral Ting, commander-in-chief of the Chinese fleet at Wei-Hai-Wei has surrendered. Admiral Ito granted him the desired conditions and the surrender is now being effected. When the Chinese land they will be received with the honors of war.

Li Hung Chang and Prince Kung or Sir Robert Hart will be shortly appointed high commissioners and envoys plenipotentiary to arrange a treaty of peace with Japan. This step will be taken in accordance with the advice of the foreign ministers in Pekin.

They Protest to the Government.

St. Johns, N. F., Feb. 14.—The leaders of the opposition in the legislature have made a formal protest to the governor against the determination of the government to hold bye-elections while the seal fishery is in progress. They claim that holding the elections at that time would deprive thousands of voters of an opportunity of exercising the right of franchise.

Berlin, Feb. 14.—Dr. Schweninger went to Friedricharuh yesterday to attend Prince Bismarck, who is suffering from a cold. The prince had a chill four days ago and has been indisposed ever since, but there is nothing in his condition to excite alarm.

A Story of Lord Nelson.

Feb. 14 is the anniversary of one of England's famous naval battles where Nelson first displayed heroism—Cape St. Vincent, 1797. Sir John Jervis' fleet of 15 sail lay at the cape when Nelson joined him from Gibraltar, bringing news of a Spanish fleet of 27 sail under Admiral De Cordova hovering near. The Spaniards were sailing in two divisions, but on sighting the English hasted to unite. Sir John boldly drove his fleet into the opening, compelling the Spanish rear division to retreat. When the English had passed, however, the Spaniards bore up to recover ground, but Nelson, disobeying the admiral's orders to keep on, turned with the Captain and attacked the whole rear line vessel by vessel. He carried the Captain through, but with her wheel shot away, foretop mast overboard, rigging torn and ammunition used up. There was nothing to do but board the nearest antagonist, the San Nicholas. Nelson led the boarders, and while fighting on the decks and in the cabins of the San Nicholas the party was opened upon with pistols and muskets from the San Josef alongside. Calling men from the Captain to hold the prize, he leaped to the deck of the San Josef, followed by a crew of tried followers from his old ship Agamemnon. The San Josef yielded, giving Nelson two prizes out of five gathered in in five hours' hard fighting. The English lost 400 and won. The Spaniards lost 1,000 and ran away.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

A Rehearsal For Waterloo.

Feb. 14, 1814, Napoleon fought the allies at Vauchamps, covering Paris. The day was marked by one of those strange prophetic episodes so common in the life of the man of destiny. The chief actors in it were Grouchy and Blucher, loser and victor in the side game which decided Waterloo. Blucher was beaten at Vauchamps, and Napoleon sent Grouchy, with 3,000 horse, to sweep around to his rear and block the road of retreat. At sundown Grouchy's line of sabers stretched across the road where it ascended a slight eminence, completely hemming in the retreating columns. Within a few days Blucher had lost 15,000 men and 27 cannon in hopeless battles. In despair he rode along the French front, hoping that a shot from Grouchy's carbineers would spare him the disgrace of surrendering. Aroused at last, he placed the few remaining cannon at the head of a column and ordered it to march in close mass upon the French cavalry. Grouchy had no artillery, and after waiting for the enemy to expend his best shots charged up to the muzzles of the guns. It was a useless sacrifice. The horsemen recoiled, and Blucher marched steadily on with his main column, sacrificing, however, the detachments on the flanks. Grouchy, in desperation, rode fearlessly into the enemy's ranks, sabering the Germans right and left. Blucher got through, effected a junction with reserves, and reaching Paris compelled Napoleon to yield the empire. Had either of the great marshals been killed, what of the event which turned the scale at Waterloo?

—Five cents to keep clean, 8 cents to feed baby, and 75 cents to get a non-leaking hot-water bottle for the grip patient, is only a sample of how far a $ goes at Reynolds's Pharmacy. These are only three of his bargains. There are others.

—Frank L. C. Martin, the popular bicycle dealer, is moving into more commodious quarters, two doors nearer North avenue than his old store. His new home promises to be one of the best equipped bicycle stores in the vicinity, and will be a credit to Mr. Martin and a pride to the wheelmen of Plainfield.

—No business of importance was transacted at the adjourned regular meeting of the Gazelle Engine Company in their rooms on West Second street last night. The duties of recording the minutes devolved upon Assistant James L. Love, owing to the illness of Secretary David S. Dunavan. Action upon most matters was deferred till the next meeting March 6.

The experience of Geo. A. Apgar, of German Valley, N. J., is well worth remembering. He was troubled with chronic diarrhoea and doctored for five months and was treated by four different doctors without benefit. He then began using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, of which one small bottle effected a complete cure. It is for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. The explosion shook the buildings within a radius of half a mile.

The bomb throwing is ascribed to the strikers.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

A False Diagnosis.

La grippe is confounded by many persons with a severe attack of catarrh, which in some respects resembles the former. These individuals suffer severely with pain about the forehead, eyes and ears, with soreness in throat and stoppage of the nasal passages and in fact, are incapacitated for work of any kind for days at a time. These are catarrhal sufferers. Ely's Cream Balm has been used with the best results in such cases. The remedy will give instant relief.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, Jr.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R. VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,

Plainfield, N. J.

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

FORMAL OPENING OF OUR

Grocery Department!

MONDAY, FEB. 11.

A few plain remarks in connection with this new departure we think is opportune.

A few months ago I rented and fitted up at a heavy expense my present elegant and spacious stores, with the intention of giving Plainfield a department store second to none in the State.

As I have progressed from one improvement to another, I find that if I fulfill my plan, I must, of necessity, add a first class Grocery Department, in order to compete with New York and Brooklyn department stores, as many of my patrons are buying these goods there, and desire me to furnish them with their Groceries together with their Dry Goods, Housefurnishings, etc.

I am very much surprised as I have talked to people in regard to this movements, to find that there is such a large proportion of this trade going to New York department stores, and I shall make a strong effort to induce it to remain at home—where it belongs.

I shall do all I can to counteract the too prevalent idea abroad that Plainfield is an expensive place to live in on account of the high prices on articles of food, as real estate agents often say they are obliged to meet this objection when trying to sell or rent houses to New York and Brooklyn people.

We shall, therefore, sell our goods, which will always be of the best quality to be had, at what may be known as cut prices.

THE COTILLION CLUB.

Third of the Season's Series, and a Lenten Rest.

The home of the Misses Randolph at East Front street and Farragut avenue was last night the scene of a joyous gathering, the occasion being the third of the series of dances given by the Cotillion Club, composed of young society people of the town.

That these events are purely informal adds much to the pleasure of the members and guests in attendance.

The floors of the rooms had been crashed, and as this was the last meeting of the club before Lent, everyone seemed intent on enjoying as pleasant a time as possible.

At 10:30 a dainty lunch was served under the direction of the club, and the cotillion followed. The music was furnished by Elliot of New York.

In addition to the members of the club, a list of which has already appeared in these columns, the following guests were present from out of town: Messrs. Cox and Lockwood of New York, Miss Evans of Westfield, and Miss Vanderbilt of Montclair.

The last of this series of cotillions will take place at the resumption of the social season after Easter.

JAPANESE ARE NEAR CHE-FOO.

In Music Hall Next Monday.

A play full of romance, of love, of poetry, of music, of sweetness and light, with but few dark patches and no tragedies; a dramatic tale of life in Ireland about 80 years ago, but with no politics, no hints of rebellion in it; a story of well sustained interest to the close, refreshing, pleasing and picturesque, such is Augustus Pitou's and George H. Jessup's new comedy-drama, "The Irish Artist", to be given in Music Hall next Monday night by a competent company headed by Chauncey Olcott, the popular singing Irish comedian.

The authors have completely discarded nearly all of the Irish conventional types, and have chosen for their leading character an individual, a native genius, clean and manly, with talent which only needed better opportunity than that afforded him in the land of his birth to develop into a man of prominence, of refined tastes, musical and an artist; a man to whom little children would unhesitatingly give their trust, a man with whom most young women, willing to become wives, would fall in love. In short, a narrative of love in most picturesque setting seemed to be their controlling motive. They succeeded in their aim, and have made a positive hit.

"She Couldn't Marry Three."

It is an actual fact that an audience has been heard to laugh half a mile from the theatre during the production of "She Couldn't Marry Three."

No more exciting and thrilling sensational effects ever used than in the production of "She Couldn't Marry Three."

A complete set of calcium lights give an added charm to the beautiful scenery in "She Couldn't Marry Three."

For Temperance Legislation.

As a result of the persistent efforts of Rev. W. E. Honeyman, who is engineering the local-option legislation as the chosen representative of the Presbyterian Synod and Anti-Liquor League of the State, Senator Bradley has sent out printed notices to the liquor-dealers of the State that a hearing will be given Feb. 19 before the committee on boroughs on Senate bills 28, 48 and 49, which take the licensing of inns and taverns in boroughs out of the control of the courts and places it in the governing bodies. All liquor-dealers will be heard patiently at that time. Pastors and attendants on churches, temperance people, and the order-loving people who believe in local self-government are invited to be present at the same time in advocacy of bills 48 and 49. A large gathering of temperance people is expected on that day. Mr. Honeyman was in Trenton yesterday in the interest of the measure.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

They Adopt a Memorial to the Common Council.

At a meeting of member of the Society of Friends, held on the 12th inst. in the old meeting house, Watchung avenue, the following memorial was unanimously adopted:

To the Honorable Common Council of the City of Plainfield.

Your memorialists, the Philanthropic Committee of the Plainfield Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, hereby respectfully and earnestly ask that, in the exercise of the option legally vested in your honorable body, you will grant no licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors for drinking purposes, and that you will make adequate provision for the repression of the traffic in intoxicating beverages.

We furthermore respectfully represent that alcoholic intoxicants are to those in health, both needless and injurious, and that the liquor saloon fosters poverty, vice and crime, and is a peril to the home, the community and the State.

THAWING OUT FROZEN MEAT.

A Dark Room Treatment Before Leaving the Cold Storage House.

According to the process invented by Messrs. Nelson Bros. for thawing frozen meat in such a way as to put it on the market in a sound condition and avoid the many objections to which the sale of the meat while still in a frozen state was open, the chamber of the apparatus is provided with double doors, one of which is extremely thick, so as to shut out, as far as possible, all external atmosphere. The chamber has no windows, but is supplied with electric light.

On entering one sees only some 30 quarters of beef hanging in rows on hooks over a slightly raised open platform, with a canvas curtain at the back. Under this platform, however, there is a series of steam pipes, while behind the curtain there is a series of pipes filled with compressed ammonia, similar to those used in connection with the ordinary freezing processes. The steam pipes under the meat cause a current of warm air to ascend all around it, and as soon as this current reaches the top of this chamber it is drawn to the freezing pipes behind the curtain, by which all the moisture is frozen out of it, on to the pipes themselves. It accumulates there in the form of snow some three-quarters of an inch in thickness.

The snow has to be scraped off the pipes from time to time, and it is stated that the accumulation during five days, in the thawing of 30 quarters of beef, has resulted in no fewer than 168 pounds of water. During that same period the meat has lost only 1 per cent in weight. The purpose of the canvas curtain is to divide the ascending warm current from the descending cold current, and it is claimed that the effect of this incessant passing of the air first over the steam pipes and then over the freezing pipes is eventually to free it from all moisture. When the meat is first hung, the temperature of the room is almost at freezing point, but on the fifth day the temperature of the chamber has been raised to that of the air outside. By this time the frost has all been thawed out of the meat, which is then in a condition to be sent to market.—London Invention.

A BOY'S VALENTINE.

I might begin, "The rose is red"
(Though that is not so very new),
Or this the boys all think is good,
"If you love me as I love you."

But, seems to me, a valentine
Is nicer when you do not say
The same old things that every one
Keeps saying in the same old way.

And I asked Jane the other night
What grown up people write about.
She would not answer me at first,
But laughed till I began to pout.
That stopped her, for she saw I meant
The question (and she will not tease).
"Why, love," she said, "and shining eyes,
A kiss, soft hair—just what they please."
It can't be hard if that is all,
So I'll begin by saying this:

"To my dear lady beautiful
I send a valentine and kiss,
The valentine because she has
The loveliest hair and gentlest eyes,
The kiss because I love her more
Than any one beneath the skies,
Because she is the kindest, best,
The sweetest lady ever known.
And every year I'll say the same,
The very same, to her alone!"

There! Now it's finished. Who will do?
I've thought of one and then another.
Who is there like it? Why, of course,
I'll send it right away to mother.

MISS SALLY.

A VALENTINE STORY BY EDITH SESSIONS TUPPER.

[Copyright, 1895, by American Press Association.]

"Miss Sally, here's your mail."

Miss Sally looked over her spectacles at her neighbor's little daughter who had brought her letters, smiled kindly, thanked the child, and rising went to the pantry and brought out one of her crisp caraway seed cookies as a reward of merit.

The little girl seized it with eager hands, and after taking an enormous bite looked solemnly at Miss Sally and went away.

Miss Sally settled herself in her high backed, old fashioned rocker to look over and enjoy her mail, for her letters were few and far between, and when three were handed to her at once they signified an event in her humdrum, monotonous existence.

Miss Sally was poor and old and plain. She lived alone in a little weather beaten cottage on a quiet street in a quiet country town. The cottage was stained by the storms of many years, but over its humble porch trumpet flowers flaunted their gorgeous blossoms, and the Virginia creeper wantoned in luxurious profusion. In the narrow windows geraniums, fuchsias, pinks and wax plants stood in brightly polished tin cans and bits of broken crockery. Everything within the house was scrupulously neat and tidy. Miss Sally's sewing machine glittered and shone like some petted steam engine. It was almost human to the lonely old maid. She earned her bread and butter by it. It was her sole companion. She loved its whir and clatter. She talked and visited with it. She anointed it with oil and polished it with chamois skin until she could almost see her kind old face reflected in its shining surface.

Miss Sally had not always been poor and old and plain. There had been a day when she was young and pretty, the favored belle of the little village, the daughter of well to do parents. But they long since had lain down to their last sleep, leaving no heritage to their child. With the years had flown Miss Sally's beauty and sprightly ways. She was now only an old maid seamstress, living alone with her flowers and her sewing machine.

But Miss Sally's heart was all right. She was not an imbittered busybody, acid, garrulous and envious. Wherever sickness crept with dreaded tread went Miss Sally with soothing hands, low voice and a rare knowledge of roots and herbs. Were "watchers" needed to sit through the awful night by the side of a sheeted, frozen form, Miss Sally was never wanting. When the annual donation party came off for the "elder" and his family, which began at noontide and extended to the midnight watches, Miss Sally stood in the front of the battle and baked, cooked and washed dishes until she was ready to drop. If there was any disagreeable or exacting neighborhood duty to be performed, Miss Sally was never found shirking.

Every small country place has a Miss Sally, a self constituted, self ordained sister of mercy, to whom with one accord all turn in times of trouble and extra cares.

"I don't know nothin how I'd manage to live," said her next door neighbor, Mrs. Ezra Hobart, "ef 'twan't fur Miss Sally. Ef my yeast don't rise, ef the hens don't lay or ef the young uns git to squallin, I jest put on my bunnit an run over there, an she knows jest what to do an allus makes me feel first rate. I do take comfort with Miss Sally."

That was it. Everybody "took comfort" with Miss Sally. She made everybody "feel first rate."

This gentle, kind hearted old maid loved children, and, as a rule, little folks were very fond of her. Miss Sally's proficiency in the matter of caraway cookies has already been mentioned. It is perhaps unnecessary to hint of pumpkin pies and red raspberry jam. Oh, that jam of Miss Sally's! Even now, at the mere thought of it, my mouth waters and my lips involuntarily smack.

There were, however, several young imps in this country town who would not be won by Miss Sally's kindness or cooking. They stole her apples and trampled down her flower beds. They made faces at her on the street and hurt her by jeering remarks about her condition in life. Young brutes are to be found in every community.

It was from one of these hobbledehoys that a blow, destined to hurt and injure the inoffensive woman, came the morning on which this story opens. Miss Sally eyed her three letters with a rapture unknown to those with whom a large mail is a daily occurrence. She held them up and carefully scrutinized the postmarks. She felt of them to discover their thickness. She hesitated for some time before opening them. It was such a treat to have three letters!

At last she opened one which bore the postmark of a distant western town and read a letter from a second cousin who had recently moved toward the setting sun. Miss Sally read Cousin Elvira's letter with relish. There were many bits of family news which greatly interested her. At last she came to this line: "You never could guess who is living here. Do you remember your old beau, John Terry?"

Miss Sally dropped the letter with a quick exclamation. Did she remember? A tempest shook the lonely soul. The long buried past came back. Youth, beauty, love, hope, passed in hasty and mournful procession before her. The poor, plain old maid was once again a slim, graceful slip of a girl. She saw a face at once handsome and tender; she heard a loving voice.

Poor Miss Sally! It was too much for her. She could not finish the letter. The tears were falling down her thin cheeks as she hastily returned it to the envelope and laid it one side to be reread when she was more composed.

"I'll just glance at the others," she thought as she wiped her eyes on her gingham apron. The second letter was merely a note regarding some sewing. The third—ah! When Miss Sally opened that envelope and saw the contents, she felt indeed that her cup was full.

A hideous, coarsely painted comic valentine met her eye. A frightful old woman, with corkscrew ringlets, huge beak, cross eyes, gaunt form, scrawny neck and mincing attitudes, was portrayed upon the cheap paper. It was labeled "Old Maid," and some wretched doggerel under the picture stated that this object, a withered, grizzly, ugly old hag, was in search of a husband and was a terror to all single men.

The vile caricature slipped from Miss Sally's trembling hand to the floor. The shrinking, sensitive soul was wounded to the quick by the insult. Possibly she might not have felt the stab so keenly had it not come directly upon the letter which had spoken a name she had not dared to breathe to herself these many years.

This, then, was her St. Valentine's day. Miss Sally had forgotten it was the 14th of February. Why should she remember it? But these two rude shocks brought the day forcibly to her mind.

Rising, she crossed the room to an old fashioned secretary, and opening a drawer took out an envelope, yellow with age. From this she drew a bit of paint and lace and rosebuds—a valentine, the only one she had ever received, sent her years ago by John Terry. It bore two hearts transfixed by one arrow, and there were some simple rhymes inscribed which breathed of love and fidelity. Its lace was frayed, its paint dimmed. Only a faded leaf dropped from the mournful rustling boughs of memory, but dear to the desolate old maid who held it tenderly in her toilworn hands.

"How happy I was," thought Miss Sally, "the day I got it! I remember jest how father laughed when he handed it to me. Well, well, I didn't think then that John and I would fall out, and that he'd go off out west and marry somebody else. Pshaw! I am an old fool. There hain't no fool like an old one." And Miss Sally returned her valentine to the drawer in which it had reposed so many years, then, after burning the abominable picture she had received, went about her sewing, grimly resolving she would waste no more time on the past. "I'll finish Elviry's letter this evening." She started to the sewing machine. "That'll be a pleasant way of passing an hour."

The day drew to a close. Twilight deepened into dusk. Miss Sally made her tea and sat down to her lonely evening meal. Occasionally she cast a glance toward Elvira's letter, which still lay unread on the window sill. She wondered what more there was in it about John. At last her curiosity got the better of her, and leaving her second cup of tea untasted she took up the letter, and adjusting her spectacles prepared to read it at all costs.

At that moment a knock came on her street door.

Miss Sally laid down the letter and hastened to answer the summons. In the dusk of the winter evening she saw a man standing there, a tall, well built, well dressed man, who politely lifted his hat and asked if Miss Sally Staples lived there.

"Yes, sir, walk in," said Miss Sally, all in a flutter.

The stranger entered, and with one quick glance took in the surroundings, the wholesome, meagerly furnished room, the frugal supper, the sewing machine. Then he stole a glance at Miss Sally, noting the plain, stiff gown; the poor, thin, needle pricked hands; the gentle, kindly, pathetic face. Then he took a step or two toward her, and as she gave a start and a half terrified exclamation he caught her in his big brawny arms and cried, "Sally, don't you know your old John?"

And the windows of heaven were opened to poor Miss Sally.

After they had quieted down a bit and talked it all over, after Miss Sally had given John his share of her tea and toast and had, moreover, brought out the caraway cookies and the red raspberry jam.

she began to look a little troubled, and a faded blush passed over her face.

"Your wife, John," she murmured apologetically. "I declare I was so taken back I never thought one word about your being married. You must excuse my forwardness. I didn't mean no harm," she added humbly.

"My wife!" repeated John. "Why, didn't Elvira Jenkins write you? She told me she would."

"I got a letter from her this morning," said Miss Sally, "but I really hain't had the time to read it," which was probably the first lie Miss Sally had ever told. "I was just a-going to as you knocked."

"Well, you read it," said John, smiling to himself, "while I take another saucer of that there jam."

Miss Sally reopened the letter and found the place where she had left off reading. "Do you remember your old beau, John Terry? He lives here. He is a very rich man and has been a widower three years. He asked lots about you last time I saw him and said write you he was going east a-purpose to see you."

Miss Sally dropped the letter again. She scarcely dared look up.

John, having finished his jam, came over, and putting his arm around her took her hand in his and kissed it tenderly, thin and rough as it was.

"My wife is here, Sally, if you will have it so. I hain't never ceased to love you. We was foolish, both on us. Let's begin life over again."

And so Miss Sally's valentine came to her.

A VALENTINE STORY.

Oh, but those were jolly February days, all shine and snow and jingle and bells—that is, for most people. To Laddie it was rather gloomy, though he saw the sun shine and the snow sparkle and heard the sleigh bells tinkle, as everybody did. But Laddie was a little fellow—very little for 7 years—and he hadn't many ways of amusing himself when shut up in the house, especially when mamma was too weak and tired to read to him or invent games. This was the case now, and it was a very hard time for poor Laddie, as you may imagine. He waited on mamma quite cheerfully, however, and even helped Hannah, the woman who came now and then to do the heavy housework, with good grace, but still there were many empty hours and some very sad ones.

Mamma's headache seemed to grow worse, instead of better, as the days went by, and often he saw her crying quietly. He knew then that she was thinking of papa, for she always cried when she thought or spoke of him. Papa had gone away in a big ship somewhere, long ago, when Laddie was a baby, and the ship had been wrecked, and he never came back. Laddie often asked if there was no hope of his ever coming, but mamma looked so sorry when she said, "I'm afraid not, little one," that he had about given up trying to find out any more.

One day, it was the 13th day of this sparkling February, Hannah sent Laddie down town on an errand, and he gayly set off, glad of any chance to be out, if only for a short time. As he passed the gay shops he eagerly looked at the bright pictures their windows presented, wishing he were rich enough to buy some of the lovely things for mamma.

His cheeks burned with excitement as he looked at the gay pictures and thought how surprised and glad his mamma would be if he should send her one.

Without stopping to remember that he owned only three pennies in the world, and that money was scarce at home, he began trying to decide which one of the valentines would be most appropriate for his sweetheart mamma. Finally he chose one which had a blue background, with Cupid riding across it on a rose colored cloud. The card was framed with a plush border and would look very rich on mamma's mantelshelf. So in he walked boldly and said to the clerk near the door:

"How much is that blue valentine?"

"Five dollars," answered the clerk, with a queer smile at the small, rather shabby, figure before him. The smile changed to a look of pity, however, as he saw Laddie's eyes fill with tears. He put his hand on the little fellow's shoulder and said, "See here, my boy, there are some very pretty valentines on this shelf for 50 cents, and here are some nice ones for only 25."

Laddie brightened and then began choosing among the cheaper ones until he remembered that even 25 cents was a large amount when one's entire fortune consisted of 3 coppers. He suddenly looked up and said:

"A fellow couldn't earn 22 cents between now and tomorrow, could he?"

"Why, I dare say he might by trying hard," answered the clerk cheerfully. "There's quite a good bit to be earned sometimes by carrying people's satchels from the station."

So quite hopefully our little man sped away in the direction of the Western station. As he neared the place he saw that the train had already come in, for numbers of people were hurrying toward town in carriages or on foot. Very few of the latter, however, appeared to have much to carry, and at first there seemed no chance of getting a job. But as he saw a big, good natured looking fellow carrying a small valise, he accosted him eagerly:

"Don't you want me to carry your baggage, sir, please?"

The man looked down at the bit of humanity before him and then at his valise. Then he laughed long and loud, shaking so that Laddie felt as though an earthquake were convulsing the pavement beneath him. At last the man found breath to say:

"Well, little fellow, I don't see that I need much help with this thimbleful of baggage, but that [illegible] who has just passed has a lot to carry. Maybe he'll hire you."

Before the sentence was finished off darted the boy so fast that he overtook the heavily laden traveler and fairly tangled himself in the long overcoat as he said:

"Will you please let me carry this biggest satchel? I'll do it cheap!"

This man did not laugh—at least not aloud—and Laddie felt encouraged, though the satchel looked rather formidable.

"Well, well, youngster," said the stranger, "you don't look as though you could manage such a heavy load, but you may take this smaller bundle, if you can carry it as far as Central hotel, for I'm in a good deal of a hurry."

Laddie hesitated. "Would you pay more for the big satchel?" he asked.

This time the new man did laugh and said pleasantly, "No; carry the small one, and I'll pay you whatever you ask."

"Whatever you ask!" Could it be possible? Then he could get the whole sum at once! But, no. Perhaps this would seem too much to pay. 'Twould do no harm to ask, however, so he said, taking the bundle and trudging bravely along:

"Would 22 cents be too much?"

"Well, that's rather a queer sum, but I think I can stand it. Why don't you make it an even quarter, though?"

Then Laddie told all about his valentine plan, and the 3 cents already in his pocket, and the pretty card at the book store which could be bought for a quarter. The gentleman was very much interested and watched his little companion closely as he went on. At last, when Laddie stopped to take breath, he said:

"Why don't you ask your papa for the money?"

"'Cause papa isn't here. He never was here since I can remember, and I don't know if he's dead or not, but mamma always cries when she tells about him."

The gentleman stopped suddenly, and looking eagerly into Laddie's upturned face asked one more question:

"What is your name?"

"Mamma calls me Laddie, but my real name is Lawrence Raymond. That was papa's name."

Down went the load of bundles on the pavement, and Laddie found himself clasped close in the strong arms of his new friend. He didn't quite understand it nor why the stranger almost sobbed as he said, "My baby, my baby!" He hardly liked that, and so, straightening himself up as tall as he could, he said sturdily, "I'm 7!"

"Yes, yes, little man," laughed the gentleman, "but you used to be my baby, and I have come back to you. Now, let's hurry to mamma as fast as we can."

"Without the valentine?" said Laddie, hardly realizing the truth as yet.

"We'll get her one tomorrow, dear, the finest one in town, but now show me the way home and tell me all about her."

So they hurried toward the humble house, Laddie telling about mamma's troubles as well as he knew how and listening to bits of papa's strange story, which sounded almost as wonderful as Robinson Crusoe. At last they reached the door, and Laddie rushed in, crying excitedly:

"Mamma, it's come back—the valentine—papa—23 cents—oh, dear!"

Mamma gave a start and a joyful cry. Then suddenly Laddie found himself once more warmly embraced, this time, however, in two pair of arms instead of one, and he felt queer to see both mamma and the new found papa crying over him.

But the queer feeling gave place to a most happy one when after awhile he saw mamma sitting at the table with a bright look he had never seen on her face before and heard her say to papa:

"Laddie has brought me the best valentine I ever received!"

An Expensive Luxury.

In olden times St. Valentine's day cost people no inconsiderable sums. "Pepys' Diary" records some curious customs during the reign of the "merry monarch," Charles II. Thus Mr. Pepys says in his diary on Valentine's day, 1667: "This morning came up to my wife's bedside (I being up dressing myself) little Will Mercer, to be her valentine, and brought her name written upon blue paper in gold letters done by himself, very pretty, and we were both well pleased with it. But I am also this year my wife's valentine, and it will cost me £5, but that I must have laid out if we had not been valentines." Later he adds, "I find that Mrs. Pierce's little girl is my valentine, she having drawn me, which I was not sorry for, it easing me of something more that I must have given to others." Of Miss Stuart, who became Duchess of Richmond, Pepys wrote, in describing her jewels, that the Duke of York was once her valentine and presented her a jewel valued at £800, or $4,000. Lord Mandeville was thus a giver in a jewel worth £300. Being drawn as valentine imposed a certain obligation on the donors. Pepys wrote on another Valentine's day: "This evening my wife did with great pleasure show me her stock of jewels, increased by the ring she hath made lately as my valentine's gift this year, a Turkey stone set with diamonds. With this and what she had she reckons that she hath above £150 worth of jewels of one kind or other, and I am glad of it, for it is fit the wretch should have something to content herself with." The word "wretch," it must be remembered, was used in Pepys' time as a term of great endearment.

For Faint Hearts.

Don't get discouraged, young man. Asylums may be necessities, but boarding houses are not. Homes are a luxury, and you do well to try to start one. There will be obstacles enough to your purpose without inventing any for you or your thinking up any for yourself. No matter if your spelling is a little weakkneed and your rhymes need tuning, if you have something to express, express it, or try anyway, and when you have done your best—a postage stamp on it, and away it goes, and may the blessing of St. Valentine go with it. Even if you should fail to affect the adamantine heart of this particular lady, you will at least have taken a step in the art of expression and learned something perhaps that will be of use to you some other time. There are a good many girls in the world these days, and you know bullseyes are not made by the young chap who stands always with his hands in his pockets gaping at the target. Take a good shot. The custom of Valentine's day invites it.

A Valentine For Mamma.

TWO ORPHANS.

St. Valentine's Morn.

Apollo has peeped through the shutter
And awakened the witty and fair,
The boarding school belle's in a flutter,
The twopenny post's in despair,
The breath of the morning is flinging
A magic on blossom and spray,
And cockneys and sparrows are singing
In chorus on Valentine's day.

WON BY A VALENTINE.

Bells ringing, girls appearing in the halls and public rooms, forming groups with a general air of suppressed excitement, marked St. Valentine's day at Lewiston school. Charma Sidney was wandering idly up and down the lower hall with her chum, "Goosie," hanging on her arm. "Goosie" won her nickname through her gentle disposition and artless, straightforward manner. Charma said plaintively, "How I wish there was a valentine for me, but I know of a certain one likely to remember me in that way whom I don't want to nevertheless. I wouldn't accept a valentine from him—no, not if he brought it himself. Jack Landon may marry whoever he wants to. He can't love me."

"Goosie" looked up admiringly and thought that any one who declined chances with such readiness must be great indeed and wondered if she could ever do the same.

A little sharper tingle than usual of the bell below aroused Charma from the reverie into which she had fallen; then some one called from the hall, "Miss Sidney!" She flew down the broad staircase, assured that a valentine had come for her, and indeed was soon kneeling in the midst of a crowd of girls over a box of fragrant roses reposing snugly in their cotton bed, the white satin streamers half hiding a tiny card that had slipped down among them unnoticed. Charma rescued the card somewhat triumphantly and read, "Mr. Jack Landon." But this was not all. As she knelt above them, lifting them out and inhaling their fragrance, "Goosie" picked up a diamond ring that had fallen to the floor and held it out with a flourish, crying: "Look, look, Charma Sidney, what your valentine means! You'll have him now, won't you?" But Charma was spellbound for the moment by the message on a little slip of paper found under the roses and which she read with flushing cheeks.

"Must I go back?" it said. "Love, I love you. Cannot I come to you, sweetheart mine? My love for you is as pure as the roses I send, precious as this little diamond and as lasting as all eternity. Let me come."

Charma was our only postgraduate for the year—that is, after a regular graduation she had returned to school to "brush up" in elective studies. Her reappearance on opening day had made us both glad and sorry—glad because she was a good companion, sorry for the reason—but therein lies the key to my St. Valentine romance.

Lewiston holds before its pupils the old fashioned idea of woman's sphere as the head of a home with all the term implies, and if graceful, stately Charma, with her speaking gray eyes, wavy brown tresses and not at all of a student nor bluestocking temperament had been obliged to return to school to cover up her failure in woman's natural role, what would become of us girls, a score of seniors, when we came to go trooping out to conquer, or, alas, to be conquered by the fate that pursues old maids? Yes, we did love her, and we couldn't understand why the rest of our kind, particularly mankind, didn't love her too. The secret of it she had guarded well, but we forgave her that when she shared with us the secret of her valentine gift.

"Jack Landon is my dearest friend," she said, hot with blushes, when we had caressed away the tears.

"How is it you never told us?"

"You see, we weren't engaged—that is, he hadn't really proposed, but it wasn't his fault," pleaded Charma. "It was mine."

"You loved him and wouldn't own it, even to us girls?"

"Yes; I did love him, but every time he wanted to say something to the point I turned it off, pretended not to understand, or to be interested in astronomy or botany or music or any subject at hand that I could turn to as a foil. Girls, I confess I bluffed him simply because I was fascinated with the game."

The confession cleared the atmosphere for all concerned. Jack soon followed his valentine in person and gave Charma no chance to turn Cupid's shaft away again. Like a good soldier, when beaten in siege, he had adopted a ruse de guerre, for which the day had given a capital excuse. Our star pupil remained with us until commencement, and as she went away from Lewiston the echoes of schoolgirl goodbys were mingled with those of wedding bells and congratulations to Jack Landon's bride, wooed and won by a valentine.

EDIKE HOWARD.

A CHRISTIAN FESTIVAL.

Good Old St. Valentine Was Not Appreciated Until He Died.

St. Valentine was a good man, who lived in a bad city—in cruel old Rome. He was accordingly persecuted, and in the reign of the Emperor Aurelian the head which had thought so many noble thoughts for God and humanity was severed by men who were not worthy to unloose the latchets of their victim's shoes.

As soon as Valentine was once dead he began to be appreciated. All of us will amount to more in the eyes of our fellows the day after we breathe our last than at any time in life. It was only a short time before he was made a full fledged saint and given a place in the calendar. This was not far from 1,600 years ago.

Now, the Romans, centuries and centuries before the Christian era, had feasts in the month of February known as the feasts of the Lupercalia. One of the customs peculiar to these was the putting of the names of the young women into a box from which they were drawn by the young men as chance directed.

It is supposed that this custom originated from the habit of the birds in choosing their mates at that season of the year, and that it was a relic of the nature worship common to the primeval races of Europe.

There is nothing more tenacious than the customs of a people, nothing more defiant of time, and even after the foul mists of paganism had begun to scatter before the morning sun of Christianity this old custom of drawing names was still dear to the Roman people, and they ardently clung to it.

But the early Christian fathers were as diplomatic as they were devoted, and they had the good sense to bend to their uses what they could not extirpate. Finding it was all out of the question to induce their converts to relinquish this favorite custom, they just simply Christianized it, as they did the heathenish rites of yuletide into Christmas. They made it into a festival of the church and hit upon St. Valentine as the proper person whom the custom should honor and the day celebrate.

In the provinces of Lorraine and Maine, in France, and in portions of England and Scotland, within less than a century, on St. Valentine's eve, a number of young people would get together and write on bits of paper the names of various young ladies and gentlemen. These bits would be thoroughly shaken, and then each would draw his or her valentine. A bachelor was bound to the service of his valentine, like a mediæval knight to his ladylove, for a whole year. At one time it was customary for both sexes to make their valentines appropriate presents. Oftentimes the outcome of these amorous suffrages was the tying of the connubial knot.

The custom seems to have been pretty well diluted by the time it reached the land of the star spangled banner. The Yankee has all the voting he wants in politics without exercising the franchise for amusement in midwinter. The day is celebrated in America by the sending of prints by the lovers of fun, by the spiteful and by the lovelorn.

WERE CHASED BY FIRE

A Father Saves Himself and Children from Death.

Charles Ludwig Wakes Up To Find the Tenement in Flames and Escape Cut Off by the Stairs—Burst Into the Children's Room and Lowered Them to the Street by a Rope.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 14.—But for the coolness of Charles Ludwig at a time of great danger he and his children might now be dead. He is a widower and lives on the third floor of the building at the corner of Court and Broome streets with his three children, the eldest fifteen years of age. The children slept in one room, while the father's room was next to the kitchen, where a lamp had been left burning. The lamp exploded and the burning oil was scattered in every direction.

Ludwig awoke with a start. The red glare of the flames as they ate their way along the kitchen floor made flickering shadows on the walls of his room, and the black smoke caused by the burning oil began to roll through the open doorway. Ludwig was dazed for a moment, but then the situation became apparent to him and he rushed to the door of the kitchen. He was driven back by the flames, which were gaining force and headway.

Rushed to His Children.

Ludwig then opened a door leading to the hallway and staggered back against the wall, for the flames had already eaten their way into the hall and the stairs which led to the street were burning. It seemed as if there was no way of escape, and the father rushed to the room where his children were asleep, unmindful of the terrible danger to which they were exposed.

The door of the room was closed, and when an attempt was made to open it the father found that it was locked. He pounded on it wildly and shouted "fire!" as loudly as he could. His cries awakened the children and the people who lived on the second floor. The latter were soon scampering down the stairs and into the street, where they stood and watched the windows on the third floor. They wrung their hands in despair when they saw the three children standing at a window with the red glare of the flames behind them. The father was not with them, but he soon appeared. He had thought of a means of escape.

In a back room he knew there was a long clothes line on which the woman, who did his work, hung out the weekly wash. He fought his way to the room, and groping about in the thick smoke he finally placed his hand on the rope. Then he made his way back to the front window, where he had previously taken his three children and who were clinging to one another, the youngest, a tot of three years, sobbing in the arms of her older brothers.

Saved from Death.

"You will have to be brave now," said the father, and he told them that he would lower them by means of the rope to the ground. Lena, the youngest, was the first to go out the window. The rope was doubled so that it would bear its burden and then it was tied around a lounge which was in the room. The child was lowered out of the window, while the people below cheered. Slowly the little one neared the earth as the rope was let out by the father and her oldest brother, John.

The tower boomed out 612 as the child reached the ground, for the alarm had just been turned in. The flames seemed dangerously near those at the window as willing hands untied the rope from the little one, and the father quickly pulled it back to the window. Willie, the 8-year-old son, was then tied to the end of the rope and was lowered in safety. Then his brother John was lowered.

Down the Rope.

The fire was now burning the furniture in the room where Ludwig stood, and the heat was intense. Huge rolls of smoke would envelop him every few seconds as he stooped low and hung his head out of the window to get as much air as possible. The sharp clang of an engine could be heard now above the noise in the street, but Ludwig decided that he had better not wait for a ladder, and he boldly swung himself out of the window and slid down the rope. The thin line offered no hold for his hands, and they were badly lacerated by the rope. He was nearly unconscious when he reached the street.

The firemen soon had a number of streams of water on the fire, and it was confined to the part of the house where it had originated, and the damage will not exceed $500. The first floor of the building is occupied by the annex to the Morton street public school, and it, as well as the second floor, was flooded by the water. Two families named Freidman and Banks lived on the second floor.

Interest and Principal in Gold.

New York, Feb. 14.—At a meeting of the New York board of trade and transportation it was decided to memoralize congress and urge that body upon the necessity of at once enacting such legislation as will permit the issue of bonds bearing 3 per cent. interest, both principal and interest payable in gold, which, it was claimed, would save the country the enormous difference in interest between bonds payable in gold or in coin.

Oyster Dealers Organize.

New Haven, Conn., Feb. 14.—An important meeting of the oyster dealers and growers of the state was held yesterday in this city. It was voted to organize an association to be known as the Connecticut Oyster Growers' association, and a committee of five were appointed to complete the organization.

Violated the Alien Labor Law.

Toledo, O., Feb. 14.—F. W. Adams, of Toronto, Ont., agent of C. F. Adams & Co., fur makers, was arrested here yesterday on a charge of violating the alien labor law. Adams it is alleged brought six aliens, four from Toronto and two from London, Ont. He was held in bail of $5,000.

$90,000 FOR IRON HALL.

Judge Dennis Gives Equal Dividends and Privileges to Members.

Baltimore, Feb. 14.—It is announced here that the funds in Maryland of the Order of the Iron Hall will be sent to Indianapolis for distribution by General Receiver Failey. In October last Judge Dennis drew up a decree which was submitted to the Indianapolis court containing the conditions under which the funds in this state would be placed at the disposal of the general receiver of the order.

The stipulations were briefly that the Maryland members were to be allowed the same dividends and the same privileges as members in other states. These conditions have been agreed to and Judge Dennis will in a day or two sign a order trasferring about $90,000 to the general fund. It is thought that the claimants in this state will fare much better under the general distribution than would have been the case had the Maryland funds been divided among them.

MAY PLAY POOL ON SUNDAYS.

Test Case Resulting in a Victory for the Players.

New York, Feb. 14.—Justice Ingraham yesterday, in the court of oyer and terminer, listened to an argument on a writ of habeas corpus in the case of Robert Kenny, a pool and billiard room proprietor, who has been locked up since Sunday charged with violating the Sunday law in keeping his place open on that day. The billiard room proprietor made this a test case and his counsel argued that Kenny had not violated the penal code as he had not permitted gambling in a public place and had not disturbed the quiet of the community. The playing was behind closed doors.

Justice Ingraham, after listening to the people's side of the question discharged Kenny from custody. He held that he had not violated any law. This decision is regarded as a victory for the billiard room proprietors, many of whom were present in court.

DANGER OF WATER FAMINE.

Jersey City's Big Main Broken on the Hackensack Meadows.

Jersey City, Feb. 14.—This city is in great danger of a water famine. Forty lengths of a twenty inch cement main which is the principal source of supply to the city burst yesterday on the Hackensack meadows near Marion. The length of the damaged pipe is over 300 feet and the water is flooding the vicinity.

The break was not discovered until noon yesterday, although it is supposed to have occurred Tuesday. A large force of employes were hurried to the spot and are at work repairing the damage. In many sections of the city no water is obtainable and unless the break is repaired soon, most of the city will be without water.

The officials will seek relief from the Hackensack Water company, which supplies Hoboken. The fire officials are in dread lest a big fire should occur before the break is repaired.

Their Last Hunt.

Parkersburg, W. Va., Feb. 14.—James and Samuel Arbogast, brothers, who lived in Pendleton county, were in the Cheat mountains hunting when the blizzard struck that section. They had killed a deer and were carrying it to camp. The cold became so intense that the men were forced to desert their game and make their way back to camp. Before they could reach camp James was overcome and fell and froze to death. His brother succeeded in getting back to camp but was so terribly frozen that he died the next day.

Deserted By Their Father.

Greensburg, Pa., Feb. 14.—A sad case of want and neglect was unearthed at Irwin yesterday. Several months ago the wife of James Ashton, a glass worker died. He was left with four little children. Constable Morhoff discovered the children in the house with no fire, no food and scarcely enough clothing to cover them. Ashton had gone, leaving his little ones alone. The constable furnished clothing for the nearly starved children and brought them to the county home.

The Judge Not a Shareholder.

Tacoma, Wyo., Feb. 14.—Federal Judge Hanford ordered the receivers of the Northern Pacific to pay bills amounting to $9,000 due storekeepers, liverymen and others between Tacoma, Centralis and Spokane Falls for supplies, board and lodging, etc., furnished deputy marshals during the A. R. U. strike. The judge said it was only fair for the company to bear this expense as the government had paid $60,000 for the services of deputies in protecting the system.

Met Death on the Pennsylvania.

Johnstown, Pa., Feb. 14.—The bodies of two boys were found along the tracks of the Pennsylvania road west of here last night. They were frozen to death. The identity of the bodies has not been fixed but they are supposed to be those of two sons of John Caufield, of this city. The lads, aged 10 and 12 years, were sent to school yesterday, but went skating and afterwards concluded to take a tramp, fearing to return home after playing truant.

Should Be an International Inquiry.

London, Feb. 14.—The Daily Chronicle will say to-day: "We regret the order for the inquiry as to the Crathie. It will seem to Germany to be for the purpose of whitewash. We hoped that Great Britain and Germany would arrange an international inquiry, which not only would be more satisfactory, but also would establish an eminently desirable precedent."

Disappointment in This Harem.

Cairo, Feb. 14.—The harem favorite of the khedive became the mother of a daughter yesterday. The khedive is represented as being greatly disappointed, as he was hoping for the birth of a son, who would have been heir to the throne.

Helping the Poor and Needy.

Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 14.—A mass meeting of the citizens of Atlanta was held yesterday and a large sum was raised for the relief of the city's poor.

Gold Coming Back.

London, Feb. 14.—Three hundred thousand dollars was shipped to the United States yesterday in gold.

THE LAW AGAINST THEM

Norton and Quinn Indicted by the Grand Jury.

True Bill Against Them for Violating the Ten-Hour Act—Charges Made Against the Mayor and a Police Captain—Strike Leader Before the Jury—The Strike To Be Continued.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 14.—It is reported that the grand jury has found a true bill against Benjamin Norton and D. J. Quinn, president and superintendent of the Atlantic avenue railroad.

They are charged with a violation of the ten-hour law of the state, on the complaint of several strikers, who swore before Police Justice Walsh that they had been forced to work longer than the law prescribed. Upon their complaint President Norton and Superintendent Quinn were held for the grand jury. That body has been considering their case for the last four days. A number of witnesses were examined. The vote to indict them was taken last night.

The district attorney refused to confirm or deny the report that indictments were found, but, it is said on good authority, that true bills were found and will be presented to Judge Moore in court to-day. The offense charged is a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment and fine or both.

Charges Against Schieren.

Martin J. Connelly said that Lawyer Towns, on behalf of the strikers, has been before the grand jury and made four charges against Mayor Schieren and one charge against Police Captain Dunn of the Fourteenth precinct.

Strike Leader Holcomb was summoned before the grand jury. He declined to tell about what he was interrogated.

Will Continue the Strike.

District Assembly No. 75 held a meeting to consider the advisability of calling off the strike. By a majority vote it was decided to continue it.

Immediately after the meeting, Messrs. Giblin, Collins and Best, of the executive committee, left town. One of them went to Boston, one to Philadelphia and one to Albany. The nature of their business is not divulged.

An Insane Mother Kills Her Child.

Passaic, N. J., Feb. 14.—Mrs. Michael Wasel killed her two months' old child last night while in an insane fit. She awoke her husband at midnight and told him that a big long-haired man was in the room trying to kill her baby. Then she rushed around the room squeezing it to her breast and screaming. Wasel could not restrain her and called his brother. With great difficulty the two men got her down and took the baby away. It was dead from strangulation and there were marks of its mother's teeth and finger nails in its flesh. The unfortunate woman will be sent to an asylum.

The Same Old Trick.

Providence, R. I., Feb. 14.—While Councilman George H. Wood was at the annual meeting of the Rhode Island Philatelic society last night a young man called at his residence and informed Mrs. Wood that he had been sent for her husband's collection of stamps. This is one of the finest in this part of the country and is valued at $1,500. Mrs. Wood gave the collection to the young man who thereupon disappeared. New York and St. Louis, stamp centres, have been notified by the police.

Might Be Expected.

Chicago, Feb. 14.—George. W. Pullman yesterday appeared before Judge Grosscup in chambers and was exonerated from the charge of attempting to evade the order of the court. He stated that he was not in his office when the bailiff called with the subpoena but was in Vice-President Wickes' office across the way. Later in the afternoon of that day he left for New York, not to avoid the court, but because he had already made all arrangments to go.

The Root of All Evil—Money.

Chatham, Ont., Feb. 14.—Thomas McBride, city agent for the Metropolitan Life Insurance company of New York, was arrested yesterday on a charge of forgery, in having made out a bogus claim for insurance and forging the name of the father of an alleged deceased person, also that of Dr. C. W. Baker of this city. McBride pleaded not guilty and was remanded.

His Deeds Were Evil.

Kingston, N. Y., Feb. 14.—The result of the investigation into the charges preferred by the Methodist church of Margaretville, Delaware county, against the Rev. W. R. Goss, is the suspension of Mr. Goss from the ministry. Rev. Mr. Goss, who is now located at Tannersville, Greene county, was charged with falsehood and with undue intimacy with women.

Employes Get Sixty Per Cent.

South Berwick, Me., Feb. 14.—The employes of the insolvent Portsmouth company received 60 per cent. of the amount of their preferred claims from the assignee yesterday. The company owed the employes nearly $6,000 in wages when they were petitioned into insolvency.

JUST A LOVE STORY

is what most folks like to read, if it is original in plot, and felicitously told. And it is just that kind of a love story which Mrs. Alexander, the author of "The Wooing o' It", and other powerful novels whose names are in everybody's mouth, has written in

"SETTLED OUT OF COURT".

This tale is one of the masterpieces of a masterhand. It will appear in The Daily Press, beginning tomorrow and will run for six days. Do not miss an instalment. You will read the story in The Daily Press or nowhere.

RUDYARD KIPLING

never wrote, and never will write—and nobody else ever will write, because nobody can—a better story than "A Disturber of Traffic", a tale of seafaring life in the Eastern seas. But Mr. Kipling has written just as good a story in something the same vein, and yet with a freshness and originality all its own. It is called and is a tale of an Indian boy who grows up to his father's trade of piloting vessels through the strange rivers down to the seas where every drop of water has a romance to tell. You will read this story, first published, and fitly illustrated by the best newspaper artists, in The Daily Press today and tomorrow. It is brand-new, and copyrighted to Daily Press use.

Dr. Robert S. Barrett of Washington, D. C., Missioner of the Episcopal Church, will hold services at Grace Church every evening next week, beginning Sunday next and closing Sunday Feb. 24. The sermons, the subjects of which will be announced tomorrow, constitute the series. These discourses will be wholly unsectarian and while conducted on the liberal lines of modern thought will yet be most earnestly and emphatically Christian. Congregational singing will be a feature of the meetings and all are most cordially welcome.

Nightingales Sing In Bethel.

Bethel Chapel was well filled last evening with an appreciative audience who came to listen to the concert given by the Nightingale Colored Concert Troupe. The hit of the evening was little Miss Mamie Ogden, especially in the song "You Can't Play in My Yard," in which she appeared in appropriate costume. G. A. Morris fairly convulsed with his character songs, which were rendered very effectively. The singing of the quartette also was very good, and the audience left with the thought that they had received the worth of their money.

Edsall's Grocery Department.

Edsall is expecting another big rush in his grocery department tomorrow and has made preparations accordingly. New, fresh and pure goods have been added, marked at the lowest prices ever heard of before in Plainfield, or New York either, which sell quickly at sight. Buying and selling for cash is just the thing for people who want to make a little money go a good ways in securing everyday needs. See his new ad today.

Rushing the Contract.

Thomas McGann and his men, after two weeks of hard work, completed yesterday the excavation of the cellar of the Blatz house on Somerset street, and Contractor Burnett started the mason work this morning, and will push it rapidly, as the house is to be completed according to contract, by April 1.

O. W. O. Hardman, sheriff of Tyler Co., W. Va., appreciates a good thing and does not hesitate to say so. He was almost prostrated with a cold when he procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He says: "It gave me prompt relief. I find it to be an invaluable remedy for coughs and colds." For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

CHRISTIAN YOUNG MEN.

They Come to Plainfield from All Over Jersey.

26TH ANNUAL STATE CONVENTION.

Social Reception in the New Building—Opening Session in the First Baptist Church—Address of Welcome by Dr. Lewis—President Siegfried Responds—First Business Meeting Today—W. D. Murray Elected President.

[An accurate picture of the new Y. M. C. A. Building where the business sessions of the convention are held and diagrams of the floor plans, are published on Page 2 of this issue.]

The first session of the twenty-sixth annual State convention of the Young Men's Christian Association was held in the First Baptist Church last night. Previous to this, however, a reception and supper were given to the visiting delegates in the Y. M. C. A. Building by the young women representing the various Christian Endeavor societies of the city.

"What would the Young Men's Christian Association do without the gentler sex?"—was a casual observation made by a man at one of the supper tables just after he was seated before the collation.

The aptness of this apparently trivial remark was especially perceived on viewing the scene that greeted those who had occasion to ascend the broad stairway leading to the departments connected with the Association work, between the hours of 5 and 7.

Bevies of young women, attired in becoming gowns, were in every nook to greet each visitor with a charming smile and pleasant word, bidding him welcome to Plainfield.

To say that the young men thus greeted were captivated by the expression of hospitality so charmingly conveyed, expresses it mildly. Most of them came from a distance, and were naturally somewhat fatigued from their journeys, but the reception seemed to have an invigorating effect on their jaded spirits, and a very pleasant hour was spent in becoming acquainted with one another.

It was of course a trifle too early in the session for any of those little corner parties, wherein the participants converse in subdued tones and lingeringly disperse with features wreathed with benignity, but before adjournment—but The Press will forego prophecy.

The rooms themselves are cozy and neat, and the upper walls were trimmed with pink streamers; and a profusion of bouquets and potted plants was arranged here and there, making them still more cheerful.

The receiving and decorating committee were composed of the following efficient and artistic young women:

Misses Gillem, Dunn, and Sheppard, Trinity Reformed Church; Miss Spicer, Seventh-Day Baptist Church; Miss Thorn, Third Street Mission; Miss Cortell, First Baptist Church, Miss Belknap, Congregational Church; Miss Hunter, Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church and Hope Chapel; Miss Schenck, First Presbyterian Church: Miss Kreitling, German Reformed Church; Miss Loomis, Grace M. E. Church; assisted by the following men: Messrs E E Anthony, John McLaughlin, C B Clemens, Will Crawford, George Beebe, E H Bonnell, and Samuel Clark.

During the period intervening between 5 and 6, when the entertaining and entertained were passing an enlivening hour, another committee of young women was busy arranging a spread of good things in the upper meeting hall which would satisfy and gratify the most fastidious epicurean.

It was just 6 when E E Anthony announced, as the doors were thrown open, that "All delegates present would pass into supper."

Before their vision loomed up a scene of beauty; the damsels were there, neatly attired, and three tables laden with tempting viands also were there. The prevailing tints of the dining room were yellow, the tables being adorned with smilax, roses and carnations.

Thanksgiving for the repast was given, and blessing invoked, by Mr. Anthony.

The supervising committee who had charge of the refreshments, was as follows:

Miss Blair, chairman, Misses Yerkes, Bonnell, Beekman, Eldridge, and Carroll.

The chairmen of the various social committees having charge of serving the guests were these:

Mrs. Wheaton S. Lowry, Park Avenue Baptist; Miss Ida Randolph, Crescent Avenue; Miss Cahoone, First Presbyterian; Miss Nora Williams, Warren Chapel; Miss Dunlap, Hope Chapel; Miss Hunter, Monroe Avenue Chapel; Miss Beekman, Congegational; Miss Conover, German Reformed; Mrs. Van Middlesworth, First Church of Christ; Miss Mowinkle, German Reformed.

The supper hour continued until 7.

At 7:30 the session in the First Baptist Church was commenced with a song service conducted by B. Fank Botts.

At 8, A. H. Siegfried, president of the State Association, called the meeting to order. A few verses from the first chapter of Psalms was read by F. R. Hogan of Paterson, followed with prayer by Rev. J. H. Elliott of Clifton Springs, N. Y. The following is the address of welcome delivered by Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis of the Plainfield Seventh-Day Baptist Church:

DR. LEWIS'S ADDRESS OF WELCOME.

"It gives me sincere pleasure, in behalf of the Y. M. C. A. and the people of Plainfield, to welcome you, Mr. President, delegates and friends, to this 26th Anniversary of the Y. M. C. Association, of the State of New Jersey. With this welcome we bring, in hearts and homes, whatever of good we can offer to you, and gladly wait to receive whatever of good you bring to us. We expect that inspiration for new work, and consecration for new endeavor, will surround us through your coming, and abide with us long after you have gone.

"I shall not fairly represent the people of Plainfield if I do not make this welcome more than a passing incident, and an empty formality. As successive birthdays check our accustomed thoughts and make us ask what life means and whither we are tending, so this anniversary should awaken inquiry as to what has been attained, and what new work is awaiting the Y. M. C. Associations of New Jersey and the United States. The nearness of this date to the date of the semi-centennial meeting in London a few months ago, makes it easy to glance at what has been done, so far as summaries and statistics are concerned. These show that the Y. M. C. A. movement has become a permanent and important factor in the religious work of the world. With more than 5 000 associations, a membership of nearly or quite 500,000, representing 26 nations and 17 languages, with many millions of money permanently and wisely invested in buildings, libraries, etc., this work has passed far beyond the stage of experiment, or the probation of limited test. With only 43 years between us and the date of the first association in the United States—at Boston Dec. 22, 1851—there are now in this country more than 250 000 members of the Y. M. C. A. with buildings and property, aggregating $15,000,000. These associations conduct 15,000 classes for Bible study with an attendance of more than 226,000 pupils. We are glad to welcome you as representatives of this widely diffused and growing work.

"You represent the work of Christian churches outside of their organized limits, but not any the less their work. You would not be, but for them. God called this movement into being to meet new demands for strengthening and extending the kingdom of Christ. Human life is one continuous coming, and going hence. Its first faint wail and its last low sigh are always blending. Cradles and burial caskets belong to all times and crowd all places. The character of the young determines the destiny of the old, and the older in turn transmit impulse and tendency to the young. Hence God has ordained that all young life should be tenderly and wisely cared for, and when the restlessness of our modern civilization brought it about that thousands of boys and young men were becoming practically homeless and wanderers upon the earth through the exigencies of business, something like this movement was inevitable under God's providence.

"Your work starts with the truth that the formative years of early life are the determinant years as to usefulness and destiny: that safety, strength, character and destiny, are from within. So you seek the conversion, the regeneration of young men. If righteousness and peace through Christ abide in the heart of a young man, he can walk safely amid the fiercest temptations and the sharpest trials of life, though far from home, or wholly homeless, because he is always at home with God. Every Y. M. C. A. is a shelter of help and a recruiting station in spiritual things to young men who seek to find this new life in Christ, or to add strength and encouragement to that already possessed. To stand at evening in a great city with its miles of closed doors, and have no latch-key, is the essence of hopeless homelessness. And the wide world is a forbidding wilderness to the man whom no one welcomes. You come here tonight as representatives of a work which makes it possible for a young man to take his letter from the secretary of any association and go hence to London, Paris, Berlin, Rome, Cairo, Jerusalem, Madras, Tokio, San Francisco, Omaha, Chicago, New York, and find everywhere an open door, a welcome to the atmosphere of Christian brotherhood, and a "God-speed" from each resting-place and store-house of blessing.

"It was the boast of Rome in her palmy days that one might go from the Imperial City southward to the Falls of the Nile, eastward to the Euphrates, northward to the confines of the Empire, and westward to the shores of the Atlantic, and never want for the protection of the imperial standard, for a Roman highway, or an inn kept under national sanction. It is far higher cause for gladness that the churches of Christ represented in the Y. M. C. A. offer the protection of the banner of everlasting love, the rest of faith, the voice of comfort, and the God-speed of an universal brotherhood the wide world over.

"What new work, what enlarged plans, what higher conceptions, what deeper realization of future possibilities, are already in sight it is not mine to recount at this time. But that all these are in sight no one can doubt. It is yours to pray for clearer spiritual vision that you may discern them, and for deeper consecration that you may meet them. The conflict between good and evil never ceases. Everywhere there are tempted souls and hunted lives awaiting welcome and help. There are new forms of work which the past suggest and the future demands. There are unexplored fields to be traversed, where treasures await faithful workers and consecrated hearts. The Word of God is full of light, waiting for eyes that will see. The Law of God is vocal with demands waiting for ears that will hear. The Love of God has untold blessings for souls that will believe. The Help of God has countless hands reaching down into earth's helplessness, and searching tenderly for the unsaved ones. Welcome then while we pray and counsel and plan, concerning the work which the Master has entrusted to you. Thrice welcome in His name through whom light, love, salvation, and everlasting life have come into earth's darkness, and want and weariness and sin. Welcome to new fields of battle, and new victories through greater obedience and more consecrated endeavor."

President Siegfried feelingly responded as follows:

RESPONSE OF PRESIDENT SIEGFRIED.

"A year ago, at the opening of our twenty-fifth anniversary as an organic body, it became my official duty and very great pleasure to stand for a moment as the concrete expression of a welcoming hospitality, the real sincerity and warmth of which found but faint expression in the best and truest words I could command. This evening, standing for another moment as the representative of guestship instead of hospitality, it is indeed a pleasant and inspiring thing to hear and to receive into our consciousness and appreciation the gracious and kindly words of Dr. Lewis, in expression of the open heart and extended hand of Plainfield, as warmth of heart and grasp of hand welcome us to brief sojourn within the homes and churches of this famed and favored community. Hospitality includes and requires two direct personal factors—the host and the guest. The true relation of welcoming host and of welcome and grateful guest can only exist between those who are at one in mind and heart and purpose. Who can be so entirely unified in the sympathy of motive and purpose and in the blending of personality as they who are alike striving to be loyal sons of God—impulsed by His spirit, and workfellows with and for His Son? It is in this bond of fellowship that we come to you—strangers for the most part in person, but in kinship and friendship with you brothers all of Him who is our common teacher, leader, exemplar, inspirer, savior. In this blessed unity we have gratefully accepted your invitation, we thank you for your welcome, and we invoke blessing alike upon hosts and guests, to the hoped for end that our brief dwelling together may bring spiritual strength and inspiration to you who graciously open your doors and to us who gladly cross your thresholds.

"Turning aside from these pleasant thoughts of welcome and response, let me very briefly speak to one or two points which I dare hope may bear some influence upon the spirit and work of this convention. At the appointed time the Chairman of our State Executive Committee will give you in detail the resume of your twenty-sixth year of associational work. He will tell you that in spite of secular conditions and influences which have been untoward and disturbing to a remarkable degree we yet have great cause for congratulation and thanksgiving; that during a time when growth could hardly be hoped for and diminution would be naturally expected, our aggregate membership stands practically where it did a year ago; that the local religious meetings have grown in number and attendance; that an increased number of young men have been led into the open Christian life, and a larger proportion of these has been brought into church relationship, but—using the very words that came to me a while ago from the one who is in closest touch with our State work—there is a 'serious, nay, an alarming decrease in the number and attendance upon Bible and training classes'; he will also tell you that more money has been invested in our work and that there has been a gain in the number of associations, and that the local plants for an enlarging, effective, and enduring work were never in the associational history of New Jersey in so good and forceful condition as they are at this hour.

"In the view of these facts and of the added fact that as an organic body we are now come to the age of vigorous manhood, when we are fittest for high enterprise, and when the church, the State and the cause of human advancement have a clear right to expect the highest possible endeavor and the richest attainable fruitage from this special factor in Christian work, let me remind you that the Young Men's Christain Association was the pioneer of those modern movements and methods which have drawn new lines of effort, which have broadened and revitalized thought and opinion, and which have almost brought the entire membership of the Christian church into active and stimulative individual interest and work. Sixty years ago Christianity was the salt of the earth, as a principle, as it is now; but that body which was its embodiment and exponent was largely didactic, polemic, conservative, over-prudent, often stupid, sometimes repressive, and practically destitute of any specialized work except the then crude Sunday-school and the then but fairly begun system of foreign missions. Williams began his apparently small work with and for young men in London, unconscious that he was planting seed the growth of which should spring up and bear fruit throughout the earth. Let us not vainly vaunt ourselves, but also let us not forget that the specialized work of young men for young men, in educating those of little or no other opportunity, in developing and cleansing their bodies, in guarding their purity of life, in stimulating their sports while surrounding recreation with good influences, in caring for their homes during absence from the paternal home, in securing employment for those involuntarily idle and compassed about by the distresses and discouragements and temptations of idleness, and in bringing these into the faith and enthusiasm and salvation of Jesus the Christ—let us not forget that this new expression and potency of Christianity was begun by our predecessors and has been made our heritage and responsibility; let us remember that our associational ideas and efforts were the pioneers, pointing the way for and so, in part at least, the incitors and formers of Christian Endeavor, Epworth League, King's Daughters, St. Andrews Brotherhood and even of the institutional church itself, all of which are doing a mighty work through factors who were half a century ago practically dormant and useless, except as they swelled the rolls of church membership and went the round of conventional church observance and ceremonials; but let it be the real purpose and value of this call to remembrance that, having been useful and honored of God in our own special field, and having been the means of suggestion and incitement to others equally or even more useful in their fields, there shall remain neither large place, nor valid excuse, nor great future for us unless we shall, with God's help, still better follow the lines already approved and well-founded in our experience; unless we shall devise new methods; unless we shall open our minds to new definitions and manifestations of truth; unless we shall broaden our thought so as to emphasize the religion of conduct and character as well as that of emotion and devotion; unless we shall bring into the active work, persistently, systematically and conscientiously, that portion of our membership which is parasitic rather than energetic; unless we can turn into the visible church still more as to both quantity and quality of those whom we are especially commissioned to find and fashion unto righteousness; unless we shall not merely raise our standard higher, but shall push it and follow it further and further in the advance of that world-girdling line which seeks to enclose and nurture and save all those who neither know nor care for our God."

The order of the printed programme was changed, and Rev. Dr. D. J. Burrell of New York was the next speaker, in order that he might make an early return to the metropolis. In introducing him to the audience, President Siegfried referred to him as the man who preached in a marble church, but whose heart and spirit were neither marble nor petrified.

The address which followed was one of the most brilliant that a Plainfield audience has had the pleasure of listening to in some time. Dr. Burrell did not confine himself to a talk to the young men exclusively, but his remarks were interesting, his logic was sound, and his suggestions were practical, and withal couched in language that was easily comprehended by all. His points were illustrated with reminiscences that kept the audience in constant good humor.

DR. BURRELL'S ADDRESS.

Dr. Burrell said that it was a very great pleasure to address the young men, and especially so when there was a sprinkling of young women among them. It was a great thing for young men to get together in a convention of this kind and promulgate plans for work. There is a class of young men, he had observed in New York, whose principal occupation was in endeavoring to balance a cane. Their stock in trade consisted in a cane, creased pants and pedigrees. Their sustenance was secured by the sweat of their fathers' brow.

The young women of today had not much to show when they passed away—a few oil paintings, fancy work and nicknacks. There is room for earnest young women in this age. If life was ever worth living it is now. He would rather live now than to have existed twice as long in any other century, for this was the age of golden opportunity, and he thought that there never would be such chances in another century. There were new forces in the church and these had led the way for the young men. Transfusion of

WHY?

QUESTIONS WOMEN ASK

Here Answered with Good Sound Reason.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Why do people say that Lydia E. Pinkham's treatment, especially her Vegetable Compound, effects cures beyond the physician's skill?

Because of the fact that a woman best understands a woman's ills. What man ever suffered a single pang like unto woman? Man works from theory only.

Why do tens of thousands of women write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., telling their most secret thoughts?

Because they know that their letters go straight to the hands of a woman, are opened, read, and answered by a woman, who as a woman has made woman's ills a life study, and because she never fails them, and cures cases which the doctor cannot.

The lady who asks that the following letter be published, gives concisely the uniform expression of gratitude contained in thousands of other letters in Mrs. Pinkham's possession.

"For eight years I suffered with neuralgia of the womb, backache, severe pains all through my body, and kidney trouble. None of the doctors did me any good. I took twelve bottles of your Vegetable Compound, and cannot thank you enough for the relief I found.

"I am now well cured of all those pains. I should advise every woman to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound who has any female trouble. I had a friend who was to go under an operation. I advised her first to try the Compound. She did, and is now so much better and stronger she has given up all thoughts of the operation."—MRS. M. WILDE, 2137 Park St., Tioga, Pa.

There's nothing so GOOD as Cottolene

The new vegetable shortening.
Wherever introduced, it drives lard from the kitchen, and indigestion from the household.
It has been tried by every test, and has met every requirement.
It is as much superior to lard as the electric light is to the tallow-dip
The only question now is, will you give your family the benefits which its use bestows?

There's nothing LIKE Cottolene

In composition, in healthfulness, in flavor, or in economy.
Its success has called out a lot of imitations and counterfeits made for the sole purpose of selling in the place and on the merits of Cottolene.
Avoid them all. They are made to sell and they are a sell.

WILL NOT SURRENDER

"This Strike Will Last Until Election Day."

At Least, So Says Master Workman Connelly—No Break in the Strikers' Ranks—Men Said To Be Bribed by the Companies' Agents—Trouble Not Yet Over.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 15.—Master Workman Connelly was seen last night regarding the strike being declared off.

"The strike is not off, it will last until election day," he said And then gave out the following for publication:

"To the railroad men of Brooklyn:

"The strike has not been declared off. It will not be declared off until the companies offer terms that can be accepted by self-respecting men.

"Put no faith in rumors to the effect that the strike is at an end. These rumors are being circulated by agents and tools of President Lewis and President Norton. Their wish is to discourage you so that you will tumble over one another in the hurry to get back to work. They have tried all along to cause a stampede in your ranks. Thus far they have been disappointed. Let them remain so.

"The situation in all its phases was discussed by your representatives at yesterday's meeting of the district assembly, and it was decided to continue the fight. The vote to do this was unanimous.

"The companies are claiming a victory. It is a part of their old game of bluff. They can still be defeated. They will surely be defeated if you remain firm. We know that they are not in a condition to keep up this fight much longer. If you do not give in they will be forced to do so.

"If, on the contrary, you now break ranks, the heroic struggle you have made during the past month will have been in vain.

"Keep away from the depots and the offices of the companies and do not allow yourselves to be lured back to work until the companies consent to make decent terms with you. The situation calls for firmness on your part. Let every man do his duty.

"Martin J. Connelly,
"Andrew D. Best."

Men Bribed.

The first break in the ranks of the strikers took place yesterday morning, when a small number of the old employes applied for positions on the Brooklyn Heights railroad.

The number of these men, according to reports of the companies, was about 100, but as Master Workman Connelly said yesterday, their number was not over thirty.

These thirty men, it was asserted, were bribed by agents of the companies to apply, so that the companies could work on the fears of the strikers who were holding out, and cause a stampede.

A number of old employes, according to one story, applied for work, thinking the printed stories to the effect that the strike was declared off were true. When these men learned that the strike was still on, they said they would not go back to work.

The companies assert that their old employes are coming back in large numbers.

Norton and Lewis Talk.

It is said 100 of the men who went on strike have applied for work at the Ridgewood stables. President Norton, of the Atlantic avenue line, said twenty of the old men had applied for work. President Lewis, of the Brooklyn Heights, declared 300 strikers had applied for work. And President Wicker, of the Suburban, after saying the old men were rushing back, would only state that he had received a "large number" of applications.

Those who asked for work were told to file applications. They will be hired under the individual contract system.

According to Mayor Schieren's report the Brooklyn Heights had 663 cars running yesterday, the Atlantic avenue 105 and the Suburban road 77, making a total of 845 cars. The lines not operated were the Lutheran, Holy Cross and Richmond Hill lines.

The Brooklyn grand jury will probably to-day listen to the charges made by the strikers against Mayor Schieren. Master Workman Connelly refused to say anything about the matter.

All members of the executive board are subpoenaed to appear to-day before the investigating committee appointed by the legislature.

Snow Storm Raging.

Austin, Tex., Feb. 15.—Never before in the history of Austin has such a snow storm visited this section as is now on. It has been snowing continuously since last night, and now the snow is six inches deep on the level and many feet deep where it has drifted. All trains are hours behind, and some of them have stopped already being stalled in the plains. This is the first time in the memory of the oldest citizen when such a severe snow storm visited the southern portion of the state.

Will Protect Life and Property.

Constantinople, Feb. 15.—The government denies the report, published abroad last week, that there have been anti-Christian outrages in Beyrout and Sidon recently. In response to the requests of the ambassadors and their complaints of violence and assassination in the city's streets, the porte has promised effective measures to protect life and property. The police have been strengthened and mounted patrols have been added to the force.

Canton's Big Fire.

Canton, O., Feb. 15.—Fire broke out in the plant of the Canton Brick works last night, burning the building to the ground and destroying every piece of machinery. The loss is $28,000; insurance $16,000. The plant was located at North Industry, where there is no fire protection.

Office Seekers Must Wait.

New York, Feb. 15.—Mayor Strong has sent to the press notifying them that he will make no more appointments for a few days. Many choice "plums" have fell to the lot of office seekers in the past few days.

KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

Dissatisfaction in the Ranks—"The Bad Combine; the Good Associate"

Columbus, O., Feb. 15.—The conference committee of the seceding miners from the general assembly of the Knights of Labor, after an all night session, issued an address to the members setting forth their reasons for secession, covering the New Orleans convention and commenting in general terms upon the mismanagement of the affairs of the association during the past year. The address is as follows:

To the members of the Knights of Labor:

When bad combine the good must associate, else they will fall one by one an unpitied sacrifice in a contemptible struggle.

Never was the truth of this more plainly manifest than at present within the order of the Knights of Labor. Assembled in the city of Columbus, O., this 14th day of February, 1895, the representatives of fifteen districts and national trade district assemblies of the Knights of Labor have decided to pay no further tribute to the men who claim to be its general officers.

ALONE WITH THEIR DEAD.

Children Imprisoned by Storm Remain Three Days with a Corpse.

Wolcott, N. Y., Feb. 15.—A sad incident of the late storm has just come to light. Alexander Costman, a widower, lived with his three children aged 14, 8 and 6 years respectively, on the county line between Monroe and Cayuga. On Monday the father was taken sick but the children were unable to secure assistance on account of the storm. Tuesday he died and for three days the helpless children were imprisoned with the dead father by the storm.

On Friday the nearest neighbor, living one and a half miles from the Costman house, was aroused by feeble rapping at his door. He found the 14-year-old son of Costman lying on his door step exhausted and nearly frozen. By this means the neighbors were informed of the conditions of affairs and took charge of the funeral.

GOLD GAMBLING DENOUNCED.

Populist Congressmen Invite Aid and Co-operation in Their Work.

Washington, Feb. 15.—An address to the members of the people's party, signed by populists in congress, including Lafe Pence, O. M. Kem, Jerry Simpson and others with the addition of J. B. Weaver, H. E. Taubeneck, and other prominent leaders, was issued yesterday. Following the general view of the populist programme denouncing what they describe as a conspiracy between the gold gamblers of Europe and America to fasten a perpetual debt upon the people of the United States and other declared evils, they invite the aid and co-operation of all favoring the immediate free coinage of silver at the ratio of sixteen to one, the issue of all paper money by the general government without the intervention of banks of issue and other matters in well known consonance with populist principles.

SPORTS MEET.

Maher and O'Donnell Sign Articles for a Contest on May 15.

New York, Feb. 15.—Peter Maher and Steve O'Donnell met at the Police Gazette office yesterday and signed articles. Maher's interests were looked after by John J. Quinn, of Pittsburg, and O'Donnell was represented by William A. Brady, Corbett's manager. Sam Austin represented the Police Gazette, which is stakeholder.

Maher and O'Donnell will meet on May 15, for a contest of twenty-five rounds. The bout will be for a purse before the club making the best offer. Catch weights were agreed upon.

POPULISTS WIDE AWAKE.

Want Government Control of the Union Pacific Railroad.

Jefferson City, Mo., Feb. 15.—The house of representatives passed the following:

Resolved—That this house request the United States senators and representatives from Missouri to vote for measures to have the government mortgage upon the Union Pacific railway foreclosed and for the government ownership and operation of said road, to charge only enough to pay the actual cost of constructing such a road, and operating expenses thereof.

Interest to Iron Workers.

Pittsburg, Feb. 15.—The American Manufacturer, in its "outlook" on the iron and steel trade will say to-day: Every day opens up some possibilities of new business. Iron and steel makers have managed to tide over an exceedingly depressing period with success and at last these are slowly developing signs of a large general demand. If the railroads do what their boards of directors would like to do, there will be a backbone to the iron trade this year that will make prices stronger all around.

His Wife Makes Up.

Boston, Feb. 15.— Charles W. Sanford, ex-tax collector of the town of Concord, this state, who disappeared some time ago and whose shortage of over $14,000 was made up by his wife, arrived in this city yesterday from New York. Mr. Sanford has come back voluntarily, with the knowledge that he may be arrested and imprisoned, and will return to Concord, and resume his private business there, if allowed to do so.

An Assemblyman a Prisoner.

Buffalo, Feb. 15.—George W. Dickinson of Port Byron, N. Y., who sat in the assembly during the terms of 1891 and '92, was a prisoner in police court yesterday charged with grand larceny on complaint of David H. Lee, a loan broker, who alleged that Dickinson retained money not properly belonging to him.

MONOPOLY VS. LABOR

Decision Given in Favor of the Trolley Company.

The Attorney General Does Not Think the Men's Charges Have Been Proven—Ten-Hour Law Concerns the Officers But Not the Men. What Might Have Been Expected.

Albany, Feb. 15.—In the matter of the application to the attorney-general to commence an action to vacate the charter of the Brooklyn Heights Railroad company, Attorney-General Hancock, in a long opinion, concludes:

"I am satisfied from a consideration of the facts presented by the petitioners that they are not sufficient to justify the bringing of an action to annul the charter of the corporation.

Favors Monopoly.

"It would be indeed difficult to demonstrate how the action which I am requested to bring would be of any benefit to the men who have been thrown out of employment, and who, in common with many others, have suffered in consequence of the unfortunate conditions which have recently called public attention to the city of Brooklyn. Actions of the kind demanded in this application as a general rule result in serious pecuniary loss to persons of limited means and small savings who have been induced to invest their earnings in the stock of corporations, and accomplish a corresponding gain and advantage to wealthy syndicates and individuals who are frequently enabled to purchase the assets of defunct corporations at much less than their actual value.

"The sale of railroads by receivers, to the ruin of men in moderate circumstances, and the further enrichment of those who already have an abundance, has been a matter of not infrequent occurrence, and is a familiar page in the history of the railroads of this and other states.

"The question then presents itself whether such facts exist as require action to be brought for the forfeiture of the franchise of this particular corporation. As a basis of any such action, the attorney-general is called upon to present a petition to the court, stating the grounds and the particular acts which, in his judgment, constitute legal reasons for vacating the charter and annuling the corporate existence of the Brooklyn Heights Railroad company.

No Ground for Action.

"I have examined with care the case for the purpose of determining charges preferred in this particular whether the facts presented constitute a cause of action, or would justify the bringing of suit to forfeit the corporate franchise. It is important to distinguish between violations of the law committed by individuals who are officers of a corporation and illegal acts chargeable to a corporation itself.

"It was claimed upon the hearing that the officers of the corporation have required its employes to labor more than ten hours per day, in violation of the law. But such a condition of affairs constitutes no ground for bringing an action to annul the franchise of the corporation. The law prescribes the penalty against the officer and not against the corporation.

"The provisions of the statute are clear and explicit in every particular. Chapter 529 of the laws of 1887 limit the hours of labor of railroad employes in cities of more than 100,000 inhabitants in the operation of street, surface and elevated railroads to ten hours, to be performed within twelve consecutive hours, with a reasonable time for meals, and makes it a misdemeanor for any officer or agent of any such corporation to exact more than ten hours' labor, in violation of this chapter. These provisions of the statute are wise and salutary, and were undoubtedly enacted for the benefit, not only of the employes of railroad corporations, but also for the purpose of protecting the traveling public.

Officers To Blame.

"There is fair ground for argument that excessive labor exacted from railroad employes engaged in the performance of their important and laborious duties render them less capable of discharging the tasks imposed on them with the care which is necessary for the protection of the public, especially in the crowded streets of a large city, and the officer of a corporation who violates these provisions of the law is guilty of committing an offense injurious to the public, the employes and the corporation itself, for which he is liable to be punished by both fine and imprisonment, and the public interests, in my judgment require a proper enforcement of this statute. But such a condition of affairs constitutes no ground whatever for bringing an action to annul the franchise of the corporation. The law prescribes the penalty against the officer and not against the corporation. In fact, this question has been already passed upon by the court of appeals.

The Company All Right.

"The remedy for violation of the statute is adequate and effectual, since the corporation can only act through officers and agents, and they are at once liable to punishment if the law is violated.

"It is plain that the prohibition and the punishment refer to the officers and agents of the corporation and not to the company acting in its corporate capacity."

Prominent Odd Fellow Dead.

Troy, N. Y., Feb. 15.—Russell Porter, one of the most widely known Odd Fellows in this state, died yesterday at his home in Lansingburgh. In the order of Odd Fellows Mr. Porter held at the time of his death the position of grand chaplain and degree master of Rensselaer degree lodge. He was justice of the peace at Lansingburgh.

Came Like a Thief in the Night.

Dundas, Ont., Feb. 15.—A blast on Section 20 of the Toronto, Hamilton & Buffalo railway exploded prematurely last evening, injuring three men, one of them seriously. While a workman on the same section named Davis was thawing some dynamite it exploded, blowing the unfortunate man to pieces.

Vanity

is a virtuous vice. The world is better for it. It makes men ambitious—and it makes women careful of their personal appearance. It doesn't take much money to keep well-dressed now-a-days. Cleaning or dyeing makes it possible to use soiled or faded garments. And there's where our ax comes in. We are in the Cleaning and Dyeing business. Our cleaner is ready, and our dyer has his fall shades mixed.

Ask for our little booklet "Re-Freshing Thoughts." It tells about cleaning men's clothing.

CHRISTIAN YOUNG MEN.

youthful blood had added strength of brain and fibre to the Kingdom of God, and the results were evidenced every day by invasion into fields of work unknown even 50 years ago. This was an era of great reforms. Generation after generation had furnished truths and inventions, and it was proper that we should take advantage of them, apply them, and make this world a better one to live in. More liberality prevailed than ever before. Not liberalism—he hated that word, for it meant that you have opinions and I have opinions, but we won't quarrel about them, a practical admission that they were not worth consideration. He admired a man that believed in the great principles, but held opinions as to non-essentials, and stood for them. There was more orthodoxy than ever before, but the heretics were fewer than in the Middle Ages.

Strikes were a wholesome sign of the times. The Brooklyn street-car strike was an example where honest men could have a fight out with honest capitalists. Reform was in the air, especially in New York, where nobody must call himself a dictator. The day of bosses was past. How to make life worth living was the great sociological problem, and there was a better conception of character than ever before. The press stands as the preventive of public immorality. It was a selfish man who only tried to save himself and the church. They should concentrate their efforts on delivering the world from sin.

Miss Jennie Hoover followed with the following report on the women's auxiliary:

REPORT OF WOMEN'S AUXILIARY.

About two months ago at the invitation of your General Secretary four ladies, representing the Women's Auxiliary Societies of Newark, Jersey City, Trenton and Paterson, met at Newark and decided to have a Conference of Women's Auxiliary Societies of the Young Men's Christian Associations of New Jersey. At this meeting a programme was made out, and the invitation of the Newark Auxiliary to hold the conference at Newark Jan. 31, 1895, was accepted. If the women of the executive committee had all been—shall I say it—deeply-dyed Presbyterians, they might have said, only by fore-ordination could this first annual conference have been such a success, so enthusiastically did the majority of the different Auxiliaries respond to the invitation, so promptly was the programme carried out, so cordially were the guests greeted and so hospitably were they entertained.

Nineteen Auxiliaries were represented, seven corresponding members were present, and 300 delegates. The president of the Newark Auxiliary gave the address of welcome, and a royal welcome it was, which was responded to by a representative of East Orange Auxiliary, who showed us how ancient and firm were the foundations of the Women's Auxiliary, foundations which were laid when Mother Eve became an aid, an auxiliary to Adam.

The paper on "The Purposes of the Women's Auxiliary" emphasized the constructive power of the Young Men's Christian Association, and the purpose of the Auxiliary to aid in that constructive power.

The Bible reading by Mrs. Ellis of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, was impressive, instructive and uplifting.

The interesting paper, "How Best to Interest the Members of the Auxiliary in the Work of Association", by the President of the Trenton Auxiliary, told the very pathetic origin of the Women's Auxiliary, the outgrowth of a mother's love for a prodigal son in a far-off country.

The Open Parliament called out more questions than there was time for answers, and made one think of the good old Methodist hymn,

"Speak and let your wants be known,
Speaking will relieve you."

It also showed there were some subjects so vital that women were not afraid even to speak out in meeting about them, especially if such means as Parlor Rugby, Mystery Social, and Progressive Conversational Teas were suggested as ways to fill the empty treasury of the Auxiliary.

A very suggestive paper on "The Auxiliary and Junior Work", was read by Mrs. Cutler of the Morristown Auxiliary, who showed very conclusively if you would save the men, you must save the boys.

The first annual conference of the Women's Auxiliary was an inspiration to all who attended it. We all felt it was good to be there. We hope and trust this first conference will bring good to all the Young Men's Christian Associations of New Jersey.

Before closing, President Siegfried announced the following committees:

Committee on Nominations—J. H. McGraw, Madison; Fred McGeer, Orange; F. B. Hoagland, Paterson.

Committee on Temporary Organization—H. A. Cozzens, Newark; W. R. Eadie, Morristown; F. W. Longstroth, Rahway.

THIS MORNING'S SESSION.

The morning session convened in the Assembly Hall in the Association Building at 9:30, with President Siegfried in the chair. The first number on the programme was a Bible hour, conducted by J. H. Elliott of Clifton Springs, N. Y., who took for his subject "The Power by the Spirit".

Mr. Elliott had an entertaining manner of handling his subject, and the young men were attentive listeners, and found much in his talk that will greatly aid them in successfully fulfilling the work in which they are engaged.

He said that the work of God begins with life, and thus the teacher must do likewise properly to inspire his subject with the ideas and principles that it is desired to convey. The spirit of God will never make up for the neglect of men, and it is their duty to testify to His power.

This address was followed by the report of the Committee on Permanent Organization, which was adopted. The report recommended the election of the following officers:

President—W. D. Murray of Plainfield.

Vice Presidents—W. D. Porter of Summit, and B. A. Hegeman of Plainfield, General Traffic Manager the D. L. & W. R.R.

Secretaries—G. T. Lambert of the Somerville School, and G. Davis of Madison.

On motion they were duly elected, and in vacating the chair Mr. Siegfried made a few remarks of regret and expressing hope that the Association would continue with increased growth and prosperity. President Murray was welcomed to the presidency with applause.

He said he considered it an honor reflecting more on the Plainfield Association, then on himself individually, which resulted in his choice as the executive officer of the organization. He took occasion to announce that the meetings would be opened punctually at the announced hours.

An oral review of 1894 was next conducted by Sumner F. Dudley of Orange. The facts developed during their hour were concise, but showed that as a whole the Associations were very prosperous, financially and spiritually. Some of the topics on which reports were made were: Efficiency of spiritual work; improvements in educational classes and difficulty of creating a proper appreciation of the work in their line; difficulty of enthusing active members into doing efficient work; prevalence of apathy among citizens towards the interests of the Association; dropping off of sustaining members by reason of hard times; increased and limited accommodations; condition of finances.

Detailed reports in writing were handed by the delegates from their respective Association.

The morning session closed with a talk by Edwin F. See of Brooklyn, on "The Esprit de Corps in Association Work".

This afternoon simultaneous sectional conferences in various rooms of the building are being held, and parlor conferences of various departments in private homes.

The convention service of the Y. M. C. A. tonight at the Crescent Avenue Church will be one of great interest.

B. Frank Butts will conduct the song service, and sing Gospel solos.

The address of the evening will be given by Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D., of Brooklyn, and the mere mention of his name should be sufficient to give assurance of a large audience.

The public is cordially invited to attend all the services of the Y. M. C. A. Convention that are held in the Association Rooms tomorrow. At 9:15, the Bible hour will be conducted by J. H. Elliott. At 10:15 Walter C. Douglass of Philadelphia will speak on the topic, "Our Responsibility to Young Men Who Confess Christ in Our Meetings"; and at 11 a. m. W. B. Miller of New York will speak on "Association Educational Work."

The seven sectional conferences are also open to all friends.

The delegates to the Y. M. C. A. convention are young men who convey an impression of earnestness and sincerity of purpose, and possess an intelligent and substantial appearence in their demeanor. That their mission in attending this convention will be fruitful of much benefit and instruction, can be doubted by no one, and they'll help spread the news of Pirindfield's glories.

TODAY IN HISTORY.

Short Stories of Heroism from Real Life.

Saving the Day at Donelson.

Feb. 15, 1862, decided the fate of the Confederates at Fort Donelson. Finding themselves completely hemmed in, the garrison made a desperate sortie and opened a road of retreat. Grant, after looking the ground over, exclaimed, "The position must be retaken." A column was formed, with General C. F. Smith's division on the left and Lew Wallace's on the right. The ground in front of Smith was covered with abatis, which, his men declared, "looked too thick for a rabbit to get through." Smith rode in front of the center, erect as if on review, a bold target for the Confederate sharpshooters. A soldier, describing the charge, said, "I was nearly scared to death, but I saw the old man's white mustache over his shoulder and went ahead." At the abatis the men fell in rows. The fire was awful, and seeing some wavering Smith put his cap on his sword, swung it high in the air and shouted: "No flinching now, my lads. Come on!" Picking a path among the trees, the men followed after their gallant chief up the hill and planted their colors on the breastworks—the flags of the Second, Seventh and Fourteenth Iowa and Twenty-fifth Indiana.

Wallace's division was led by the Eleventh Indiana zouaves and the Eighth Missouri under Colonel Morgan L. Smith. Colonel Smith lit a cigar and guided his men up the ascent, deploying to cover the entire front and cheering as they went. Under the crest there was a slight halt. Smith's cigar had been shot away in the climb, and taking out another he called for a match. One was handed him by a soldier. "Thank you," said he. "Take your place now. We are almost up." The men began loading and firing, and after a brief struggle on the crest, ended by the rushing of Wallace's supporting brigades, the whole line moved forward, driving the enemy back from the coveted ridge.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognise her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,
of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,
Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

The Plainfield Boys Had No Intent to Kill Evans.

The jury on the Kane-Welsh trial at Elizabeth court yesterday went out at 11:30 a. m. as stated exclusively in The Press, and did not return until 8:30 p. m. when the foreman rendered for the jury a verdict for acquittal on the charge of manslaughter, basing their opinion, as was stated afterward in conversation with a party of newspaper men on the facts set forth by Judge Coddington in his eloquent plea to the effect, first, that the bullet decended at sharp angle instead of assending as it would have done, (as conclusively proved by Surveyor Quien's diagrams and charts), had it been fired by the boys, second, that testimony of Hospital surgeons that probes were introduced into Evans's head in various directions other than that taken by the bullet, which fact doubtless hastened death; and third, that the State had either lost or would not produce the bullet extracted, so that the jury might compare it with a 22-calibre cartridge bullet which fitted the gun used. Great rejoicing is felt by the boys' friends in this city over the verdict, and congratulations are pouring in on Judge Coddington from all sides for his masterful handling of the case.

THE ESCAPE.

How a Young Lover Narrowly Averted an Expensive Trip.

"Darling," she said, as she nestled closer to him and looked up with a fond gaze into the eyes of her lover, "you know all the preparations for our wedding have been made. The cards are out, my trousseau is complete, but there is one little matter that has not yet been settled."

"I presume you refer, dear," he replied, lovingly holding her hand in his, "to our wedding trip?"

"You have guessed it, you dear, sweet boy," she cried joyfully, "and let's decide where we will go."

"Let me see," taking out his notebook. "There's Niagara and Washington and Old Point Comfort and"—

"No dear," she interrupted, "I don't want to go to any of those places."

"Perhaps you would like to go to some real quiet place," he continued, "where we could be all alone by ourselves. But, my darling, what is the matter with you? You are not ill, are you?"

Her face had become ashen pale. Controlling herself by a supreme effort, she said: "Can you not guess it? Don't you see where I want to go." And she whispered something in his ear.

Two hours later the figure of a solitary man might have been seen scurrying along to find the reserved seat sale for Lillian Kennedy in "She Could n't Marry Three.

PARKHURST'S BOOK.

HIS TREATISE ON THE GREAT FIGHT WITH THE TIGER.

His Motto: No Alliance With Police, and No Quarter to Be Shown. Why the Divine Made His Tours of Observation Into the Realms of Vice.

Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst's new book, entitled "Our Fight with Tammany," published by Charles Scribner's Sons, treats of various subjects of public interest. At the outset the distinguished author says:

"Intimation had been given that the gauntlet thrown down by the February grand jury would be taken up by us in my pulpit of March 13. The ordinary furniture of the pulpit, in the shape of Bible and hymn books, was on that occasion supplemented by a copious package of affidavits."

He quotes his text of that day, "The wicked walk on every side where the vilest men are exhalted." (Psalms xii).

Of the powers of the pulpit fulminations against corruption, the author maintains that they are honest, intelligent and untrammeled. He adds:

"And I am saying what I know. I uttered only thirty minutes of indictment against the blood sucking scoundrels that are drawing the veins of our body municipal, and they were all set wriggling like a lot of muck worms in a hot shovel. I am not such a fool as to suppose that it was the man that said it that did the work, nor that it was what was said that did the work; for it has been said a hundred times before with more thoroughness and detail.

"It was the pulpit that did the work. Journalistic roasting these vagabonds will enjoy and grow cool over. But when it is clear that the man who speaks it is speaking it, not for the purpose of putting money into his pocket or power into his party, but is speaking it because it is true, and, in speaking it, appreciates its oracular authority as one commissioned of God to speak it, there is a suggestion of the judgement idea abouh it, there is a presentiment of the invisible God back of it, that knots the stringy conscience of these fellows into contortions of terror."

Dr. Parkhurst next describes how his policy of hostility to the police first took shape. He said that a short time before he became familiar with certain facts which make out a large feature in the life of the city, and having a special concern for the welfare of the young men of his congregation, he was interested in any means by which he could operate to reduce the strain of current temptation, and make it a little easier for a city young man to maintain himself in his best. Dr. Parkhurst moved in the direction of gambling and social evil. The first obstruction encountered was the police. He discovered that their principal object was to protect and foster crime for gain.

Dr. Parkhurst admits that it took the members of his society some months to learn that a raid was not to be taken seriously. He says:

"If there are two notorious gambling houses or disorderly houses side by side and one of them is raided, and the other not, only a fool will imagine that there was any more honesty in raiding one of the two than in leaving the other unraided. That coure of procedure has obtained in this city and obtains to-day.

"Nothwithstanding all this spasmodic activity that prevailed during the months of April and May, the Society for the Prevention of Crime knew, and to some extent the people of the town suspected that there was no change of sentiment or of intention on the part of the Police Department, and if there were to be any improved municipal condition it would have to come from a grand movement and concerted protest on the part of the people at large."

Referring to the excursions he made into the realms of infamy, he has this to say by way of excuse or defense:

"The necessity for such a tour of observation was, to my mind, so transparently necessary that it did not seem advisable to seek any considerable amount of counsel on the matter. I conferred repeatedly with Mr. David J. Whitney, who was one of the most aggressive members of the society, and who, through long warfare with the evil geniuses of our city, had made himself an expert in all that concerned the society's work. He was a man who was very quick in his judgments, but exceedingly liable to be right. He agreed with me that there would be tremendous advantage in being able to speak of the city from out of my own personal acquaintance with it, but omitted no pains to convince me of the poisoned arrows of malignity to which I should be exposed if I made the venture.

"Having decided that destiny was a thing from which there is no escape, it remained to find a safe and congenial spirit whom I could take as my companion. More hinged upon this matter than I could then distinctly foresee. It was necessary that such companion should be a man of unimpeachable personal character, and of an established position in the community. Of course it was necessary, also, that he should undertake the work, not out of any hasty or uncertain impulse, but purely out of devotion to the cause which the work represented.

"Nevertheless, in full view of all that has passed, and in spite of all in the way of vicious criticism and honest misunderstanding that has ensued, I am still obliged to say that the course I took was the only course that could have been taken; and that, under like circumstances, I would repeat precisely the same policy. No rhetoric that I might have availed of, and no theories of the situation that I might have promulgated, would ever have begun to take the place of my being able to say: 'I know.'

"I may be permitted to say that when I stood in my pulpit shortly after, and, on the strength of my own personal knowledge, repeated in more detail the charges for which I had just been 'presented,' I felt clear to the center of my being that I was in a position from which no District Attorney, no Grand Jury, and no Justice Martine, or any of his ilk, could ever shake me."

Sweet Alice Up to Date.

Oh, do you remember sweet Alice, Ben Bolt,
Sweet Alice, whose hair was so brown?
It has changed to a hydrogen blonde, I am told,
Since sweet Alice moved into town.

AN EGG ROMANCE.

A Youngstown Girl and Her Brittle Love Letter.

A young man of Woonsocket, who is employed in a grocery, in filling an order for eggs about four months ago saw that one of the number had something written on the shell in pencil. This one he laid aside until the customer had gone, and then proceeded to examine it more closely.

The following lines were written plainly on the shell:

If this egg in course of time
A young unmarried man may see,
Who is to married life inclined,
I ask that he will write to me.
Direct to Jane Eliza Blair,
Youngstown, Ohio, and depend
Such letters sent will find me there,
An answer I will quickly send.

The young man, who is unmarried, and who is an admirer of poets and poetry, and who writes very fair verses himself, lost no time in an endeavor to find out the writer of the lines on that egg.

His zeal was rewarded, as in due time after sending a letter he received a reply from Miss Blair, in which she explained that her father raised poultry, and she was sometimes engaged in helping him pack and ship eggs.

Being of a romantic turn of mind, she one day wrote on the egg, and was glad to find that it reached a person who was kind enough to comply with her request.

The answer of the young lady brought about a constant correspondence, each of the interested parties sending a letter each week. Photographs have been exchanged, and each has expressed more than common admiration for the other.

"In fact, it looks like a romantic marriage, particularly so as the father of the young woman seems well satisfied, as he has written the young man and extended an invitation to visit him next summer.

To This Are We Coming.

Twenty-five years more of development in our houses, hotels and restaurants, if conducted on present lines, will produce an enormous ducking and scraping, fee seeking, livery wearing servant class, which will go far to establish the claim, put forth by some of our critics, that equality on this side of the water means only political equality, and that our class distinctions, though not so obvious, are no less genuine than elsewhere. In this event the only logical note of explanation to send to the Powers will be that social equality was never contemplated by the signers of the Declaration of Independence; and that, though it is true that any man may become President of the United States, there are as great inequalities in morals, intellect and manners among sons of liberty as among the subjects of the Czar. To this the Powers will be justified in uttering a disappointed and slightly ironical "Oh!"—Robert Grant, in Scribner.

Retributive Fate.

Twenty years ago a young man married one of the smartest young ladies anywhere round, and the young couple seemed to start in life with every prospect of happiness. But the girl was ambitious to be rich, and because she was not was very much dissatisfied. After keeping her husband in a peck of trouble for a time, she left him and got a divorce. He went into bankruptcy and she very soon married a wealthy man and rode behind a span in an elegant carriage. To-day the former bankrupt is wealthy and prosperous, has a new wife and a happy home. Every comfort surrounds them. His wife of other days now lives in poverty and has to scrub for the bread she eats. Her husband's wealth under poor management shrank to worse than nothing. The roses have gone from her cheeks and the light from her eyes. It's as complete a turn around as one ever saw.—Lewiston Journal.

Skated In Her Bare Feet.

A pretty eighteen-year-old girl created quite a sensation in the east end lately; and for an hour a score of men watched her as she glided about on the ice. She was a graceful skater, and every movement was Delsartean in its perfection. It was not her grace and beauty that attracted the men. It was her bare feet which gleamed in and out beneath her skirt as each foot was thrust gracefully forward. The foot was such a one as described by Du Maurier in his "Trilby." The coloring was perfect, and now and then as the wind switched her skirts the glimpse of a perfect ankle and sometimes even the swell of a shapely calf was seen. It was this that attracted the men. They wondered that the cold did not make her suffer, but it seemed unnoticed. Her mother finally appeared, and, after much cheerful persuasion and a little force, the girl was induced to remove her skates, don her shoes and stockings, and leave. With her departure the crowd rapidly dwindled away.—Louisville Post.

A Hint to Would-be Orators.

Apropos of Lord Randolph Churchill, an incident may be related which is interesting as showing his pluck and vigor. It relates to the noble lord's early parliamentary life. He was determined to make an impression upon the House of Commons, but some of his friends doubted the wisdom of his resolution. He said little, but he left London and took up his quarters at an inn in Rutlandshire. Here he spent his days and nights for a period of six weeks, with only an occasional trip to town for a day, in writing and delivering speeches. He practically went into training upon every possible subject of debate. The landlady could hear her lodger hour after hour, day after day, walking about his room delivering speeches, now loud and angry, now soft and persuasive. Perfected by practice, Lord Randolph Churchill left for town, seized his opportunity, made a big speech, and henceforth became a man to be reckoned with. Only to his intimate friends did he ever refer to his rural training in parliamentary oratory, which has been of such splendid service to him.—Tit-Bits.

A Kaiser's Uniforms.

The task of looking after the uniforms and other costumes of the Emperor William is by no means a sinecure. All these different and greatly varying articles of attire, as diversified as those at the disposal of a star actor, are carefully kept, systematically arranged and in large wardrobes, and at the head of the department is an official entitled the Obergarderobier, who has under his command two valets de chambres. The nautical uniforms are placed under the charge of an ex-sub-officer of the German navy. Before the Emperor undertakes any one of his many expeditions the Obergarderobier is provided with an exhaustive list of all the dress and other paraphernalia that will be required.—Tit-Bits.

THE SUN'S FASHIONS.

HINTS FOR THE FRUGAL WOMAN WHO MAKES HER OWN ATTIRE.

The Skirt Is the Most Troublesome Member of the Modern Wardrobe. Some Examples of Pretty and Becoming Bodices.

In this dull period between winter and summer fashions, when all the new ideas have become old and novelties rare, there is time to consider the possibilities of the home-made gown and some individuality in dress in connection with simplicity and that economy so needful to the woman with a limited allowance and extravagant tastes. It is somewhat difficult to reconcile the growing tendency to extravagance in fashion with the dwindling incomes of the past year, yet there never was a time when a last season's gown could be made over with any greater degree of success, from a fashionable point of view, and all because of the variety of materials admissible in one dress. In the midst of a season of so much magnificence in attire, such rich velvets and brocades, satins, furs, and gorgeous trimmings, a simple gown well made, and worn with a stylish grace, has some chance to gain distinction. It is a novelty because of its plainness. Good taste and a well proportioned figure are a fortune to the woman who would be fashionably dressed on a small amount of money, and if she will only study herself and adapt the fashions to her individual needs, by avoiding exaggerations and making them harmonize with her particular style and coloring, she will find that she is quite as attractive in simple inexpensive attire as she would be in any of the most elaborate creations, and certainly she who possesses neither taste nor a good figure can better master the art of dressing well if she avoids extremes in fashion and keeps to the simpler modes of dress.

The most successful gown, like the most attractive home, is the one which is exactly suited to the woman inside of it, and has something of her individuality in its fashioning. At present the chief difficulty in making a fashionable gown at home lies in the skirt, which seems to need a skilled dressmaker to manipulate its fulness; but it is not the extreme full one which is the most popular, so with a good pattern the medium skirt, flaring at the sides and well out in godet plaits at the back, can easily be made a success while the full bodices, so youthful and becoming, cover no end of deficiencies in the shape of lining underneath. The fancy for spangled materials and ribbons for dress trimmings can be indulged with very little expense by sewing the spangles on at home, which is very easily done. Ribbons spangled a very little on the edge or in vertical lines at intervals make a very effective, inexpensive trimming, which can be arranged for neckbands, belts, and braces over the shoulders.

A simple home dress for morning wear is made of serge or a fine mixed tweed. The fulness in the bodice is brought over to form two box plaits in front at the belt of black satin ribbon, which starts from beneath the arm, passes beneath the plaits, and ties in a bow in front. The circular basque is sewed on instead of being cut in one with the waist. Seven yards of double width goods will make this gown. Another model is carried out in a mixed black and gray wool goods, which can be bought at greatly reduced prices just now. The wide cape revers, which form a collar in the back, open over a black satin vest and cross at the waist, where they fasten with two handsome buttons.—N. Y. Sun.

A Sad Mistake.

She was ordering a pair of bicycle bloomers from a man dressmaker who had formerly catered exclusively to the male trade.

"You will want two hip pockets, I suppose?" he said.

"Yes," replied the emancipated one.

"Er—pint or quart size?" asked the man milliner with a faraway look in his eye.

She glared at him for a moment, and then for the first time he noticed that she wore a W. C. T. U. badge!

As she flounced out of the door he kicked himself several times in the same place.

Happy Thought.

An elderly woman, being jealous of her husband, determined to commit suicide, and was about to throw herself into the river, when she suddenly exclaimed:

"Good gracious! I have left the pantry door open and the cat will get in."

So saying, she hurried off home, and since then she has made no further attempt to do away with herself.—Berliner Morgenzeitung.

Local Representatives Wanted.

Our system affords an opportunity to borrow on either personal or real estate security. The plan is superior to building and loan associations. The amount borrowed may be returned in monthly payments without bonus, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum. It affords absolute security to investors with a reasonable guarantee of an annual dividend of from 8 to 10 per cent. We desire to secure the services of energetic, representative men in every community to act as local secretaries. The position will be sufficiently remunerative to amply compensate for services. FOUR TIMES MARRIED

Mrs. Pratt's Marital Woes Break the Record.

The Same Man for a Groom on Each Occasion, But Yet the Woman Was Never a Wife—The Pretty Young Typewriter Brings Her Fourth Suit for Divorce.

New York, Feb. 15.—On the calendar of the superior court is a suit for separation, the plaintiff in which, although she is too young to bring suit in her own name, has, according to her affidavit, been four times married, always, however, to the same man, once has figured as co-respondent in a divorce suit, and is now bringing her fourth legal action against the man she claims to be her husband. During her experience in the courts she has figured under three different names, and has had an equal number of lawyers.

The present suit she brings as Mrs. Maggie Pratt and the defendant named is Spencer Charles Pratt, who is in the butter and cheese business at No. 135 Reade street, and who lives at No. 113 MacDonough street, Brooklyn.

He Took an Interest in Her.

About three years ago Mr. Pratt engaged Maggie Finnerty as a stenographer and type writer in his Reade street store. The girl was only 17 then and a very pretty brunette. Mr. Pratt soon took a good deal of interest in her and began to pay her some attention. She says that although he was then married, he induced her to consent to a marriage in New Jersey, telling her that it would make her his legal wife in that state at any rate. This ceremony was performed at Rahway May 12, 1892, and both were married under assumed names, Pratt taking that of Harry Spencer, while the girl was married as Maggie Finley.

Lived as Man and Wife.

The couple then lived together as man and wife, but the girl being uneasy because of their marriage under assumed names, insisted on a second ceremony. This was performed by the Rev. Mr. Hobbs, of Bayonne, N. J., June 14, 1892. In November of the same year May Ella Ritchie, Mr. Pratt's legal wife, secured a divorce from him, Miss Finnerty being named as co-respondent. The suit was not defeated.

Miss Finnerty, or Mrs. Pratt, as she claims to be, if four marriages can make her so, asserts that after the divorce was granted she became Mr. Pratt's legal wife by two common law agreements entered into at Philadelphia July 4, 1892, and Oct. 3, 1892. Shortly afterward the couple ceased living together, and in November the young woman under the name of Margaret Finley, began suit for divorce. Summons and complaint were served, but the suit was dropped. A suit for breach of promise and fraud was begun by Howe & Hummel, but discontinued, as the girl insisted that she was Mrs. Pratt and was entitled to bring suit as such. A third suit for divorce was then brought, but discontinued, the present suit for separation, in which Thomas McAdam is the girl's attorney, being substituted. The action is in the name of Peter Andrelai, who is Mrs. Pratt's guardian.

Is It Blackmail?

Mr. Pratt has filed an answer to the latest action, in which he characterizes the succession of suits as attempted blackmail.

"I was never legally married to Miss Finnerty," he says, "and this suit is merely an attempt to force a settlement upon me. The court should not support this attempt to extort money from me. About a year ago, when Howe & Hummel were the girl's attorneys, she sued me for $50,000 damages for breach of promise, and her lawyers tried to get me to make a settlement. The suit never came to trial, and now she claims to be my wife and wants a separation."

Mr. Pratt claims that never since he could legally enter into a marriage contract with Miss Finnerty has he done so. The young woman asserts that if the two New Jersey ceremonies are void, the common law agreements made in Philadelphia are binding upon her husband.

Leave was obtained from Judge Freedman to amend the complaint so as to set up Pratt's previous marriage.

They Blew Out the Gas.

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 15.—George Harpool, aged 40 years, and Casey Gregory, 20, of Fairfield, Wayne county, blew out the gas in their room at the Brunswick hotel last night and the day clerk found them dead from asphxiation. They were witnesses before the federal grand jury in a number of whiskey cases. The coroners jury exonerated the hotel keeper.

To the North Pole in a Balloon.

Stockholm, Feb. 15.—M. Andre, an aeronaut, lectured in the Academy of Sciences last evening on his plan to go in a balloon to the North Pole. He thought the trip from Spitzbergen would require several months and would cost 175,000 francs.

WILL CLEVELAND DO IT?

Four Per Cent. Bonds May Be Printed and Delivered to the Syndicate.

Washington, Feb. 15.—The time for the president to formally ratify the contingent agreement with the Morgan-Belmont syndicate to purchase $65,000,000 in gold by selling to it $62,000,000 in 4 per cent. thirty years bonds on the 3¾ per cent. interest basis, does not expire until Feb. 18. The opinion is, however, expressed in financial circles that the president will regard the action of the house as indicative of its purpose not to pass any gold bond measure and that he will at once order 4 per cent. coin bonds printed and delivered to the syndicate.

Already about $10,000,000 in gold has been paid in by the syndicate and from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000 in gold is also on the water enroute from Europe to this county to pay for the bonds. Some of the gold will also come from Canada.

Interests on the bonds will begin when the gold for them is deposited, after the president formally accepts the syndicates offer, whether the bonds are ready for delivery or not.

MAYOR STRONG'S BAD FAITH.

Brookfield's Appointment a Severe Blow to Platt.

New York, Feb. 15.—The Tribune today says in regard to the breach between Mayor Strong and Thomas C. Platt:

Mr. Platt charges of bad faith against Mayor Strong are hardly creditable to the ex-senator's sagacity. Even if it were true it was impolitic for him to make them at this time, but as they are not true it is difficult to see any advantage to Mr. Platt in making them at all. Of course, they never would have been made except by a man whose position had become desperate, as is the case with Mr. Platt at the present moment. He has been beaten. Mr. Brookfield's appointment is the worst possible blow that he could receive. It has staggered him. Forty-eight hours before its announcement he told newspaper friends that such a thing was impossible. Consequently when it came he was entirely unprepared for it.

THE WHITE HOUSE BRILLIANT.

Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland Give a Reception—Pretty Young Ladies There.

Washington, Feb. 15.—The president and Mrs. Cleveland gave a reception to the army and navy and marine corps last night. It was perhaps the most brilliant of the white house functions given during this gay season. Mrs. Cleveland was assisted by the wives of the cabinet officers in receiving the numerous guests. Behind the receiving line stood a brilliant group of young ladies who chatted gaily with the guests who dropped in after passing the hostess of the evening.

The great east room was a swaying mass of people and the abundant flowers and rich toilets worn by the ladies and the showy and golden uniforms of the officers, made doubly so by innumerable electric lights shining through fern and ivy, formed a scene animated, picturesque and beautiful to behold.

ANARCHISM IN AUSTRIA.

Imperial Government Assailed—Violent Scenes in the Bohemian Diet.

London, Feb. 15.—The Daily News correspondent in Vienna says: "There was a violent scene in the Bohemian diet yesterday when the young czechs assailed the imperial government for continuing the state of siege in Prague. Dr. Gregr, the young czech leader, declared that the people were being driven towards anarchism and soon would repudiate the authority of Austria.

Governor Count Thun, who replied in German, was greeted with angry shouts of "speak czech!" "He is a paid official and must speak czech for our money." His speech throughout was drowned in the fury of the opposition. In the fragments heard he told Gregr that, but for the immunity of deputies, his reference to Austria would constitute treason. Plotting and anarchism must be suppressed.

FAMILIES DESTITUTE.

Suffering by Extreme Cold Without Food or Fuel; 30 Below Zero.

Denver, Feb. 15.—Reports of suffering among settlers in the eastern part of the state have been received since the extremely cold weather which has been prevalent for the last twenty-six days. Many settlers are destitute of fuel and food. Much stock has already perished on the ranges.

At Julesburg the temperature has ranged from 10 to 30 degrees below zero. The cold seems to be backing against the Rockies from El Paso to Cheyenne. Millions of snow birds and rabbits have been frozen.

Importance of Being Earnest.

London, Feb. 15.—Mr. George Alexander produced at St. James' theatre last evening "The Importance of Being Earnest," a new play by Oscar Wilde. He was strongly supported, especially by Rose Leclercq. "The Importance of Being Earnest" is an excellent refined farce. It was received with almost incessant laughter. Few farces of recent years have been as successful.

Crushed by a Falling Chimney.

Oelwein, Ia., Feb. 15.—The two story frame school house at Lamont, ten miles from here burned to the ground shortly after school opened. The fire started from the furnace. The children became panic stricken. Alfred Brown, a pupil was caught by a falling chimney and his head crushed. He will not recover. Clarence Lake was also badly injured.

Pulitzer Gives Up.

St. Louis, Feb. 15.—The announcement is made that Col. Chas. H. Jones, formerly of the Republic and more recently the New York World has secured a controlling interest in the Post Dispatch and at once assumes control of that paper. Mr. Pulitzer's reason for disposing of the paper is failing health and inability to give personal attention.

His Resignation Denied.

St. Johns, N. F., Feb. 15.—The reported resignation of Governor O'Brien is untrue. The report probably arose through the fact that the governor's regular term expires on February 17, but he expects to remain in office until June next.

ANOTHER DAY'S DEBATE

Nothing To Help the Financial Situation Expected.

Congress Refuses To Issue $65,000,000 Three Per Cent. Bonds—Mr. Bryan Criticises President Cleveland's Actions—Compensation for Special Mail Facilities.

Washington, Feb. 15.—Another day's debate in the house upon the financial question has but served to emphasize the fact that no legislation affecting the financial situation is to be expected from the 53d congress. A week ago, the house refused, by a vote of 162 to 126, to adopt the last Springer banking and currency bill which contained a provision authorizing the issue of long time, low interest bonds, and yesterday, by the still more decisive vote of 167 to 120, it declined to authorize the issue of 65,000,000 3 per cent gold bonds with which to replace the 3¾ per cent. bonds negotiated with the Morgan-Belmont syndicate in payment for the purchase of 3,500,000 ounces of gold coin. The consideration of the joint resolution for this purpose reported yesterday from the committee on ways and means, by Chairman Wilson, occupied all the session of six and one half hours, and the discussion attracted an attendance of spectators which overflowed the public galleries, and encroached upon that reserved for the diplomatic corps and other distinguished visitors. The debate followed, in a general way the lines of the debate on the Springer bill last week, but the opposition yesterday was much more aggressive than on that occasion.

He Scores Cleveland.

In his speech before the house Mr. Bryan (dem., Neb.) said that when he took the oath of office to serve as congressman there was no mental reservation to denounce an outrage upon the people, even though it was perpetrated by the president of the United States.

"The president of the United States is but a human being," he continued, "he is a man. We trust the administration of government to men, and when we do so, we know that men are liable to err. When men are in public office, we cannot expect that they can make no mistakes, and I am not willing to concede that even so exalted an officer as the president of the United States cannot make mistakes. And if the president does make a mistake, what ought congress to do? Ought congress to blindly approve his mistake, or do we owe it to the people of the United States to correct the mistake so that it shall not be made again?

"Gentlemen will say that we owe a great deal to the president. I want to say to my democratic friends that there is no great debt of gratitude which the democratic party owes to its president. What gratitude ought we to feel?

"The gratitude that the confiding ward feels to his guardian without bond who has squandered a rich estate; the gratitude of the passenger upon the train toward the switchman who has opened the switch and precipitated a wreck. What has he done for the party?

Injects Republican Virus.

"He has attempted to vaccinate the democratic party with republican virus."

Mr. Hopkins said in part: "The president should not be permitted to prostitute the interests of the country, disarrange its financial system and bring disgrace upon the people for the benefit of a foreign syndicate. It is time, I think, to indicate that we can be patriotic without endorsing all the financial vagaries contained in this contract. I am about tired of hearing it said that if you don't support the administration in its financial measures you are not patriotic. I want republicans to remember the history of their own leaders in these positions and to be guided in their actions by that recollection." (Applause.)

Railway Compensation.

The struggle which as been going on in the senate for the last three or four days over the question of railroad compensation for special mail facilities was taken up again and continued, with slight interruption, until the senate adjourned. And even then the question was not finally disposed of. The order of proceedings was in this way: First came a vote on the point of order made against the amendment reported by the committee on appropriations giving the postmaster-general full discretion as to the expenditures of the amount, and repealing all laws contrary thereto. The friends of the existing condition voted to sustain the point of order, and the amendment was ruled out, by a vote of 39 to 17. That was the first defeat for the committee on appropriations. Its second defeat was an amendment offered by Mr. Blackburn (dem., Ky.) for a 10 per cent. reduction of the existing rates to railroad companies. This was laid on the table by a vote of 42 to 19.

Under Government Control.

Mr. Vilas' (dem., Wis.) proposition that the government shall own and manage the postal cars was laid on the table by a still larger majority, 53 to 10. The third defeat of the committee on appropriations was on its amendment to strike out the item of $196,000 for the fast southern mail service from Springfield, Mass., Atlanta and New Orleans. That amendment was rejected—yeas, 27; nays, 33, and the item remains in the bill.

Asleep on His Post.

Putnam, Conn., Feb. 15.—James Otis, 30 years old, and married, a resident of Norwich and brakeman of a freight train was sent to flag a train near Alexander's lake in Dayville. He sat on the track and was struck by a freight train from Norwich, his body being cut in two. It is supposed that he went to sleep.

Bodies from the Wreck.

Liverpool, N. S., Feb. 15.—Six bodies from the wrecked American schooner Clara B. Friend were buried in Brooklyn cemetery yesterday. They were followed to the grave by a large number of citizens and fishermen from vessels in port.

GENERAL GRANT.

How Near His Personal Memoirs Came to be Lost.

A Valuable History Written by a Dying Man.—Proper Nourishment Enabled the Author to Live Until the Completion of His Book.

The fortitude shown by General Grant in writing the second volume of his personal memoirs while he was literally on his deathbed, excels even the remarkable courage exhibited by this famous soldier in his many achievements on the field of battle.

Col. Fred Grant, speaking of his father's last illness, says:—

"During the last four months of his sickness, the principal food of my father, Gen. Grant, was Bovinine and milk; and it was the use of this incomparable food alone that enabled him to finish the second volume of his personal memoirs."

Dr. T. H. Douglas, Gen. Grant's physician and friend, cordially indorsed the above statement.

What Bovinine did for Gen. Grant it has done, and is now doing, for thousands every day. It is the most wonderful concentration into a small bulk of all the life-giving, muscle, flesh, and blood-making elements of lean, raw meat ever produced.

It is in no way a medicine, simply a food invigorant, that by its strengthening qualities gives the worn-out or disordered vital centres of the body an impetus that again starts them performing their natural functions.

It is indorsed by eminent physicians everywhere, and blessed by thousands whose lives it has actually saved.

To neglect to use this wonderful food in all cases of debility, wasting diseases, overwork, stomach and nerve diseases, or for weak infants, chronic invalids, loss of vitality in old age, is to throw away one of the greatest chances of saving life.

Almost any pilot will tell you that his work is much more difficult than you imagine; but the pilots of the Hugli know that they have one hundred miles of the most dangerous river on earth running through their hands—the Hugli between Calcutta and the Bay of Bengal—and say nothing. Their service is picked and sifted as carefully as the bench of the supreme court, for a judge can only hang the wrong man, but a careless pilot can lose a four thousand ton ship with crew and cargo in less time than it takes to reverse the engines.

There is very little chance of getting off again when once you touch in the furious current of this river loaded with all the fat silt of the fields of Bengal, where soundings change two feet between tides and new channels make or efface themselves in a season. Men have fought the Hugli for two hundred years till, now, the river owns a huge building with drawing, survey and telegraph departments devoted to its exclusive service, as well as a body of wardens who are called the port commissioners.

They and their officers govern absolutely from the Hugli bridge to the last buoy at Pilot's Ridge, one hundred and forty miles away, and out in the Bay of Bengal, where the steamers first pick up the pilots from the brig.

A Hugli pilot does not bring papers aboard or scramble up rope ladders. He arrives in his best clothes with a native servant or assistant to wait on him, and he behaves as a man should who can earn ten thousand dollars a year after twenty years' apprenticeship. He has beautiful rooms in the port office at Calcutta, and generally keeps himself to the society of his own profession, for though the telegraph reports the more important soundings of the river daily there is much to be learned between trip and trip.

Some millions of tons of shipping must find their way to and from Calcutta each twelve-month, and unless the Hugli were watched as closely as men watch the Atlantic cables there is a fear that it might silt up as it has silted up round the old Dutch and Portugese ports twenty and thirty miles behind Calcutta. So the port office sounds and scours and dredges and builds spurs and devices for coaxing currents and labels all the buoys with their proper letters and attends to the semaphores and the lights and the drum, ball and cone storm signals, and the pilots of the Hugli do the rest, but in spite of all the care the Hugli swallows a ship or two every year.

When Martin Trevor had followed this life from his boyhood; when he had risen to be a senior pilot entitled to bring up to Calcutta the big ships drawing over twenty-four feet that can (or could till a few years ago) only pass by special arrangement; when he had talked nothing but Hugli and pilotage all his life, he was exceedingly indignant that his only son should decide upon following his father's profession. Mrs. Trevor had died when the boy was a child, and as he grew older Trevor, in the intervals of his business, noticed that the lad was very often by the river side—no nice place for a boy. Once, when he asked him if he could make anything out of the shipping, little Trevor replied by reeling off the list of all the house-flags in sight at the moorings.

"You'll come to a bad end, Jim," said Trevor. "Little boys haven't any business to know house-flags."

"Oh, Pedro at the Sailors' home taught me. He says you can't begin too early."

"At what, please?"

"Piloting. I'm nearly fourteen now and—and I know where all the shipping in the river is, and I know what there was yesterday over the Mayapur bar, and I've been down to Diamond harbor—oh, a hundred times—and I've—"

"You'll go to school, son, and learn what they'll teach you, and you'll turn out better than a pilot," said his father, but he might just as well have told a shovel-nosed porpoise of the river to come ashore and begin life as a hen. Jim held his tongue—he noticed that all the best pilots in the port office did that—and devoted his young attention and all his spare time and money to the river he loved.

Trevor's son became as well known as the Bankshall itself, and the port police let him inspect their launches, and the tug boat captains had always a place for him at table, and the mates of the big steam dredgers used to show him how the machinery worked, and there were certain native rowboats that Jim practically owned; and he extended his patronage to the rail that runs to Diamond harbor, forty miles down the river. In the old days nearly all the East India company's ships used to discharge at Diamond harbor on account of the shoals above, but now ships go straight up to Calcutta, and they have only some moorings for vessels in distress there, and a telegraph service and a harbor master, who was Jim's intimate friend. He would sit in the office and listen to the soundings of the shoals as they were reported every day, and attend to the movements of the steamers up and down (Jim always felt he had lost something if a boat got in or out of the river without his knowing it), and when the big liners, with their rows of burning port holes, tied up in Diamond harbor for the night Jim would row from one ship to the other through the sticky hot air and the buzzing mosquitoes and listen respectfully as the pilots conferred together. Once, for a treat, his father took him down clear out to the sand heads and the pilot brig, and Jim was joyfully sea sick as she tossed and pitched in the bay. So he had to go down three or four times more with friendly pilots till he had cured his weakness. The cream of life, though, was coming up in a tug or a police boat from Diamond harbor to Calcutta over the James and Mary—the terrible sands christened after a royal ship they sunk two hundred years ago. They are made by two rivers that enter the Hugli six miles apart and throw their own silt across the silt of the main stream so that with each turn of weather and tide the sands shift and change like a cloud. It was here, (the tales sound much worse, when they are told in the rush and growl of the muddy waters) that the Countess of Stirling, fifteen hundred tons, touched and capsized in ten minutes; and a two thousand ton steamer in two; and a pilgrim ship in five; and another steamer literally in an instant, holding down her men with the masts and shrouds as she lashed over. When a ship touches on the James and Mary the river knocks her down and buries her and the sands quiver all around her and reach out under water and take new shapes.

Young Jim would lie up in the bows of the tug and watch the straining buoys kick and smother in the coffee-colored red current, and the semaphores and flags signal from the bank how much water there was in the channe till he learned that men who deal with men can afford to be careless on the chance of their fellows being like them; but men who deal with things dare not relax for an instant. "And that's the very reason," old McEwen said to him once, "that the James and Mary is the safest part of the river," and he put the big black Bandoorah that draws twenty-five feet through the Eastern Gat, with a turban of white foam wrapped round her foot and her screw beating as steadily as his own heart.

If Jim could not get away to the river there was always the big, cool port office, where the soundings were calculated and the maps were drawn; or the pilot's-room, where he could lie in a long chair and listen to the talk about the Hugli; and there was the library, where if you had money you could buy charts and books of directions against the time that you actually steamed over the places themselves. It was exceedingly hard for Jim to hold the list of Jewish kings in his head, and he was more than uncertain as to the end of the verb "audio" if you followed it far enough down the page, but he could keep the soundings of three channels distinct in his head and, what is more confusing, the changes in the buoys from Garden Reach down to Saugor, as well as the greater part of the Calcutta Telegraph, the only paper he ever read.

Unluckily, you cannot peruse about the Hugli without money, even though you are the son of the best-known pilot on the river, and as soon as Trevor understood how his son was spending his time he cut down his pocket money; and Jim had a very generous allowance. In his extremity he took counsel with Pedro, the plum-colored mulatto at the sailors' home. And Pedro was a bad man. He introduced Jim to a Chinaman in Machuatellah, a nasty place in itself, and the Chinaman, who answered to the name of Erh-Tze, when he was not smoking opium talked pigeon English to Jim for an hour.

"S'pose you take. Can do?" he said, at last.

Jim considered the chances. A junk he knew would draw about eleven feet, and the regular fee for a qualified pilot outward would be two hundred rupees. On the other hand, he was not qualified, so he could not ask more than half. But, on the other hand, he was fully certain of a thrashing from his father for piloting without license. So he asked one hundred and seventy-five rupees, and Erh-Tze beat him down to a hundred and twenty, and that was like a Chinaman all over. The cargo of his junk was worth anything from fifty to a hundred thousand rupees, and Erh-Tze was getting enormous freight on the coffins of thirty or forty dead Chinamen whom he was taking to be buried in their native country. Rich Chinamen will pay fancy prices for their services, and they have a superstition that the iron of steamships is bad for the health of their dead. Erh-Tze's junk had crept up from Singapore, via Penang and Rangoon, to Calcutta, where Erh-Tze had been staggered by the pilot dues. This time he was going out at a reduction with Jim, who, Pedro said, was just as good as a pilot.

ERH TZE BEAT HIM DOWN TO ONE TWENTY.

[TO BE CONCLUDED.]

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. BOROUGH COUNCIL REVIEWS ITS YEAR.

Departments Better Equipped, and General Improvements Noted—Chief Pangborn Wants More Police—Too Much Pressure on Somerset Street—Mr. Neal Pleads the Worth of the Home Newspaper.

Councilman Neal was welcomed out again after illness, at the meeting of the North Plainfield Borough Council last night, and he participated with vigor in the business of the session. Little was done besides the reception of reports.

The accounting of the Clerk and the Collector having been received and filed, the Auditing Committee gave official endorsement of the fiscal statement, declaring over their signatures that the balances were correct as reported, and the accounts straightforward and accurate.

Chief Marshal Pangborn stated the number of arrests for the year to be 158. Fifteen of these were females. The drunk and disorderly patients were 104. The police station was in good order, and there were no suits pending against the Borough for arrests. Two marshals patrolled the streets at night, but this number was too small to cover the territory properly, and he recommended the appointment of two additional marshals.

The Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps reported that the efficiency of the fire department had been greatly increased during the year by the addition of improved equipment. The system of twelve automatic alarm boxes had cost $2,400, payment being spread over 2½ years. The new wagon, holding 1,500 feet of hose, cost $440. Fourteen hydrants had been added, and twenty-two more street lights.

The Committee on Streets reviewed the macadamizing and other improvements made, and regretted the lack of means to enforce the sidewalk ordinance. Grove street extension, they held, should be speedily made a substantial and permanent roadway, affording another artery to Washington Valley. Somerset street being inconvenient to many whose horses were not accustomed to the trolley cars. The committee dwelt with emphasis on the urgent need of more durable paving of Somerset street throughout its length, macadam being regarded as too light, too transient, and too costly, for the heavy traffic which wears the street. In informal discussion of this previous to the meeting, the Councilmen seemed to favor vitrified brick, which has been recommended for Park avenue and Front street, Plainfield. It was hoped by the committee that the matter of sewerage would take definite shape during the next year, and meanwhile it was unwise to attempt any work on the streets except to keep in repair those portions already macadamized.

These reports were received and filed, and it was ordered that they be printed with the list of delinquent taxpapers as usual each year. The work hitherto has been done in pamphlet form, and the original motion was to print 1,000 pamphlets. Mr. Neal, however, urged the justice of the newspapers' claim that such matters received better circulation through the newspapers than if printed in pamphlet. He said there were two newspapers in the community, and between them they reached every home where these reports were of interest and value. He moved to amend by giving the Committee on Printing the authority to print them in pamphlet form or in the papers, as was in their judgment best. Mr. Valiant argued for the pamphlets as the most convenient form, but the amendment of Mr. Neal was adopted, Mr. Valiant alone voting No. Messrs. Howell, Peck and Lounsbury constitute the Committee on Printing.

The Council adjourned early, without transacting any other business.

The Proper Caper.

It is quite the caper to begin the New Year with measures of improvement, and in repairing habits and customs. Memorizing the Bible.

The Junior Christian Endeavorers of Washingtonville during the past year have been memorizing Bible verses, dates and other items of general information.

In connection with the usual exercises each week, ten questions on memory work are given by one of the members previously appointed by the Superintendent. A few weeks ago the Superintendent suggested that they have a Memory contest reviewing all the work. Hattie Willis and Minnie Diehl were chosen leaders, sides were chosen, and questions asked from one to the other. Much interest was manifested and all did well. Four of the members were able to answer every question of the list given below:

Y. M. C. A. CONVENTION

Delegates Instructed on the Best Methods of Work.

CONFERENCES ON CHRISTIAN PROGRESS.

Addresses by Eminent Divines on Bible Study and Practical Religion—Announcement of Sunday Preachings.

From 2 to 3 yesterday afternoon the time of the Y. M. C. A. convention was taken up with sectional conferences, which occurred simultaneously in the various apartments of the building. Delegates attended those conferences which were to discuss the subject in which they were most engaged at their home association.

Room one—the reading room—was filled with a display of the results of educational work. The exhibit had specimens of courses in free hand, mechanical and architectural drawing and industrial design, leading toward such technical lines as machine construction, boiler making, carriage draughting, wood and metal working, civil, mechanical, architectural and electrical engineering. During the conference hour George B. Hodge of New York, who was in charge of the exhibit, offered many suggestions and instruction to those taking an interest in this subject.

The hour of Bible study, conducted by Rev. J. H. Elliott in the Assembly hall, was conducive of much practical information in this line of work. The subject under consideration was "Methods of Bible Study in Association". In opening Mr. Elliott spoke particularly of getting men interested in the study and actively so. This could only be accomplished by going out among them and by a personal effort on the part of the worker. The best way to teach was collectively. It could be made a success but it meant plenty of perseverance and work.

Such delegates as were interested in the department of men's meetings gathered in room 3, where W. A. Venter of Trenton spoke substantially as follows:

"This question is one which all of us have confronted, one which has been much written and spoken of. There are a number of fundamental principles which should be laid down and followed out before a Gospel meeting can be made a success. First, a great deal of time should be given to the preparation for the service, and second the preparation should be thorough and every detail carefully considered, so that there will be no clashing. Months of preparation are necessary for every service, and the idea that a few moments on Saturday or Sunday is sufficient to arrange the details is a false one. No one with a hobby should be allowed on the platform. A plain, straightforward talk from a business man as to the value of Jesus Christ to the young man is as effective as a more elaborate address given by eminent divines. The speaker should not be asked to occupy more than 25 minutes at the most, for long addresses are tiresome and not productive of the most good. He should be filled with love for man and he should try to impress those out of Christ with the need of Him in their everyday life. The music should be catchy and pleasing. If the meeting is successful pastors and church members will always be found in the audience. The advertising of the service is an important part of the preparation. Printers ink costs money but it pays. Regarding the hall or church in which the service is held, too much emphasis cannot be laid upon the fact that it should be easy of access, and that it be bright and cheerful. The men should be made to feel that they are at home. The man with the ragged coat, wornout shoes and battered hat should be given as good a seat as those who enter in broadcloth and fine linen. Last, but not least, fervent prayer should be offered to God before the meeting, that it be made a success. Have faith in prayer, have faith in God, have faith in man, and believe that if you do your work well the results will surely come. The work of the Y. M. C. A. had its origin in meetings for men. At first nothing was attempted but religious work, and gradually as their association grew in strength, their lines of work increased, until after a time the religious work seemed crowded to the rear, and the social, intellectual and physical departments seemed to take the first place. The pendulum has swung back again, and today more time and effort is being put into the religious work for men than ever before."

It was a gathering of bright-faced lads that surrounded S. F. Dudley of Orange, in room 4, where he talked in a confidential way to the youngsters, and impressed them with the idea that their work in the association was one of importance. The principal ideas talked about were where and when boys department work should be undertaken and the essential points in preparation and organization.

A healthy looking lot of fellows were in room 5 conferring as to physical work. D. A. MacPhie of Plainfield led the discussion and said that the athletic department was a great feature of the association work, but it was only a department contributing its quota to the success of the organization. A man could be a Christian and at the same time an athlete; he could do his work with body as well as mind, and it was a duty to care for the body. Athletics should have a place in every man's heart, but a continual drain on any one portion of his being physically bankrupted him. However, there were other things paramount to athletics in association work. He greatly deplored that athletics had been made a business by exponents of different sports—notably base-ball—for they had led to gambling. Athletics should be admired and enjoyed for the beneficial exercise, rather than for excitement attendant to participation. An informal discussion followed Mr. MacPhie's talk as to what had been accomplished and what had been planned for the coming season.

Owing to the absence of John P. Moore of Albany, who was unable to be present, Arthur Lucas was assigned to look after the conference on "Delegates from small towns and unorganized places". Notwithstanding that Mr. Lucas had no time to prepare or acquaint himself with the theme, he succeeded admirably in making the session an interesting one.

The men who look after the welfare of the begrimed but faithful brakeman, fireman and conductor of the steel roads, were in room 7 discussing with avidity problems that will make their work still more effective. H. G. Peabody, of Trenton, said the object of the Association is to open the eyes of young men to a higher and brighter life, and it was continually holding men back from the clutches of the evil one. Members should not hide their light of inspiration and activity under a basket, but bring it forth at all times, thus setting splendid examples. Each one can do something that no one else is able to do. A wide field of influence and power is open and inviting laborers in their direction. Improvement morally, mentally and physically can be attained through the Association, but not without effort on the part of the individual. H. A. Lessee, of Elmira, N. Y., also gave an interesting paper on "Emergency Work". From 3 to 3:15 a recess was taken, after which all repaired to the hall. The meeting was presided over by Delegate Porter, who had the pleasure of introducing Rev. W. H. Sutton of Montclair, who spoke on "Why Believe the Bible is the Word of God?"

At the conclusion of this address the Business Committee announced that a young men's meeting, conducted by Rev. J. H. Elliott, would be held in Music Hall Sunday afternoon. A report from the Nominating Committee stated that B. A. Hegeman had declined election as one of the vice-presidents, and they nominated E. S. Campbell of New Brunswick to fill the vacancy, and also T. S. Evans of Princeton College to act as third vice-president. The report was accepted and the gentlemen were duly elected.

President Murray announced the following committees:

On Resolutions—Henry Weed, of Somerville; A. S. Frost, of Trenton; John H. Houghton, of Long Branch.

State Committee—J. W. Cleveland, Paterson; H. C. Baker, Hoboken; F. H. Andrews, Plainfield; C. H. Harrington, Camden; C. H. Harris, Hackensack.

EVENING SESSION.

The evening session was called to order by President Murray in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church. After a few verses of Scripture were read and prayer offered, Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D., of Brooklyn was introduced and delivered an address that was attentively listened to by a large audience. He has an extremely earnest manner of delivery, and gave his talk with a vigor that was remarkable for one of his age. He had traveled all the way from Saratoga Springs to be present and fulfil his engagement, though he was afflicted with a troublesome cold. In referring to this fact at the opening of his address, he said it was not in his heart to go back on his brother Jerseymen, for he owed a debt of gratitude to this State. Here it was that his mother had been reared, and here it was that he found a woman who had made one of the best wives that it was the fortune of any man ever to possess. He had received his educational training in the institutions of New Jersey, which had made his course through life far easier than it might otherwise have been. To the delegates he saluted all hail to the Jersey boys of the Lord's army. There was no division here—all were working in common cause to attain the fruits of life and death. The Young Men's Christian Association was a magnificent organization, of which he had been a member for 22 years. It was founded by Christianity and common sense, and was a realization of Christian unity with one purpose to bring young men to Christ by the aid of one book for a teacher and one power for a guide. He related his experiences at the international convention of the Y. M. C. A. held in London last year, as a means of demonstrating to what extent the Association had become recognized as one of the foremost working bodies of the religious world. Even the Church of England-exclusive as it is-extended a warm welcome to this convention of young men, and threw open its doors that they might have every convenience and opportunity for a successful session. All the great royalties attended the session.

The London Common Council voted $10,000 to them for an evening's entertainment. The good Mayor visited the convention, sounding his trumpets before him—as our public men ofttimes do. Queen Victoria extended to them every liberty of inspection of the palace and surroundings—a thing that had seldom occurred before or after. He liked that woman. When at home he is a Republican or Democrat, but when he is in England, he joins with her subjects in singing "God Save the Queen". She is a grand old Christian woman, and he had received many favors from her. It was his great fortune and pleasure of having the personal acquaintance with Sir George Williams, the founder of the Y. M. C. A. He was a man of broad character, and whose life every young man could follow with credit and success. The nucleus of their present Association was formed as the Dry Goods Clerks Association of London. People had ventured the opinion that it would not exist for more than a year, but it had survived for half a century, and was growing in numbers and results every day. Millions of dollars was invested in buildings for their use, and he was glad to hear that Plainfield had added its quota to the great aggregate. Every member realized what a great trust had been reposed in them to carry out the work that had been planned, and it was a late day to speak for the associations—its work evinced what it could accomplish. He believed in denominations, provided they were not sectarian. Since he had left the active service of the ministry in Brooklyn, he had come to see how much good there was in them all. There are some narrow guage ministers, who think that work like the Y. M. C. A. detracts from efforts for the church, and claimed there were those who had too many irons in the fire. This was not so.

The great trouble was that there was too little fire to put the irons in. He had noticed the young man who worked the hardest in the Association, also worked the hardest in his church. The devil never sleeps; all his haunts are illuminated every night, but the Association rooms stand open as antidotes. It is not what a young man may work at during the day, but where he spends his evening. Tell him where the boy is after supper, and he will tell you his character. Go among your wayward friends, mingle with them and get them into the Association rooms. That's the work that tells. Next to the churches the Y. M. C. A. is the greatest factor in the army of the Lord. Citizens should prove their interest in the work by looking in on them once in a while, for they are training schools for the churches along the lines of personal effort and endeavor. If you look at life as I do the greatest ecstacy to be experienced in Christian work is to bring a wretched sinner to Christ. Also look after your own soul and character, and don't let business cheat you out of a little time with Jesus in the morning. Personality is but character in both. It is not what you say but what you do that gives you standing and influence in your own community. Never argue with an infidel. It is time wasted. Sing out the word of Christ and tell him to try it for himself. Ask him to take the Bible and practice it with humbleness for one week—that is the best kind of advice toward such as he. If you can't pray you can't teach or minister to those in need of His word. Even good men some times think what excellent work they are doing. Pray that self be taken out of your character and then let the baptism of the Holy Spirit go over you. You can't create power, but you can receive it. He believed in athletics, but with limitations. At present the devil has a finger in athletics, which has resulted in making some gymnasiums a resort for bottles and bets, but the parent can send the son to the association gymnasium without fear of his character becoming contaminated.

The social, intellectual and physical departments are all features that contribute to attain successful results, but it should be kept in mind that the prime matter of the work is to save young men—that was Williams's idea when the organization was conceived in his mind. The moment the association seeks any other point it becomes an importance. Carry home the motto "Union in Christ for young men without Christ". Hang it up over your door, and under this place "March on to Victory". Good night!

As the venerable divine closed, the vast auditorium resounded with applause—the greatest enthusiasm that has been evinced during any session. As he stepped from the pulpit the cheering continued with renewed vigor, until the hall fairly thundered with enthusiasm. A delegate stepped up and placed a convention button in his lapel, while the old man's face beamed and with a wave of his hand the audience quieted down and as a fitting culmination to his already aggressive address, he remarked in soft and subdued tones:

"This is a time when we speak not for money or fame, but it's a time when we love to be loved."

As Dr. Cuyler retired, the audience once more showed their appreciation of the man by an outburst of cheering, interspersed with remarks such as "grand", "splendid", "would n't have missed it for anything", etc.

This was followed by a solo by B. Frank Butts, which was artistically rendered.

Recording Secretary R. P. Holden of Madison read the annual report of the State Executive Committee, which was distributed in pamphlet form.

The following annual report of the condition of finances was read by State Treasurer G. W. Gear of Orange:

FRED M. GEAR, Treasurer.

A verbal explanation of the finances was made a little more clearly and concisely by S. F. Dudley of Orange, during which time the State Committeemen took up the State offering. Secretary Lucas call the roll by associations and delegates answered separately to the amount given by the association and by individuals. The total amount received was $1,622.

The Business Committee announced that Rev. J. F. Elliott would preach in the Seventh Day Baptist Church this morning.

The meeting then adjourned to 9:15 this morning.

TODAY'S SESSIONS.

The first number on the programme this morning was a Bible hour, held in the Association hall and led by J. H. Elliott, with the subject of "The power of the Holy Spirit". These studies of the Bible, and the means of teaching, are producing much benefit to the delegates, and the increased attendance at each successive session gives evidence of this fact. The personality of the Holy Spirit, not the influence, he said, is what the prospective teacher should firmly fix in his mind. Constantly worrying and nagging a young man will never bring him into the fold if he is somewhat averse to taking the step.

O. C. Morse of the Springfield, Mass., Training School, was the next speaker. He said there is a growing number of young men in the school fitting themselves for this work of making efficient instructors in the work. A number of graduates of the school were present and spoke of the efficiency of the training secured there.

The subject of "Our responsibility to young men who confess Christ in our meetings" was talked of by Walter G. Douglass of Philadelphia. The work of securing converts should be carried on at all times in all parts of the building, and not wait until the regular Sunday or weekday meetings where religious inspiration was sought for.

The question was whether or not the work was carried up to a certain point, and then relaxed, thus losing the desired result. The duty of secretaries should be to see that this gathering in of young men to circles of religion was successfully prosecuted to the end. Conversions should be the most important point sought for. When a man professes an interest in Christ, he should be advised and looked after, and when you interest a soul you don't know what a great prize you may get for the church and Christ. The board of directors should look after the spiritual department as well as the finances and others.

W. B. Millar, of New York, spoke on educational department in the association. This work is important in the unlimited opportunities it affords for reaching young men. The object is to develop the power to think wisely and seek out some vocation. The work appeals to the moneyed and business men, for they may be suffering from incompetent employes, and thus appreciate the advantages to be derived from the sources. The needs of the young men should be studied, and the classes organized accordingly.

George B. Hodge of New York followed with a supplementary talk on the same subject. The study of the Bible for educational purposes is being taken up all over the country. New Jersey is greatly interested in educational work, and gives more to that end than most other States. A series of charts was used, which fully illustrated the need of increase in this line of work, explaining them as he progressed with his talk. The

The Eminent Professor Receiving Congratulations—Humane Methods Produce Marvelous Results.

Munyon's Rheumatism Cure acted like magic, relieving the pain and soreness at once and effecting a complete cure in a remarkably short time. I am a thorough believer in Munyon's Remedies and always keep them on hand. They are always reliable and have saved many a doctor's fee."

It never fails to cure sharp, shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides, back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body in from one to three hours. It is guaranteed to promptly cure lameness, stiff and swollen joints, stiff back and all pains in the hips and loins. Chronic rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago or pain in the back are speedily cured.

Munyon's Homoeopathic Home Remedy Co., of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25c. a bottle.

A False Diagnosis.

La grippe is confounded by many persons with a severe attack of catarrh, which in some respects resembles the former. These individuals suffer severely with pain about the forehead, eyes and ears, with soreness in throat and stoppage of the nasal passages and in fact, are incapacitated for work of any kind for days at a time. These are catarrhal sufferers. Ely's Cream Balm has been used with the best results in such cases. The remedy will give instant relief.

CHAPTER II.

Jim knew something of the outside of junks, but he was not prepared, when he went down that night with his charts, for the confusion of cargo and coolies and coffins and day-cooking places and other things that littered the decks. Jim had sense enough to haul the rudder up a few feet; he knew that a junk's rudder goes far below the bottom and he allowed a foot extra to Erh-Tze's estimate of the ship's depth. Then they staggered out into midstream very early, and never had the city of his birth looked so beautiful to Jim as when he feared he would not come back to see it. Going down Garden Reach he discovered that the junk would answer to her helm if you put it over enough and that she had a fair, though Chinese, notion of sailing. He took charge of the tiller by stationing three Chinese on each side of it and standing a little forward gathered their pigtails into his hands, three right and three left, as though they had been the yoke-lines of a rowboat. Erh-Tze almost smiled at this. He felt he was getting good care for his money, and took a neat polished bamboo to keep the men attentive, for he said this was no time to teach the crew pigeon English. The more way they could get on the junk better would she steer, and as soon as he felt a little confidence in her Jim ordered the big rustling mat sails to be hauled up tighter and tighter. He did not know their names—at least any name that would be likely to interest a Chinaman—but Erh-Tze had not banged about the waters of the Malay archipelago for nothing, and as he went, he rolled forward with the bamboo the sails rose like eastern incantations.

Early as they were on the river a big American kerosene ship was ahead of them in tow, and when Jim saw her through the driving morning mist he was thankful. She would draw all of seventeen feet, and if he could steer by her they would be safe. It is one thing to scurry up and down the James and Mary in a police-tug without responsibility, and quite another to cram a hard-mouthed old junk across the same sands alone, with the certainty of a thrashing if you came out alive. Jim glued his eyes to the American and saw that at Fultah she dropped her tug and stood down the river under sail. He all but whooped aloud, for he knew that the number of pilots who preferred to work a ship through the James and Mary without a tug was strictly limited. "If it isn't father it's Dearsley," said Jim, "and Dearsley went down yesterday with the Bancoora. If I'd gone home last night instead of going to Pedro I'd have met father. He must have got his ship quick, but—father is a very quick man." Then Jim reflected that they kept a piece of knotted rope on the pilot brig that stung like a wasp but this thought he dismissed as be; neath the dignity of an officiating pilot who need only nod his head to set Erh-Tze's bamboo at work. As the American came round, just before the Fultah sands, Jim raked her with his spy glass and saw his father on the poop with an unlighted cigar between his teeth. That cigar, Jim knew, would be smoked on the other side of the James and Mary, and Jim felt so entirely safe and happy that he lit a cigar on his own account. This kind of piloting was child's play! His father could not make a mistake if he tried; and Jim with his six faithful pig-tails in his two hands had leisure to admire the perfect style in which the American was handled—how she would point her bowsprit jeeringly at a hidden bank as much as to say: "Not to-day, thank you, dear," and bow down lovingly over a buoy as much as to say: "You're a gentleman at any rate," and come round sharp on her heel with a flutter and a rustle and a slow steady swing something like a woman staring round a theater through opera glasses. It was not hard work to keep the junk near her, though Erh-Tze set everything that was by any means settable and used the bamboo very generously. When they were almost under her counter and a little to the left, Jim would feel warm and happy all over, thinking of the nautical and pilotic things he knew. When they fell more than half a mile behind he was cold and miserable, thinking of all the things that he did not know or was not quite sure of. And so they went down, Jim steering by his father, turn for turn, over the Macpur bar with the semaphores on each bank signaling the depth of water, through the Western Gat and round the Makoaputti Lumps and in and out of twenty places each more exciting than the last, and Jim nearly pulled the six pig-tails out for pure joy when the last of the James and Mary had astern, and they were walking through Diamond harbor. From there to the mouth of the Hugli things are not so bad, at least that was what Jim thought, and held on till the steel from the Bay of Bengal made the old junk heave and snort and the river broadened into an inland sea with islands only a foot or two high scattered about it. The American walked away from the junk as soon as they were beyond Kedgeree, and the night came on and the water looked very big and desolate, so Jim promptly anchored somewhere in the gray water with the Saugor light away off toward the east. He had a great respect for the Hugli and no desire whatever to find himself on the Gaspar sand or any other little shoal. Erh-Tze and the crew highly approved of this piece of seamanship. They set no watch, lit no lights and at once went to sleep. Jim lay down between a red and black lacquer coffin and a little live pig in a basket. As soon as it was light he began studying his chart of the Hugli mouth and trying to find out where in the river he might be. He decided to be on the safe side and wait for another sailing ship and follow her out. So he made an enormous breakfast of rice and boiled fish while Erh-Tze lit fire crackers and burned gilt paper with ostentation. Then they heaved up their rough and tumble anchor and made after a big, fat, iron four-masted sailing ship heavy as a hay wain. The junk, which was really a very weatherly boat and might have begun life as a private pirate in Annam thirty years ago, followed under easy sail; and the four-master would run no risks. She was in old McEwen's hands and she waddled about like a broody hen giving each shoal wide allowances. All this happened near the outer Floating Light some hundred and twenty miles from Calcutta and apparently in the open sea. Jim knew old McEwen's appetite and had often heard him pride himself on getting his ship to the pilot brig between meal hours, so he argued that if the pilot brig was get-able (and Jim himself had not the ghost of a notion where she would be) McEwen would find her before 1 o'clock. It was a blazing hot day and McEwen fidgetted the four-master down to Pilots' Ridge with what little wind remained, and sure enough there lay the pilot brig and Jim felt cold up his back, as Erh-Tze paid him his hundred and twenty rupees and he went overside in the junk's crazy dinghee. McEwen was leaving the four-master in a long slashing whale-boat that looked very spruce and pretty, and Jim could see that there was a certain amount of excitement among the pilots on the brig. There was his father too. The ragged Chinese gave way in a ragged fashion and Jim felt very unwashen and disreputable when he heard the click of McEwen's oars alongside, and McEwen saying: "James Trevor, I'll trouble you to come along with me."

Jim obeyed, and from the corner of one eye watched McEwen's angry whiskers stand up all round his face like the frill of a royal Bengal tiger, while his face turned purple and his voice shook.

"An' is this how you break the regulations o' the port o' Calcutta? Are ye aware o' the penalties ye've laid yourself open to?"

Jim said nothing. There was not very much to say, and McEwen roared aloud: "Man, ye've personated a Hugli pilot, an' that's as much to say ye've personated me! What did yon yellow heathen give you for an honorarium?"

"Hundred and twenty," said Jim.

"An' by what manner o' means did ye get through the James an' Mary?"

"Father," was the answer. "He went down the same tide—and I—we steered by him."

McEwen whistled and choked; perhaps it was with anger. "Made a stalkin' horse o' your father. Jim, boy, he'll make an example o' you."

The boat hooked the brig's chains and McEwen said, as he rolled on deck:

"Yon's an enterprising cub o' yours, Trevor. Ye'd better put him to the regular business or one o' these fine days he'll be acting as pilot before he's qualified and sinkin' junks in the Fairway. If ye've no other designs I'd take him as my cub, for there's no denyin' he's a resourceful lad for all that he's an unlicked whelp."

"HE'S A RESOURCEFUL LAD FOR ALL THAT HE'S SUCH AN UNLICKED WHELP."

"That," said Trevor, reaching for Jim's left ear, "is something we can remedy," and he led him down below.

The little knotted colt that they kept for general purposes on the pilot brig stung like hornets, but when it was all over Jim was an unlicked cub no longer. He was McEwen's property, and a week later when the Ellora came along he bundled over side with McEwen's enameled leather handbag and a roll of charts and a little bag of his own.

FROM THE PULPIT

Paine's Celery Compound Has Made Us Well.

We Advise the Sick to Take It Say the Clergyman.

Be Prepared for the Danger Season of Spring!

Aggressive Christianity Is Possible With Health.

Pastors of All Sects Preach It East and West.

PRACTICAL work distinguishes the pulpit. Doctrinal sermons to day are at a discount. Ministers of the Gospel, as if by a well-concerted plan, are now putting tremendous energy into the cause of good government and public health. Aggressive Christianity seems to be the pride of every denomination.

Flat-chested, sallow-cheeked weak legged, watery-eyed clergymen are scarce, strong, vigorous, clear-headed, manly fellows are entering the seminaries.

That a well man is a better man than a sick one is no longer hearsay.

Public baths, fresh air excursions, open parks, sunlight, physical training and proper medicines for the sick are all contributing to the work of home missions.

All sects appear to be entering with unusual activity into a practical reformation. Last week in Boston one of the greatest of its pulpit orators preached upon clean streets; in New York the churches have been breaking up political corruption. Money from the contribution boxes is going into hospitals. Many a young clergyman today takes a year or more, not in a trip to Europe to hear music and study cathedral architecture, and "round out his education," but in a plain, matter-of-fact medical school to learn anatomy and hygiene.

Most progressive ministers in every denomination today are recommending to their people the great remedy that makes people well, earnestly indorsing the work of Dartmouth College's generous scientist and frankly lending their influence to that of the best physicians—advising generally the use of Paine's celery compound now that the "danger season of spring" is near.

The proprietors of this best of remedies now furnish a great quantity of testimonials from clergymen in every state, and almost every city and town in the country, from which the following are taken at random:

Rev. Charles C. Bruce.

From Somerville, Mass., Boston's wealthy suburb, Charles Cromber Bruce, one of the ablest young pastors in the State, writes:

"I am nearly 38 years of age and weigh normally 158 pounds; at present my weight is 148½ My sickness took me down to 134½ so that you can see that I am getting back to myself. and, God willing, shall soon be there.

"I have been a very sick man, but owing to the goodness of the supreme powers I am now on the royal road whose end is perfect health.

"After 20 years of excessive labor in studying and preaching, I was elected to a position in a high school in Boston, but the work told on me and I grew ill. The illness lasted for about a year and a half. But now I am so that I can see the end and a more thankful man you never saw. A gentleman who lived near me began to use Paine's celery compound and it built him up. I thought of this and soon I was led to use it, and it has brought me out all right."

St. Theresa's Academy.

Mother Theresa, writing from St. Theresa's academy, near Peoria, Ill., says, that they have given Paine's celery compound a thorough trial and found it to be all that is claimed for it. She adds: "We shall continue its use and also recommend it to our friends."

Rev. T. F. Stauffer.

The following testimonial from a man so widely known and beloved as Rev. T. F. Stauffer, pastor of the Faith Reformed Church of Lincoln, Neb., is a most positive proof of the wonderful medicinal power of Paine's celery compound and its great superiority over ordinary sarsaparillas, tonics and nervines.

"For nearly a year past I have felt myself running down My nervous system was gradually growing worse; I had slight symptoms of rheumatism, and was troubled a good deal at times with insomnia I felt that something must be done and concluded to use Paine's celery compound. After the first few days' use I began to improve, and I am very much better now. Indeed, I feel like myself once more. All symptoms of rheumatism are disappearing. I can sleep well, my nervous system is rapidly improving, and I believe a radical cure is being effected. Paine's celery compound is a splendid remedy and I can conscientiously commend it to the suffering in like cases. I further believe that if this medicine were taken in time it would save many heavy doctor's bills. I have never used a remedy of any kind that met its promises so well and so readily."

Editor of the Georgia Baptist.

Rev. W. J. White, D. D., editor of the Georgia Baptist, says: "My wife was in poor health. I think it a sort of general debility which caused severe attacks of heart palpitation. She was favorably impressed with Paine's celery compound and procured it at once. She felt benefited from the first bottle and I see a decided improvement which is gratifying. We have spoken of this medicine to several friends, and several have already used it upon our recommendation."

Rector of St. Anne's, Nashville.

Rev. T. F. Martin, rector of St. Anne's Church at Nashville, gives his people confidence in the great curative powers of Paine's celery compound. He says:

"During the Lenten season last year, which on account of multiplied services, is very trying and laborious to a clergyman, I became so run down that I feared I would not be able to hold out to the end Having seen accounts of the efficacy of Paine's celery compound in similar cases I concluded to try it. I was soon delighted to find that it gave me new vigor, and by the use of one bottle I was enabled to get through the most laborious part of the season, including Holy Week and Easterday, with ease and comfort I attribute my relief to Paine's celery compound. I keep a bottle of it on hand and whenever I have a return of the feeling of exhaustion from unusual labor I take a few doses, always with a pleasant sensation of relief."

The Upper Iowa Conference.

Among the many very able ministers in the upper Iowa Conference none is better beloved by his church than Rev. B. E. Berry. Read of the great good that Paines celery compound did him.

"For three years I have suffered from indigestion, constipation and biliousness. I have taken three bottles of Paines celery compound and find myself wonderfully helped. I feel rested now mornings and no longer have any tired and stupid feelings. Therefore I take great delight in recommending Paines celery compound to all suffering from these disorders.

The Venerable William A. Smith.

Rev. William A. Smith of Groton, Conn. after years of work, is still well and active, He writes:

"In my early days by great and prolonged mental suffering, I broke down in health and became a dyspeptic, being obliged at one time to give up my work in the ministry on account of ill health. I am now 83 years of age and during my long life have suffered greatly from dyspepsia, torpid liver, constipation and insomnia, at times thinking I should die for the want of balmy sleep and it is a wonder to me that I am alive today with all that I have been through.

"I have tried an endless amount of medicine, but lately I have been taking Paine's celery compound, and have all faith in its merits as adapted to my case. By the use of several bottles I so far recovered my health as to consider myself a well man for my age. It regulates the liver, stomach and bowels without any question. My appetite is now good, my sleep is refreshing, my liver active and bowels regular, and my crutches not needed, as I can walk without a staff. I am daily increasing in strength and improving generally, and hope that my youth will soon be renewed so that I can work as in by-gone days. People are surprised at my improved appearance and activity."

New York City Clergymen.

Intervied by a reporter in that city the other day, a large number of clergymen expressed the heartiest indorsement of Paine's celery compound. The interviews were published in the World. Here are a few of them:

Rev H. L Granlienard, pastor of the French Presbyterian church, who lives at 143 West 16th st., saide: "I have frequently been relieved of nervous affections by the use of Paine's celery compound. I think it a most reliable remedy and shall recommend it wherever I have an opportunity."

Rev. R. D. Winn, pastor of the Abyssinian church, said: "My career as a minister of the gospel has been hampered by the fact that for years I have suffered from nervousness. I consulted several specialist, who treated my case for months, but I must say that during the past few weeks I have received more benefit from one bottle of Paine's celery compound than from all the other medicines taken."

The recent indorsements of the great remedy by Rev. Fr. A. Ouellet, Rev. Mr. Laird and other prominent divines have so recently been published that they are fresh in the public mind.

Rev G A Emery

Rev. G. A. Emery of Pittsfield, Vt., writes:

"Paine's celery compound is the best medicine to be found and I very cheerfully recommend it to all who are in a run-down or exhausted condition. I have twice used it with most satisfactory results. For five years my work has been very heavy, especially so during the last two years. My conviction was that unless I fond something to help me I must give up my work as a minister, but I took Paine's celery compound and last year came out all right, without a vacation of so much as one Sunday. I recommend it to all as a wonderful nerve restorer."

Rev. E. F. Crosby.

Rev. B. S. Crosby of Brushton, N. Y., says:

"It gives me great pleasure to add my testimony to the effect of Paine's celery compound. For eight years I have suffered great pain in my back. Las April I was so weak and nervous that I arranged to go to Montreal for treatment, but three days before I expected to go a friend of mine urged me to take Paine's celery compound. I went that day and bought a bottle and commenced to take it, and before I had taken the first bottle I was free from pain in my back and could sleep sound, and am able to preach every Sunday.

"I will gladly answer any one who may write to me about it. I trust your business will continue to prosper until the afflicted ones of the entire nation shall take Paine's celery compound and be revitalized."

Was Caused by Grip

Rev. Dr. J. F. Hall of Mountville is one of the best known ministers in southeastern Ohio. Mrs. Hall, whose life was despaired of, was restored to health by Paine's celery compound. She writes:

"The grip made a wreck of my natural good health. I suffered from continual headache, which nothing relieved, and from nervousnees which prevented sleep and caused me to have palpitation of the heart when startled by any unexpected noise or sound. I had distressing pains in my back and side, was constipated, billous, and sallow-complexioned. My pulse was very changeable, sometimes quick and at others scarcely perceptible, appetite poor, with a feeling of languor and weakness at times almost overcoming me. It seemed as if every organ in my body was diseased, and I was in despair of ever being well again. At times the grave seemed very near. I can never describe my terrible sufferings, and it would have been a great relief to have exchanged worlds, but like every mother, I would look upon my baby boy and cling to life.

"Not having much faith in advertised medicines, it was with reluctance that I began to use Paine's celery compound, but after the first dose I slept well My improvement was rapid; I took six bottles and gained between 20 and 25 pounds in weight, and now I am fleshy, ruddy cheeked and clear complexioned, the wonder of all my friends. I do my own work and assist my husband in his labors as a minister of the gospel. I always tell the sick and suffering what this grand compound has done for me."

For All Sufferers.

Rev. Percy T. Fenn, rector of St. John's at Boonton, N. J., writes:

"It gives me great pleasure to commend the use of Paine's celery compound to all those who are suffering from nervous troubles. I had suffered for two years with nervous prostration brought on by overwork and excessive study, and during this time had tried almost everything in the way of medicine, besides being treated by an eminent specialist in nervous diseases, but nothing helped me until I used Paine's celery compound. This remedy has been of great benefit to me, and I shall recommend it to all sufferers."

The fact is, Paine's celery compound makes people well. Try it and be convinced.

MISS GOULD'S $15,000,000.

Comment Upon Her Approaching Marriage—Will She Live Abroad?

New York, Feb. 16.—Much has been said and written regarding the approaching marriage of Miss Anna Gould, daughter of the late wizard of Wall street, who is worth $15,000,000 in her own right, to the Count Castellane, a spendthrift young nobleman with the usual record. It is curious to hear the assertions made by members of the plutocracy, that this is purely a personal event, is nobody's business but of those immediately concerned. It is most emphatically the peoples' business. Miss Gould's $15,000,000 is money presented to her family by the people.

Her fortune would not be worth anything if public patronage were withdrawn from the "L" and the railroad and telegraph in which it is invested. Every poor washerwoman who must pay fare on these public franchises is contributing to the mammoth fortune of the count's bride to be. Miss Gould's millions are due to the laboring men and the impoverished classes generally. No doubt the count looks down upon such people and thinks they are hardly fit to black his boots, but they have made his bride what she is. The new countess will live abroad after her marriage in March, and the people's money must go abroad with her. The crowds who are packed like sardines into the foul Gould cars may derive such consolation as they can from the magnificence in which the count will live on their money.

SHOT DOWN IN THE STREET.

A Merchant Probably Fatally Injured by an Unknown Assassin.

Southington, Conn., Feb. 16.—Chas. Rugg, aged 65, a well known hardware merchant of this place, was shot and probably fatally injured last night while on his way home from his place of business. Mr. Rugg closed his store and started to walk to his home in Plantsville, the electric cars being out of order. While he was passing through Bristol street, an unknown man fired three shots at him. Then the assassin started on a run down the street, firing a fourth shot as he went. All four bullets took effect. Mr. Rugg was carried to a house near by and physicians summoned. The bullets could not be found. Mr. Rugg is very weak, and it is thought that he would not live many hours.

He does not know his assailant and cannot give even a faint description of him. The shooting caused the greatest possible excitement in the town, and parties were organized to make a search for the assassin, but nothing of him could be found. It is supposed that the motive for the shooting was robbery, as it was known that Mr. Rugg carried home with him every night the cash taken in at the store during the day.

200 CHILDREN IN PERIL.

The Heroic Action of Miss McDonnell Saves Them from Death.

New York, Feb. 16.—The Westchester Temporary Home for Indigent children, in North street, about a mile east of White Plains, was burned to the ground last night. The building contained 200 children ranging from 1 to 15 years old. Besides these there was a dozen teachers and nurses.

At about 10 o'clock a watchman discovered the cellar in a mass of flames. The little ones were asleep in their beds in the long dormitories on the second floor. Miss McDonald, the assistant superintendent, rushed from her room, sounding a large gong in the hall which called for help, warning them of danger.

She then turned on the electric lights in the halls and with the assistance of the teachers and nurses formed the children into a fire line and marched them in single file hurriedly from the burning building. So well had the children been drilled in the case of fire that not one life was lost nor a single person injured.

A Woman and a Gun.

Kent, O., Feb. 16.—At Suffield last night, Dora Wise picked up an old gun to remove it from the house. The trigger struck the door and the gun was discharged, the entire load entering the face of her sister, Augusta, aged 20. Both eyes, the nose, and much of the face was shot off, but the girl was living late last night.

15,000 To Resume Work.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Feb. 16.—All the coal companies operating collieries in the Wyoming Valley issued orders yesterday that all collieries should go on full time after Monday until March 1. This is good news to miners in this vicinity and guarantees steady work for about 15,000 men and boys.

Sunken Chinese Ships.

Tokio, Feb. 16.—A commission of experts has been ordered to Wei-Hai-Wei to examine the sunken Chinese warships and report whether it will be feasible and profitable to raise and repair them. It is believed that the warship Ting-Yuen can be raised and refitted at moderate cost.

Death of the Living Doll.

New York, Feb. 16.—"Princess Paulina," the smallest of women, known as the "living doll," died yesterday of pneumonia. She weighed but eight and a half pounds and was only seventeen inches tall. She was to have celebrated her nineteenth birthday on the 26th of this month.

TRIAL OF THE EX-QUEEN

Hawaii's Deposed Ruler Declares Her Innocence.

Says That All Plots To Overthrow the Government Were Kept from Her Knowledge—Was Not Intimidated into Abdicating—She Followed the the Counsels of Her Friends.

San Francisco, Feb. 16.—The steamer Mariposa, which arrived here yesterday from Honolulu, brings news that the trial of the ex-queen for treason had just been concluded when the steamer left on Feb. 8, and that the prevailing opinion was that she would be found guilty and sentence would be pronounced against her.

The ex-queen gave brief oral testimony and caused to be read a written statement in which she said:

"The movement undertaken by the Hawaiians last month was absolutely commenced without my knowledge, sanction or assistance, directly or indirectly, and this fact is, in truth, well known to those who took part in it. I received no information from any one in regard to which men were or which were not to be procured, nor of any men who were induced or to be induced to join in any such uprising. I do not know why this information should have been withheld from me, unless it was with a view to my personal safety, or as a precautionary measure. It would not have received my sanction, and I can assure the gentlemen of the commission that had I known of any such intention I would have dissuaded the promoters from such a venture. But I will add that had I known their secrets they would have been mine and would have been invioably preserved.

Says She Had a Right.

"That I intended to change my cabinet and to appoint certain officers of the kingdom in the event of my restoration I will admit, but that I, or any one known to me, had in part or in whole established a new government is not true. Before the 24th of January, 1895, the day upon which I formally abdicated and called upon my people to recognize the republic of Hawaii as the only lawful government of these islands and to support that government, I claim that I had the right to select a cabinet in anticipation of a possibility, and the history of other governments support this right.

"I was not intimidated into abdicating, but followed the counsels of able and generous friends and well-wishers who advised me that such an act would restore peace and good will among my people, vitalize the progress and prosperity of the islands and induce the actual government to deal leniently, mercifully and charitably, impassionately with those who resorted to arms for the purpose of displacing a government in the formation of which they had no voice or control and which they themselves had seen established by force of arms.

A Prayer and a Wish.

"I acted of my own free will, and wish the world to know that I have asked no immunity or favor for myself, nor pleaded my abdication as a petition for mercy. My actions were dictated by the sole aim of doing good to my beloved country and alleviating the positions and pains of those who unhappily and unwisely resorted to arms to regain an independence which they thought had been unjustly wrested from them. As you deal with them, so I pray that the Almighty God may deal with you in your hours of trial.

"To my regret much has been said about the danger which has threatened foreign women and children and about the blood-thirstiness of Hawaiians and the outrages which would have been perpetrated by them if they had succeeded in their attempt to overthrow the republic government. Those who know the Hawaiian temper and disposition understand that there is no foundation for such fears. The behavior of the rebels to those foreigners whom they captured and held showed that there was no malignancy in the hearts of the Hawaiians at all. It would have been sad, indeed, if the doctrine of the Christian missionary fathers taught to my people by them and those who succeeded them should have fallen, like the seed in the parable, upon barren ground.

She Denies Their Right.

"I must deny your right to try me in this manner and by a court which you have called together for this purpose. In your actions you violate your own constitution and laws of the land. There may be in your consciences a warrant for your action, in what you may deem a necessity of the times, but you can not find any such warrant for any such action in any settled civilized or Christian land.

"All who uphold you in this unlawful proceeding may scorn and despise my word, but the offense of breaking and setting aside the specific purpose of the laws of your own nation and disregarding all justice and fairness may be to them and to you the source of an unhappy and much to be regretted legacy.

"I would ask you to consider that your government is on trial before the whole civilized world, and that in accordance with your actions and decisions will you yourselves be judged. The happiness and prosperity of Hawaii are henceforth in your hands alone as its rulers."

Thrown Out of Work by Fire.

Cambridge, O., Feb. 16.—The coal tipple and all the expensive machinery at the Forsythe mines, five miles east of this city, were burned yesterday. The miners had been notified that a reduction of five cents per ton would be made in their wages and had decided to accept the reduction. The loss of employment will cause much suffering. One hundred men are thrown out of work.

At the Last Moment.

Savannah Ga., Feb. 16.—The sentence of Eddie Davis, colored, to be hanged here for the murder of Willis Brown, has been commuted to life imprisonment by Gov. Atkinson. Davis was about to be hanged when he was reprieved and through efforts of his friends a commutation of his sentence was secured.

Y. M. C. A. CONVENTION

fact was exhibited that New Jersey was materially increasing along this line.

The following appointments for filling the city pulpits Sunday morning were announced:

First Baptist Church, J H Elliott; Crescent avenue, Robert E Speer; Congregational, S F Dudley; Grace M E, State Secretary Arthur Lucas; Warren Chapel, C S Cooper.

The report of the Committee on the State Committee's report was read by Delegate Harrington of Camden. They had found the year had been a prosperous one in all parts of the State. Six new Associations had been established, viz: Atlantic Highlands, Hackensack, Mendham, Pompton, Somerville, and Westfield.

Three new buildings had also been erected, and there was an increase of 87 in college associations. There was an apparent lack of study in Bible classes. It was recommended that more aggressive work be pursued on educational lines and also the employment of an assistant State secretary. The sum of $4,200 was needed to carry the State work through the year. The following were recommended to constitute the State executive committee for the term expiring May, 1898:

E. S. Cowles, Jersey City.
W. D. Murray, Plainfield.
F. M. Geer, Orange.
C. W. Alling, Newark.
Wilson Farrand, Newark.
S. F. Dudley, Orange.
J. H. McGray, Madison.
A. S. Bagley, Montclair.
E. J. Wessels, Westfield.
W. H. Bradshaw, Orange Valley.
F. W. Langstroth, Rahway.
E. J. Ross, Dover.

On motion the report was adopted, thus carrying into effect the recommendations and nominations.

This afternoon, from 2 to 3, the time of the convention was occupied with sectional conferences in various rooms of the building.

John T Swift of Tokio, Japan, who was to have furnished the principal address this afternoon was unable to be present, and in his stead Dr. A. T. Pierson of Philadelphia has been secured. The place of his address was arranged to be held in the First Baptist Church instead of the Assembly Hall, as announced on the programme. The meeting is now in progress.

A parlor conference for college delegates at the residence of Fred. H. Andrews on Central avenue will be held between 4:30 and 7.

The committees composed of young women from the various Christian Endeavor societies again served supper to the delegates in the upper meeting hall between 5 and 6 last evening.

PARTICULAR MENTION

Miss Lee of Central avenue is visiting relatives in New York.

George A. Newman of Orange is visiting his brother, H. O. Newman.

A delightful party was given by Miss Florence Marsh of Plainfield avenue last night.

Mrs. George Thatcher of West Seventh street, has recovered from an attack of the grip.

Mrs. A. D. Phillips of Central avenue is entertaining her niece Miss Ella Phillips of Jersey City.

Robert Guttridge of Netherwood left this morning to sail for a visit to his old in the Fatherland.

Samuel Ayers, son of W. C. Ayers, and principal of one of the New York public schools, is in town today.

Mrs. Alexander Gilbert and Mrs. B. A. Hegeman gave royal entertainment at their homes yesterday to the Y. M. C. A. delegates attending the conferences in their parlors.

John W. Murray, accompanied by Mrr. Murray, who is at Rockledge, Fla., is reported as improved in health by the quiet rest he is having at that place. Fishing in the Indian river is his favorite pastime and he keeps the hotel table well supplied with fish.

Thomas Cochran, who speaks this evening in the Baptist Church, and tomorrow in the Methodist Church, is a leading business man of St. Paul. He is a fellow-university (New York) man of Dr. I. C. Pierson and Rev. C. R. Barnes. He is the guest of the latter.

Last evening was very enjoyably spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. Wright, 309 Arlington avenue. Games were played, also a piano duet by Miss Mildred Tyrell and Mrs. A. Gordon. Refreshments were served at 10, and all returned home at an early hour, and happy.

A Servant's Carelessness.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. D. Snediker on Grove street, came near being destroyed by fire on Friday night of last week during the blizzard. A servant girl who only had five quilts on her bed, to keep her warm, thought a hot iron would be a nice bedfellow and heated one to a high heat and put it into her bed while the family were at their evening meal. The fumes of burning wool alarmed the family and a search was commenced at the furnace. The cellar and every room was searched for the cause.

When the servant's room was reached her bed was found to be in a blaze. Mr. Snediker and son George set to work in a practical manner and the fire was put out without the department or the neighborhood being alarmed, although the bedding was almost entirely destroyed.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy Makes Another Remarkable Cure.

(From the Times Union, Albany, N. Y.)

Four years ago, Mrs. Markham, who resides on First street, corner of North Swan, noticed a sensitive spot on her left limb. It was apparently nothing serious, but soon developed into a sore, and before long the limb was a mass of ulcers. Mrs. Markham employed some of our best physicians a dozen or more in all, bue she obtained no relief. In fact, was told that nothing could be done for her, so for four years she suffered with these dreadful ulcers which has eaten their way to the bone.

A little less than a year ago, an acquaintance told her about Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and that he believed she would find relief in using it. Mrs. Markham's four years of suffering had made her skeptical, the more so, as she had obtained no relief from any of the numerous physicians who had attended her during these years of suffering.

The friend offered to send her a bottle of year after taking the first dose, the ulcers have disappeared, all that is left to show what she has suffered is a swelling on the ankle of the left limb which is fast disappearing.

Mrs. Markham is naturally strong in her praises of Dr. David Kennedy,s Favorite Remedy, and feels that but for it she would now be a helpless cripple, if not a corpse.

Such a straightforward endorsement needs no comment. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy cures diseases when taken according to directions, its acts directly upon the kidneys, liver and blood. In cases of nervousness, dyspepsia, rheumatism, ulcers old sores blood poisoning and Bright's disease it has made pronounced cures after all other treatments have failed.

$100 Reward $100.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured,

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,

Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. S. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

BRADSTREET'S REPORT

The Weather Fails To Stimulate Orders for Goods.

General Trade Remains at Low Ebb. Bear Operatives Active—Markets Oversold—Greater Efforts Made for Collections Than To Sell Goods. Variation of Prices.

New York, Feb. 16.—Bradstreet in his report to-day will say: Milder and pleasanter weather, following the severe storms and extremely low temperature, have, with few exceptions, failed to stimulate orders for seasonable goods or the distributive movement generally. Exceptions include a revival of demand in a few lines at Boston and New York, and in drugs, leather and paper at Philadelphia, and in general merchandise at Savannah and Jacksonville, the only southern cities reporting trade better and mercantile collections good. At the west there are improved sales by Chicago jobbers in dry goods, clothing, furnishings, shoes and rubbers, and Kansas City announces a larger volume of spring business. Demand for staples has increased at Milwaukee, as at St. Paul, pointing to small stocks held by country dealers. Elsewhere general trade remains at a low ebb. Iron and steel industries find the week not up to expectations.

Created Disappointment.

Speculations in the New York stock market is irregular and narrow. About $7,500,000 gold has been sent to the assay office for account of the local members of the bond syndicate, and the treasury gold reserve has risen to $42,500,000. About $1,500,000 gold has been shipped from London to New York for the same interests, and it would seem to be the policy to protract the carrying out of the arrangement, and thus keep exchange low and avert gold exports. The defeat of the 3 per cent. gold bond in the house has created disappointment, but though bear operators are active, the market soon becomes oversold. Chicago & Northwestern, however, has declined on liquidating sales due to poor earnings, and the high-priced anthracite coal stocks are affected by the failure of efforts to effect an arrangement about production. Foreign exchange is 4.88¼ for demand sterling. The spring trade outlook at Baltimore is less favorable, there having been a falling off in receipts of orders from travelers. Mercantile collections south and west, with few exceptions, are slow and unsatisfactory.

Trade Fallen Off.

Southern merchants and manufacturers in some instances are making greater efforts to collect amounts due than to sell goods. As one consequence of the recent extreme weather, trade at Augusta has fallen off to a marked degree, as at Birmingham, Chattanooga, Atlanta and New Orleans, merchants at the latter point finding an unfavorable influence also in the stoppage of payments of sugar bounties. Word comes from Texas that snow throughout that state has checked the volume of trade in all directions.

January gross earnings of railways indicate bottom has been touched, but there are signs of improvement accompanying them. Returns from 133 American and Mexican railroad companies cover 102,000 miles of track and $36,465,000 of gross earnings in January, a falling off of three-tenths of 1 per cent. from January last year, in which month there was a decrease of 12 per cent. from the total in January, 1894. The decrease in January earnings of railroads in the United States alone is six-tenths of 1 per cent.

Railroad Gains.

The poorest showing is made by the granger lines, but decreases are reported from January earnings a year ago by eastern, southern and Pacific groups of roads. Central western roads, the coalers and southwesterns announce gains in January over last year. A significant feature is that more than one-half of the companies report gains for January this year over last year, but these are small, and are offset by a few heavy decreases. The effects on business of the storm and low temperature, together with the check to trade since January 1, are beginning to make themselves apparent in bank clearings, the total for the past six business days amounting to $824,000,000, or 16 per cent. less than last week, and only 5 per cent. more than in the second week of February one year ago. Compared with the extraordinary heavy weekly total of clearings in the corresponding week of 1893, the decrease this week is 26 per cent., and compared with the like week in 1892 the falling off is even more striking, 40 per cent.

Fluctuation of Prices.

Prices, on the whole, have maintained a position of relative steadiness, eastern manufacturers of shoes asking higher prices, in view of a late advance in leather, and spruce lumber for frames having been marked up about 20 per cent. Live cattle and hogs are higher, due to improvements in eastern demand and decline in receipts at western centres. The check in receipts of Indian corn is responsible for the advance in that cereal, and lead also is higher. Prices are unchanged for leather, oats, pork, cotton, iron and steel, but bleached cottons have sold lower, at some points the lowest on record.

What Would Mrs. Cleveland Say?

Washington, Feb. 16.—The truth of an extract from the diary of ex-Queen Lilioukalani, read at her trial and contained in Honolulu advices by the Mariposa stating that she had received a present from President Cleveland, was authoritatively denied at the white house yesterday. It is stated there that the president sent no present of any description to her and that she was imposed on if any gift was given her with the statement that it came from Mr. Cleveland.

THE FACTS READ LIKE AN ASTONISHING STORY.

But Every Word is True as Can Be Easily Proved.

West Point N. Y.—A most extraordinary thing has happened here. The facts are of such a startling nature that our people are not done talking about them yet.

We have all heard of "Splitting headaches." A thousand times have we heard people who had a severe nervous, neuralgia or headache, exclaim that their head ached as though it would split.

But here is a case of most terrib'e headache, where the head did in fact split—that is, by the awful severity of the disease, the bones of the head actually opened. Most of the people here know about the facts of this most astonishing case, and several of our doctors examined and treated the patient unsuccessfully, and they will vouch for the truth of these wonderful things.

The lady herself, Mrs. Fred C. Lasher, Jr., is a well-known resident here, and gives all the facts just as they occured in her own words.

"For thirteen years I have been afflicted with terrible headaches night and day. At night the blood rushed into my head and into my throat so that I would just raise my head and spit great mouthfuls of blood.

"The bones of my skull were all opened so that the doctor could lay his thumb right in the opening on to my brain. I could sleep only an hour or two, nights, and was so nervous that I could not sit at the table, for just the motion of the mouths of my family seemed to me like they were all making faces at me, and I was obliged to get up and walk the floor. Two doctors who attended me, claimed that I was on the verge of insanity. I was under the doctor's care for nine years. All the way I could do any work was to have a bandage tight around my head so as to support it, as though my two hands were around it.

"I got so that I would fall anywhere, and all these years I got no relief from the doctors, and found no help until I began to use Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

"That seemed to have the same effect on my head as sitting under a shady tree with a cool refreshing breeze blowing on my head. Nobody can tell what I suffered all those years. I commenced using Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, for I thought I must do something, or I should soon be in an asylum.

MRS. FRED C. LASHER.

"The first bottle I took gave great relief, and inside of a year the bones of my head had taken their natural shape again. My nerves have now regained their natural calm condition, and I can say that I am now perfectly well. I have used the nervura for several years now, and use it for my children when teething.

"I am unable to describe in words the gratitude that I feel to Dr. Greene for his wonderful medicine, and am glad to tell as well as I can, of the benefit this medicine has done me."

Gabriel S. Smith, also a resident of this place, says:

"I am acquainted with Mrs. Lasher, and can vouch for the truth of her statement."

Hon Carlos I. Smith, a Justice of the Peace, of 9 Barre St., Montpelier, Vt., states that from his knowledge, and investigation of the case, he knows that the facts as above stated are absolutely true, and that Mrs. Lasher was perfectly cured of her terrible condition by Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

This wonderful remedy certainly has the largest and most remarkable number of cures of any medicine in the world. It would seem that no affliction or disease can resist its sweeping curative powers.

If it can cure such a terrible case as this, certainly all other cases of headache, neuralgia rheumatism, weak back, pains in the back or side, and all weakness of nerves, or debility of body, yield as if by magic to the health-giving and strengthening action of this grand medicine. Such troubles are always worse in the spring and his best of all spring medicines should be taken now.

It is purely vegetable, and perfectly harmless, and for this reason, and because it is so sure to cure, physicians prescribe and recommend its use. It is in fact, the discovery and prescription of a physician, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th St., New York City, the most successful specialist in curing all forms of nervous and chronic diseases, and who can be consulted without charge, by anyone, personally or by letter.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

Monograph on the Famous "Man of Destiny."

FAMILY OF THE GREAT CONQUEROR.

His Mother a Woman of Rare Beauty and Heroic Qualities—A Bit of Family History—Significance of a Piece of Tapestry Inwrought With an Effigy.

[Copyright, 1895, by John Clark Ridpath.]

I.—ORIGIN.

The meridian of Discovery and the parallel of Conquest intersect at the birthplace of Bonaparte. The birthlines of Cæsar and Columbus, drawn—the one due west from Rome, and the other due south from Genoa,—cross each other within a few miles of Ajaccio! It is odd.

Corsica is shaped like a megatherium. The bony head is thrust into the strait of Bonifacio; the long back is bent towards Italy; the thick tail projects in the direction of the Upper Riviera. The destined town lies between the fore legs, and the space there is a small gulf. The island-beast, sketched flat on the sea, shows many black spots on the side: they are mountains. There are veins also, and these are swift streams; small circles in a few places—towns. The area of the broadside is 3,376 square miles. It is more than twice as big as Rhode Island—smaller somewhat than Connecticut. And the population exceeds a quarter of a million.

Of the towns here marked, we are concerned with only two; Corte and Ajaccio. The former is the old home of the Buonapartes; the latter, the place to which the family removed just at the time when, by the birth of a man-child clad with thunder, it was destined to emerge from mediæval obscurities, starlike, Sirius-like, into the open sky of fame. Otherwise not much need be said of the island, its emplacement in the sea, its general aspects and possibilities.

The genesis of Napoleon touches a remarkable ethnic condition. Nearly all of the West-Aryan races have contributed to the population of the island in which he was born. The substratum was perhaps that old Etruscan life which preceded the Italicans in Italy. The first foreign colonists were Greeks, out of Ionia. These gained supremacy in the island, but were overwhelmed at length by the Carthaginians. The Roman ascendency came next, and lasted for seven or eight centuries. Then followed the Vandals, and after them the Huns of Attila. Ethnic influences had meanwhile reached a second time out of Africa. Many Mauritanians came over and settled in Sardinia and Corsica; and then, in the Dark Ages, there was a Saracenic conquest.

More important than this was the establishment of Norman power in the island. The people and the architecture alike show traces of all these remote but potent influences in determining the final race-character of the Corsicans who, after the fifteenth century, became essentially Italian. The race is thus composite in its derivation to as great a degree as any people in the world. Besides the ethnic origin, the environment—the narrow confines of the island, its mountainous character, its pleasant situation in the pellucid waters of the Mediterranean, its easy distance from the long bending line of one of the most famous coasts of the world—has tended powerfully, by the reactions of nature on the human animal, to establish and confirm the small insular race whose one man was destined to give it a conspicuous place in human annals.

The Buonapartes were true Corsicans. The family reaches back obscurely into the Middle Ages. The name is Italian, and shows linguistically an origin as remote as the Renaissance. There were Italian as well as Corsican Buonapartes. A family of this name lived in the Tuscan city of Sarzana; another perhaps, in Genoa, and another at Florence. Examples are found in which the spelling is given thus—Buona Parte. They of Sarzana were ennobled in the sixteenth century, and continued to write their name with a di, or de, until the epoch when the Great One was born. The noblesse, however, became attenuated, both in Tuscany and in the island, whereto a branch of the family, at some unknown date, removed and established itself at Corte or Ajaccio.

It would appear that the Corsican Buonapartes kept an interest in Italy, whence they originated. They concerned themselves in the affairs of Tuscany, as well as with those of Genoa. Doubtless they regarded their importance and rank as having been derived from the mainland, and would fain share in the faded glories of the Italian cities.

At the middle of the eighteenth century the head of the Corsican Buonapartes was Joseph, grandfather of Napoleon. The family resided at Corte, in the center of the island. Joseph received a patent of nobility from the grand duke of Tuscany, making him a patrician; and this worthless distinction was carried down to his son, Carlo Buonaparte, whose rights were confirmed by the Archbishop of Pisa and the King of France.

The geographical position of Corsica made it a bone of contention among the Powers. From the sixteenth to the eighteenth century the island was under the suzerainty of Genoa. The people were partisans. Some favored the Genoese; some, the French; and some, other Italian States. At the middle of the eighteenth century, there was turbulence. Insurrection came, and rebellion, and attempted independence. The patriots rose against Genoa, and a certain General Von Neuhof was about to be made king, when a French army under General Marbœuf was sent into the island to bring it into subjection. The French had just lost their colonial empire in North America, and were anxious to make a gain in the Mediterranean to counterbalance the growing power of Great Britain.

After the episode of Von Neuhof, the patriot leader Pascal Paoli gained an ascendency in Corsica, and became dictator. He contended valiantly for the independence of his country, and for a while held his powerful enemies at bay. This, however, could not last. The French party among the Corsicans desired the breaking of all connection between their country and the petty state of Genoa, and a union with the powerful kingdom of France. The cause of Paoli fell before overwhelming odds, and in May of 1768, Corsica was formally delivered to the French. The patriots were scattered, and their leader found refuge in England.

It was in the midst of these agitations, civil and military, that the Buonaparte family emerged clearly to view. Carlo Maria Buonaparte was born in Ajaccio, March 29, 1746. At the time of the failure of the revolutionary movement and the loss of his country's independence, he was twenty-two years of age. Meanwhile, in his eighteenth year, he had fallen in love with Letitia Ramolino, daughter of a well-to-do Corsican peasant. With her, nature had been prodigal of all gifts. She was beautiful to a degree; strongly marked in feature and person with the excellencies of the Italian race.

Of the Ramolino family, not much is known. Suffice it that Carlo di Buonaparte—though a noble—recklessly took Letitia in marriage when she was but fifteen years of age. She brought him her beauty and a portion of properties, but no additional rank. She is said to have been a girl of heroic qualities, queenly in her bearing, rather silent in manner, healthy as to her bodily life, and ignorant of sentiment. Her face, preserved in a hundred forms of art, shows unmistakably the origin of that Napoleonic visage with which the whole world will be familiar to the end of human records.

The character of Carlo di Buonaparte, though discoverable only in fragments, shows a mixture of courage and adventure. He was a projector of many things—a visionary. His education was obtained in Italy. He had been a student at Rome, and afterwards at Pisa, where he prepared himself to be an advocate, and obtained a reputation for youthful eloquence. The University of Pisa conferred on him, about the time of the birth of Napoleon, the degree of Doctor of Laws.

The collapse of the patriot cause had induced Carlo Buonaparte, as a measure of prudence, to leave Ajaccio and retire to Corte. The latter, being an inland town and having a mountainous situation, was more deeply pervaded with the patriotic spirit than was the lowland region about Ajaccio. The coast country gave itself up freely to the French domination. During the first five years of the married life of Carlo, he oscillated with his young family back and forth between the two towns, finally—when safety came with peace—fixing himself at Ajaccio. This was in the early part of 1769.

Meanwhile, before this removal, three children had appeared, in rapid succession, at the hearthstone of Carlo Buonaparte. All of these were born at Corte. The first was a daughter, Elise, whose birth was in 1765. This child died in infancy, as did also the next, Marie Anne, who was born about two years later. Then, on January 7th, 1768, came the first son, and to him the parents gave the name of Joseph Nabulione, or, as a secondary spelling would have it, Joseph Napoleone, or, Napoleon. The latter name, though appearing in the birth-record of the family, was dropped in the case of the oldest son, Joseph only being retained. It was the custom of the age, in the case of the death of children, to repeat their names for those born afterward. Nor was there anything exact, as in the customs of the nineteenth century, in the spelling employed.

The surname, as well as the given names, in the family of Buonaparte fluctuated into many forms, and gave rise to some discussion and confusion afterwards. One story ran to the effect that Napoleon Bonaparte was born January 7th, 1768, and Joseph about nineteen months afterwards, that is, August 15th, 1769. It was believed at one time that the father interchanged the dates of the birth of his two eldest sons, in order to get Napoleon into the military academy before his tenth year—a thing necessary under the law. But it is now known that no such thing occurred. The only ground for the invention of the fiction was the fact that Joseph's middle name was originally Nabulione, and that this name, in a modified form, was afterwards conferred on the younger son. True, the Corsican Jacob was destined from birth to clutch the heel of Esau, and to supplant him in history. The elder was to serve the younger; but this was to be effected, not by a trick of the father, but by the eternal law of the strongest!

The estate of Carlo di Buonaparte, though augmented by his intermarriage with the Ramolino family, was unequal to his tastes and desires. He possessed a property at Corte, and another in Ajaccio. To the latter he came back in the early part of 1769, and established himself in the house where Napoleon was born. The homestead di Buonaparte was favorably situated. The house is still in excellent preservation. It is four stories in height. From the upper windows one may see the ocean. The building is stuccoed, is rectangular, and has a flat roof, with a small cupola, from which the flag of France was flying at the time when the first emperor of the French came into the world.

About the birth of great men cycles of fiction grow. Friends and enemies alike invent significant circumstances. The traducers of Napoleon have said that he was illegitimate—that his father was the French marshal Marbœuf. They also say, on better grounds, that the marriage of Letitia Ramolino to Carlo Buonaparte was not solemnized until 1767—that the first two children were therefore born out of wedlock. On the other hand, the idol worshipers would fain have Napoleon born as a god or Titan. Premature pangs seize the mother at church. She hurries home, barely reaching her apartment when the heroic babe is delivered, without an accoucher, on a piece of tapestry inwrought with an effigy of Achilles! This probably occurred. It was the 15th of August, 1769. As a matter of fact, there was no omen in heaven or earth—no sign that a beautiful peasant had been delivered of a conqueror!

Two Kinds of Feminine Thumbs.

Women may be ranged into two different classes, the one having a large and the other a small thumb. The first, having more intelligence than feeling, is wise from history; the second, more feeling than intelligence, is wise from romance.

Are you desirous to win the love of a beautiful young woman with square finger ends? Be steady, and with good sense resist all captivating airs, and do not forget that she joins to a respect for the suitable the love of influence and rule; possesses a mind far above singularity and vulgarity.

Woo a woman with a strong palm, conical fingers and small thumb. Three things govern her—indolence, fancy and feeling.—New York Journal.

THIRTEEN DAYS MORE

Congressional Work Drawing to a Close.

Discussion on the Naval Appropriation Bill—Battle Ships and Torpedo Boats Wanted—Cost of Postal Cars and General Expenses Considered. Indebtedness of Pacific Railroads.

Washington, Feb. 16.—After the passage of a few private bills at the opening of the session, which occurred at 11 o'clock a. m., yesterday, the house proceeded to consider the naval appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1896. By agreement general debate was ordered to be closed at 2 o'clock to-day. The discussion was devoted to the paragraph providing for the increase of the navy by the construction of three battle ships and nine torpedo boats. This was advocated by Messrs. Pendleton (dem., W. Va.), Dolliver (rep., Ia.), Money (dem., Miss.), Wendock (dem., Mich.), and Meyer (dem., La.); and opposed by Messrs. Simpson (pop., Kan.), and Everett (dem., Mass.). A conference was ordered on the senate amendments to the house joint resolution, extending for this year only from March 1 to April 15, the time within which income tax returns may be made. At 5 o'clock, under the rule, the house took a recess until 8 p. m., the evening session to be for the consideration of private pension bills.

Cut Down the Appropriation.

The last steps were taken by the senate in the disposition of the post-office appropriation bill which has been under consideration every day since Monday. A final effort was made on the part of the committee on appropriations to reduce the compensation of the railroad companies for the use of postal cars, in the shape of an amendment offered by Mr. Blackburn (dem., Ky.) to cut down the appropriation of $3,205,000 to the extent of 10 per cent.; and the senate decided against it—yeas, 19; nays 36. It had negatived previously a similar proposition, which had come over from Thursday and which applied only to the fast mail service from Springfield, Mass., to Atlanta, and New Orleans—the vote on that proposition being yeas 18, nays 31.

Then an effort was made by Mr. Brice (dem., O.) to have the $196,000, which is appropriated for this latter service, divided with a similar fast line in the west, from Ohio to Florida. But this met with no more favor than the others and was laid on the table by a vote of 33 to 23. And then the bill was passed. The aggricultural appropriation bill followed, and had not been finally acted on when the senate adjourned. There was considerable discussion over an amendment reported from the committee on appropriations, for a modification of the law relating to the inspection of cattle and meats for exportation; and Mr. Platt (rep., Conn.) opposed any change in the law that looked to the propitiation of Germany. This amendment and others relating to irrigation, plants and seeds, etc., went over to be further discussed and acted on to-day.

Abolish the Duty on Sugar.

The house bill to abolish the differential duties on sugar was reported favorably, and without amendment from the finance committee and was placed on the calendar, with a resolution offered by Mr. Aldrich (rep., R. I.) to recommit it with instructions looking to the re-enactment of the reciprocity and sugar bounty provisions of the McKinley act, and to the re-imposition of a duty on wool.

Mr. Butler (dem., S. C.) made a speech in advocacy of the pooling bill, but made no effort to have the bill brought before the senate.

Including to-day and Monday March 4, the day on which this congress expires by law there remain but thirteen legislative days.

Other Measures Considered.

The house has still two appropriation bills, the naval and general deficiency, to dispose of. After these are out of the way the house can devote its time to any measures that may be called up. The committee on rules allots time for the consideration of all matters of importance and is constantly swamped with requests from members for recognition and from chairman of committee for days in which to dispose of measures reported by their committees.

Committees have not had a great deal of time this session owing to the pressure of appropriation bills and financial matters; so that the demand is greater now than at any time during this congress.

Chairman Reilly of the Pacific railroads committee is anxious to have the house consider the bill reported by his committee looking to the settlement of the indebtedness of the Pacific railroads. Mr. Fithian of Illinois, chairman of the merchant marine and fisheries, has been trying for the past two months to have his "free ship" bill considered. The committee on interstate and foreign commerce have a large number of bridge, lighthouse and other bills on the calendar which it wishes to pass; also the Nicaragua canal bill.

HEAVY SNOW IN THE SOUTH.

Business Suspended—Merchants Employ Their Time in Snowballing.

Savannah, Ga., Feb. 16.—Two inches of snow fell last night. It is the second snow storm experienced here in many years and the city gave itself up to hilarity. Business practically suspended during the forenoon and the business men spent the day snowballing.

Jacksonville, Fla., Feb. 16.—Snow was general throughout western and northern Florida last night. In Washington county, the ground is covered to a depth of six inches, a situation unprecedented in Florida's weather records.

Columbus, Ga., Feb. 16.—This city had the heaviest snowstorm in over half a century before daybreak yesterday morning. The city is clothed in a mantle of white and it was an unusual sight that greeted the early risers. A heavy sleet fell throughout the morning and snowballing was indulged in by old and young.

Birmingham, Ala., Feb. 16.—The severe weather has culminated in a severe snowstorm. Snow has been falling here since daybreak. It measures five inches on the level and is still coming down.

THE MINERS' CONVENTION.

Investigating Charges Against McBride—Guilty, But Not Proven.

Columbus, O., Feb. 16.—The first order of business to come before the miners' convention when it convened was the election of officers, but it was postponed. The report of the committee appointed to investigate the charges of Mark Wild against John McBride was submitted by T. L. Lewis of Ohio. It was as follows:

"Your committee appointed to investigate the charges of bribery preferred by Mark Wild against John McBride held a meeting and after hearing all the evidence that had any bearing on the case, we beg leave to report that there is not sufficient evidence to prove bribery." The report is signed by all the members of the committee. T. T. O'Malle, of Ohio, opposed the adoption of the committee's report. He said it was the same old Scotch verdict "not proven."

BALTIMOREANS SHIPWRECKED.

Took Lifeboats and Reached Roanoke Island in Safety.

Baltimore, Feb. 16—A private telegram was received here yesterday announcing that a party of Baltimoreans had been shipwrecked on Roanoke island, off the coast of North Carolina. Mr. S. G. Waters, of this city, was one of the party and the sender of the telegram.

The steamer in which the party was traveling was caught in one of the recent severe storms and wrecked a short distance from the island. The passengers took to the lifeboats and reached land in safety. They are still upon the island. It is probable that the secretary of the navy will be asked to send a revenue cutter to their relief.

WILL MILL AND MINE GOLD.

Ex-Editor of the Newark Times One of the Incorporators.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 16.—The Newark Consolidated Milling & Mining company filed papers of incorporation with the county clerk yesterday. Its purpose is to mill and mine gold, silver, iron, copper and other precious metals in Clipin county, Col.

The offices of the company are to be in this city and Central City, Col. Its capital stock is placed at $150,000, and that amount will be used to begin business with. These are the incorporators: James Weaver and Frank Holt, of this city, and Thomas C. Barr, of East Orange.

Found the Boy Hanging.

Troy, N. Y., Feb. 16.—Ernest Winters, 10 years old, attempted suicide yesterday in the Parsons public school, Hoosick Falls. The boy was reprimanded by his teacher for disobedience, and shut up in the cloak room. Some time after, the teacher found the pupil suspended from a hook and unconscious. Winters had buckled a skate strap round his neck, and tucked a mitten between the strap and his neck to make the noose tight. Mr. Dillon, the teacher, released the boy, and succeeded in reviving him.

Want an Advance in Wages.

Niantic, Conn., Feb. 16.—The granite cutters of this section and from Stony Creek will hold a meeting in Westerly, R. I., next week to arrange a new schedule of wages for the Manufacturers' association. It is proposed by the granite cutters here to ask for an advance of 4 per cent. in wages. It is not believed that the demand will precipitate a strike, since the men say that the manufacturers have practically agreed to the new wage schedule.

Legislature Has Adjourned.

Indianapolis, Feb. 16.—Pierre Gray, son of the dead minister to Mexico, says that his father's body will be brought here at once for burial. The funeral will be a large and notable one, many organizations from over the state having already signified their intention to attend. The body will probably lie in state at the capitol building. The legislature has adjourned out of respect to the memory of the ex-governor.

The Way of the Editor Is Hard.

City of Mexico, Feb. 16.—A sensation has been created in newspaper circles by the arrest and solitary confinement in Belem prison of Jose Candera de Velasca, managing editor of La Raza Latina. The warrant was issued by Judge Velazquez and the charge is abuse of public officials through the columns of his newspaper. Velasco is one of the most prominent newspaper men in Mexico.

Two Killed; One Injured.

Towanda, Pa., Feb. 16.—By the explosion of a boiler in the Cobb sawmill near this city, Fireman Theodore Pencil and a teamster named John Mack were instantly killed. Frank Myers, a mill hand, was fatally injured. The explosion nearly demolished the building and the noise could be heard for miles.

Gloversville Indebtedness.

Albany, Feb. 16.—Gov. Morton has signed chapter 20, authorizing Gloversville to issue $23,000 in bonds to pay certain indebtedness and chapter 21, amending generally the charter of Gloversville.

THE PRESIDENT'S PLEA

Miss Willard's Account of the Monster Petition.

Houses of Shame, Dens of Vice and Opium Joints Included in the Campaign—An Appeal to the Government—A Protest of Sorrow and Not of Anger.

Washington, Feb. 16.—Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the National and of the World's W. C. T. U., in speaking on "The Origin of the Petition" at the convention in session here, said:

Home protection is the key word of woman's work. Manufacturers seek the tariff for the purpose of protection to industries, adult and infant; trades unions are founded to protect the wage worker from the aggressions of capital, and corporations and monopolies to protect capital from the encroachments of competition, but the white ribbon movement, local, state, national and international, seeks protection for the home, and is the shining forth of the "hearthfire's ruddy glow" and a "light in the window for thee."

This polyglot petition is but our prayer that "tells out" a purpose of our hearts, and has been wrought into a plea before the nations of the world. The petition is the protest of the world's wifehood and motherhood, its sisterhood and daughterhood—a protest "in sorrow, not in anger." We expect to present this petition to representatives of every civilized government. This cannot be done in the usual form, because when once received this magna charta of the home would become the property of the various legislatures and parliaments, and our plan requires that it be conveyed from one to another.

Those Houses of Shame.

We are also aware that in a legal and technical sense no government accepts the signatures of those outside its own barriers. We have therefore preferred to make our petition a great popular testimonial against the enemies of the home, but we expect that its presentation will give an added impetus to progressive legislation against the liquor traffic, the opium trade, the gambling den, the house of shame. For, while the last two are not specifically named, they are so closely interwoven with the traffic in alcohol and opium that the spirit of the petition necessarily includes them all.

Because we are patriots we have come to the capital of our native land to present this petition first of all in the country in which it originated, and which has sent out all the white ribbon missionaries who have secured its circulation in foreign countries. We present it to members of the United States senate and house of representatives, and we expect to secure a hearing, with the petition for its basis, before committees of those two bodies. We have sent a copy of the petition to every officer connected with our national legislature, and as a matter of courtesy to every member of the United States government.

With Clear Brain.

The following is the form of the petition of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance union for the protection of the home, addressed to the governments of the world:

"Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

"We, your petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land and the world's family of nation.

"We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

"We know that indulgence in alcohol and opium, and in vices that disgrace our social life makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and our children.

"We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the government partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know, with shame, that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

"We know that the law might do much now left undone to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

"We have no power to prevent these great iniquities, beneath which the whole world groans, but you have the power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

"We, therefore, come to you with united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your government extends."

They All Sign It.

Though this is a woman's petition, it should be noted that it is endorsed by perhaps 1,000,000 men—some of personal signatures, but most by the attestation of the officers of societies to which they belong. Thus the Salvation Army has indorsed it with its 300,000 members; the Good Templars have put their 570,000 names upon it by attestation; the Universal Peace union has signed it in this way, and innumerable societies and conventions have swelled the list; the United Society of Christian Endeavor has alone added 2,000,000 names, while innumerable churches and church societies will swell the total by 1,000,000 more. Even from far off Ceylon, which we are accustomed to think of as a small island of dusky savages, come the signatures of 27,000 men; who call for the cessation of the liquor and opium traffic.

"I Forgive All; May God Forgive Me."

St. Louis, Feb. 16.—The corpse of an unknown man, supposed to be C. J. Grosse, of Kansas City, was found in a passenger car closet yesterday. The train arrived from Kansas City. In an account book found on the body the following was written: "I forgive all. May God forgive me." The train crew recognized the corpse as that of a passenger from Kansas City.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Lesson For the Week Beginning Feb. 17. Comment by Rev. Walter J. Yates, A. M. Topic, The Showbread.

BIBLE READINGS.—Ex. xxv, 23-30; Heb. ix, 2.

Nearly every religion of antiquity recognized in some manner the fact that the fertility of the earth, yielding harvests and sustaining man by food, was due to a divine power above man. In many lands the thought took form as an image of the nourishing mother. Such was Diana of the Ephesians. The Hebrew mode of teaching this fact was peculiar and conveyed a deeper spiritual meaning than the other religions. In the tabernacle, and afterward in the temple, a table overlaid with gold was placed in the holy place half way down the north side and opposite the golden candelabrum. On this were laid 12 loaves of bread. They were made of oblong shape ten hand breadths long and five wide and seven fingers thick. They were placed in two piles of six each, the loaves being separated from each other by rods of wood covered with gold. A gold cup was placed on top of each pile of bread to receive frankincense. This is the traditional account. The bread was replaced each Sabbath with fresh loaves. The frankincense was burned on the altar, and the bread eaten by the priests.

The probable intention of this observance was to keep ever in the mind of the people the truth that God is the nourisher both of body and soul. It was not a sacrificial offering of the people to the Deity, but an object of the Divine sustenance of all things physical and spiritual. The true spirit is best expressed in the reply of Jesus to the tempter in the wilderness, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word which proceeds out of the mouth of God." The type was fulfilled in Christ himself, who is the real bread of life. The New Testament idea is that all God's true followers are priests and are to feed, not occasionally on consecrated things, but continually in heart and outer life, "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Every meal should be a true sacrament received with devout thankfulness, so that as physical power is recuperated the inner life is also renewed by Divine grace.

Temperance Work.

The cause of total abstinence and saloon suppression has made wonderful advance in recent years. No more efficient aid for this great reform can be found than that offered in the hosts of the young people of the different denominational societies. The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor has been active in many places, both in pledge work and efforts to secure public municipal action. The Epworth League gives this cause a prominent place under one of the departments and has firm basis for all her work in the resolutions of the general conference regarding the liquor traffic, "it can never be legalized without sin." "It is the duty of every Christian to wage ceaseless warfare against it."

Christian Temperance League.

The need that all the separate forces of temperance workers be combined is apparent. How to accomplish that result is not so clear. That such an end will be reached eventually seems probable. Looking toward this, the last general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church appointed a permanent committee of 15 to have oversight of the formation of a Christian Temperance league, with branches in every charge, and to unite with similar organizations in other denominations. The membership of the society is to include all members of the congregation willing to unite for practical effort in suppressing the liquor traffic. This may not be the final form of society under which victory will be won, but it is a step forward and marks distinct advance in method and spirit.

Slow, but Sure.

The teaching of a few children Sunday after Sunday the simple, commonplace truths of the Bible and Christian living may not seem attractive as an occupation or valuable in result. Reform work among adults; revivals, with many conversions and apparent progress, seem much more attractive, but in the long spaces of time work with the children will be found to yield returns inferior to no other effort in Christ's cause. Growth may be slow, but it is sure. Secure the children of this generation, and the next generation of adults will need no reform and conversion, since they will have been rightly formed and turned in early years and will not depart from that right way. Look out for the children!

Chattanooga In June.

There are few more delightful place in the country than eastern Tennessee in the latter part of spring and early in summer. The selection of Chattanooga for holding the international Epworth League convention, June 27-30, 1895, was a wise decision. Arrangements for the grandest gathering ever held by young Methodism are well in hand. Excursions from all parts of the land are already planned. That will be a grand time of "lifting up" in all respects. "Let every one look up" to the Master for his special guidance. Who can forecast the momentous issues which may lie hidden in that gathering! What possibilities for the future of our beloved Methodism and the kingdom of God at large! May many who attend the convention climb a Lookout mount in spirit and get extended views of the beautiful landscape of a God given heritage. Old battlefields are good places for fraternal gatherings.

Jews In Palestine.

Bishop Blyth of Jerusalem says that about 100,000 Jews have entered Palestine during the last seven years, and the arrival of a vaster host is imminent. No one can forecast the extent of Jewish immigration to that land during the next seven years.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR—COMMENT BY REV. S. H. DOYLE.

TOPIC.—Lessons from the parable of the good Samaritan.—Luke x, 25-37. (A missionary topic.)

The parallel of the good Samaritan is recorded by Luke alone. We do not know either the time when or the place where it was spoken. It is probable that it was during one of Christ's public discourses, when He was interrupted by the lawyer who asked Him what He should do to inherit eternal life. In answer Christ asked him what the law said, and he replied, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, * * * and thy neighbor as thyself." Probably to vindicate himself the lawyer further inquires, "Who is my neighbor?" to which question Christ replies with the parable of the good Samaritan, to the lessons of which our topic directs us.

1. We learn from this parable the brotherhood of man. This was the great lesson it was to teach. The lawyer was a Jew. He had been taught that the word neighbor was limited by nationality and religion; that people of a different nationality and religion had no just claims upon him, and therefore in fulfilling all his obligations to his own people he obeyed the command to love his neighbors as himself. But Christ wished to teach him differently and did so by making him admit that a Samaritan, between whom and the Jews there was no affiliation or association, had proved himself neighbor to an unfortunate Jew who had been waylaid by thieves when he had compassion on him and helped him rather than men of his own race who had looked upon him and had passed by without assisting him. This is the one great lesson taught by this parable—that all men are our brothers, our neighbors; that nationality and religion do not separate men so that the one has no obligations toward the other. As God is our common Father, so all men are our brothers, and we are each our brother's keeper.

2. We may learn also the estimation which the world places upon pharisaism. Christ may not have intended particularly to hold up the priest and Levite to the scorn and ridicule of the world. He may have used them simply to emphasize the character of the Samaritan, and yet the result has been the same. The world ever since has held them up but to heap scorn and ridicule and abuse upon them, and in so doing it has without qualification condemned pharisaism in any form.

3. We may learn the beauty of sympathy and self sacrince. The Samaritan saw before him a fellow creature in need of his help. He sympathized with him, and sacrificing his race and religious prejudices he helped him. His action has always been praised and lauded. The church and the world never tire of singing his praises. "Go and do thou likewise." On the highway of life many have been robbed and plundered of things more dear than physical life and earthly possessions. They need your help. They need you to carry or send the gospel to them. Be a good Samaritan and do it.

Bible Readings.—Gen. iv, 8-12; Lev. xix, 18; Ps. xxxv, 11-14; Prov. xix, 17; Math. v, 43, 44; xxviii, 19, 20; Luke vi, 31; John xiii, 34; Acts i, 8, xvi, 9-12; Gal. vi, 2; I John iii, 17; iv, 20, 21.

Christian Endeavor Churches.

A recent speaker before the Christian Endeavor union of Manchester repeated the old charge against Christian Endeavor—that it was founding a separate denomination, giving as proof the fact that already several Christian Endeavor churches had been built. American editors, I am glad to say, have learned that these "Christian Endeavor churches" have all been built by the regular denominational boards of home missions of the various denominations, with money furnished at their invitation by the Christian Endeavorers of those denominations. That is all there is to that charge.—John Willis Baer.

The Best Commandment.

The fourth commandment is the test commandment of the ten, the very keystone of the arch. Again and again it has been made the starting point, the entering wedge of great moral changes. It is the strategic point. It sounds the keynote. That man who has little or no regard for the Lord's day has within him the moral tone of an idolater, a thief, a liar, a murderer. That government which fails to observe the command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," sets a premium on every sin of the decalogue.—M. D. Kneeland, D. D.

How to Reduce the Number of Heathen.

An English Endeavorer formed the plan of collecting as many 3d. pieces as would furnish one for each 1,000,000 of heathen in the world, and he did it—840 three penny bits. Is not this a plan that can be carried out by all Endeavorers? It would not take many sets of 840 dimes each to reduce considerably the number of heathen that must be counted.—Selected

NEVER SAW HIS BOSS.

Set Russ the Business So Well that His Employer Is Rich and Happy.

George E. Vanderhoef, the popular manager of the Great A and P Tea Co. of 137 and 139 West Front street, informs The Press that he entered the employ of George F. Gilman, the owner and proprietor of the West Front street store who is also the owner of some two hundred other stores in all parts of the United States, in the year 1879, some sixteen years ago, and that he did not at that time nor has he ever since seen Mr. Gilman, his principal and employer, and would not know him on the street if he should meet him; and if Mr. Gilman should come to the Front street store he would seriously object to his going behind the counter until he first introduced himself, and to Vanderhoef's knowledge he does not believe he has ever been to any of the stores which he Vanderhoef has been connected with. The whole business of two hundred stores is conducted through a superintendent and an assistant, with their main office in New York city. Mr. Gilman resides in Hartford, Conn.

Mr. Vanderhoef says that the business is conducted under such a perfect system that although he carries a large and very valuable stock, and has in his charge in the store and under his control an immense assortment of banquet lamps, crockery ware, and other goods to be given away, he can, if it becomes necessary, take an account of stock inside of two hours, showing exactly the stock on hand and the stock sold, and make out a full and complete inventory of the business.

Mr. Vanderhoef before coming to Plainfield was connected with one of Mr. Gilman's stores in Newark, where a very large and lucrative business was built up. Mr. Vanderhoof has a good personality, is very much of a gentleman, has cordiality of address with a warm greeting, and a pleasant smile and a kind word for all; and he informs The Press he takes great pleasure in showing anyone through the store, and explaining to them the workings of the beautiful little electric motor which is connected with the coffee mill, which is quite a curiosity in itself, and also to exhibit to them the very large collection of presents, and explain the system of tickets given for each pound of tea and coffee, and for each can of condensed milk, sold.

He is always willing to do this, whether they intend to purchase or not, and he extends to the public a cordial invitation to come into the beautiful store and look around.

Mr. Vanderhoef will no doubt build up a large and lucrative business in Plainfield, as he has marked ability.

Wigwam Jollity.

After the regular tribal session of Miantonomoh Tribe, Friday night, during which very interesting remarks were made by District Deputy John H. Carney, P. S., who has done so much in years past for this tribe that they never fail to honor him whenever opportunity affords, visiting President of the State Haymakers Association E. J. Lake of Jersey City, spoke most earnestly of the great benefit which will accrue to Redmen by universally adopting the new insurance feature which is now being agitated. Following President Lake were several brothers from Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe No. 193, all of whom made felicitous and interesting remarks. The resuscitation of the defunct loft of Haymakers, Miantonomah 118½ was begun immediately after the tribe session. Deputy President John H. Carney P. C. H. took charge of the ceremonies, modestly giving way in honor of President Lake during the conferring of the obligations. Deputy Carney was assisted by the degree team of the old established Hayloft, Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque 193½. Twenty-two tramps passed through the solemn and touching ordeal. It was after midnight when the party adjourned to the Crescent Hotel where a collation was served and the companions (those who did not already know him) had an opportunity to become better acquainted with genial State President Lake who is so popular with the members of 193½, as in fact, he is in every hayloft where he is known throughout the great farm of New Jersey.

The following officers were elected.

A GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY.

James Clark of Plainfield Signally Honored by St. Louis Odd Fellows.

From the Shoe and Leather Gazette of Feb. 14, which publishes a portrait of Mr. Clark in connection therewith, the following concerning a prominent Plainfielder is taken:

Few men live to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of anything later than their birth. A half century is a good, long time, and the golden wedding period seldom finds husband and wife alive. More rare than this by far is the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of membership in a fraternal organization.

This is an unique distinction which has fallen to the lot of James Clark, of James Clark & Co., the Nestor of the St. Louis leather trade.

On Saturday last Mr. Clark was notified that a new special degree would be conferred upon him that evening by St. Louis Lodge No. 5, I. O. O. F., at its hall. No. 5 is one of the oldest lodges in the city and is composed principally of old-time, solid merchants who have worked shoulder to shoulder with him these many years to build up and broaden the trade of St. Louis. The hall was filled with these old friends, with Grand Secretary E. M. Sloan in the chair, when Mr. Clark was called out to receive the new degree. The regular routine business of the evening had been completed and a choir had sung several selections when suddenly, in response to a call for a speech, Past Grand Master Edw. Wilkerson arose and with well-chosen words presented the astonished celebrant with a token of the esteem and high regard of his lodge friends.

As unusual as was the occasion, even more unusual was the token—a handsome album beautifully inscribed in gold with suitable sentiments. Every page contained a greeting or an historical reminiscence written in his own hand by each individual member, elaborately ornamented throughout with pen-work by members of the lodge, the whole comprising a beautiful souvenir of a striking nature and priceless to its recipient from the pleasant memories it awakens and the devoted friendship to which it bears testimony.

Mr. Clark has always taken a great interest in Odd Fellowship, and as long ago as 1849 had filled the chairs and was Noble Grand of his lodge. During that trying year the cholera scourge was prevalent in St. Louis, and the fraternal bonds were welded strong and firm by the affliction that beset the city.

Unfortunately, the precise date of Mr. Clark's first connection with St. Louis Lodge No. 5 is not known, the early records having been destroyed by fire a quarter of a century ago, but it was known that his initiation occurred between October, '44, and April, '45, and with this knowledge the event was planned and carried out so adroitly that Mr. Clark had not the faintest impression of what was to take place until amidst music and flowers the testimonial of his old friends was tendered him.

This is undoubtedly the first anniversary of its kind ever known in Missouri, and yet Mr. Clark is not an old man by any means. His strong, healthy body and firm, active tread are the envy of many a man half his years. Vigorous and hale, he bids fair to round out a full three-quarters of a century in Odd Fellowship. That he may do so is the sincere wish of his hundreds of friends.

And It Is Aggravating.

As a rule most people are intensely exasperated when, after wading through some exciting story in the newspaper which they have devoured with breathless interest, to find at the finish it is only a trap to advertise some wonderful soap or patent medicine. Of course its disappointing, but just consider how cleverly it's done, and, by the way, what a wonderful industry has been developed in this mode of advertising. Some of the great medicine firms pay their advertising agent as high as ten thousand dollars a year, and a certain manufacturer of soap pays his advertiser twenty-five thousand. Just think of it, and while you are thinking just remember that "She Couldn't Marry Three" is the best show on the road.

Did Their Work Well.

The work of taking the stenographic notes of the addresses of the Y. M. C. A. State Convention was done by George Strassuer and Edwin J. Handley, of the New York Stenographic Reporting Corps. They are both experts in this class of work, the former having officiated as stenographer at many of the noted murder trials in the metropolis—notably the Carlyle Harris and Maggie Fuller cases. Mr. Handley is only 20 years of age but is as fast and correct as many having extensive experience.

END OF CONVENTION.

State Y. M. C. A. Delegates Say Goodbye to Plainfield.

ROUSING MEETINGS ALL SUNDAY.

Boys, Women and Men Have Special Sessions—Powerful Addresses by Leading Men—Impressive Farewell Service Crowds the First Baptist Church.

The twenty-sixth annual Y. M. C. A. State Convention came to an end with most impressive services yesterday.

Saturday afternoon from 2 to 3 the time of the convention was taken up with sectional conferences in the different rooms of the Association building.

Educational work was expounded by A. B. Clemens of this city, and George B. Hodge of New York, to a number of young people interested in that line of work, the subject being "What to do, and how to do it".

William D. Murray conducted a Bible study in Association Hall for those who are seeking knowledge in this direction. "The study of the Bible as literature" was considered.

"How to conduct men's meetings" was the theme on which H. A. Cozzens of Newark made observations to a circle of delegates who look after this important work in their home associations.

Sumner F. Dudley of Orange, with whom all the younger element have sought advice and instruction, was in Room 4 with the juveniles, and disseminated practical ideas among them.

William E. Drake of Jersey City led the discussion on district work, and offered many practical propositions as to successfully coping with it, and to make work effective.

The railroad work conference was led by W. C. Fenno of New York with a paper on "Best results in railroad work: in what direction are they to be secured"?

At the conclusion of the conferences, the convention was adjourned to the First Baptist Church, where a large audience was present to hear the address of Dr. A. T. Pierson of Philadelphia, in place of J. T. Swift of Tokyo, Japan, who was unable to be present. The speaker possesses a deliberate delivery. He spoke of the Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit—he said—is to every living believer the same inspiration that the personality of Christ was when He was here in life. Whatever Christ would have been to the disciples had He remained here on earth the Holy Spirit is to be and will be to the followers of Him today. The Holy Spirit is one of the most stupendous mysteries which theologists have to grasp. No man understands the sin of not believing in Christ until the Spirit prompts him to realize it; other sins he realizes by his own intuition. The Spirit strengthens and quickens the mentality of man. In his own case he never committed or used notes for the line of thought on which he desired to talk, but instead depended on the Spirit to prompt and quicken his intellect, and he knew it to be a demonstration of an indisputable fact. You cannot contemplate good things without becoming better yourself; and thus it is concerning the work of God—become engrossed of Him, and you will become more godlike.

A parlor conference for the college delegates was held between 4:30 and 7 at the home of Fred H. Andrews on Central avenue. The occasion was a pleasant one, and papers were read imparting considerable practical knowledge to those in attendance. At the close of the conference a dinner was served.

The evening session, continued in the First Baptist Church, was addressed by Thomas Cochran of St. Paul, Minn., and Robert E. Speer of New York. Mr. Cochran opened his talk first, and spoke of the difference of the college student from other classes of young men. How, to a certain extent, they were isolated from the home training and influence, when away at school, and their need of some directing spirit to pursue the path of virtue and right. The capacities of the college men were greater than most others, but only a small percentage ever engaged in religious work or even professed Christianity. Therefore, there was a field open for laborers in this direction.

Mr. Speer followed, and though a young man discussed the subject of "A working creed for a college man", with a logic and conception that evinced a thorough study of the problem. He said that some thought Christianity was a dogma, while others thought it life. He considered that it was a mixture of both. There were some people who were all-wise and discussed and tried to solve all the momentous problems of the day. Following out this plan their efforts were all wasted. Each should centre his mind on some one special subject, and then results were most liable to accrue. A creed could be defined as a great principle, supplemented with well defined opinion.

A creed, he considered, acted as a barrier to keep out of your circle those with whom you don't agree, and to keep in those with whom you do. He believed in ambition and passion. When a person confesses Christ he did not want to see those characteristics eliminated from his life, but instead used with renewed energy in the cause of God. He believed in identification with great issues for the sake of the cause—not for the sake of self. Men looking for their own glorification were the greatest barrier encountered in the consummation of great movements.

At the close of the address the business committee announced that they were ready to receive applications from delegates for the designation of the next place of holding the convention. As no applications were made, on motion the matter was referred to the executive committee for decision.

Yesterday afternoon the meeting held in Music Hall was attended by a large concourse of men—both young and old. The service was conducted by Rev. J. H. Elliott, who in this line of work was in his element. He told "An Old Love Story" and eloquently and convincingly told the Gospel news. He has an entertaining and persuasive manner of talk in receiving converts to the religious life, and at this meeting a number in the audience proffered a desire to start anew in life's way.

The meeting was opened by a song service, conducted by B. Frank Butts, and the audience made the hall resound with their melodies of the Gospel hymns which acted as a tonic in warming up their souls to a proper appreciation of the splendid talk which followed by the leader. As a Scripture lesson he read a few verses from the first chapter of John. His text was from John 3-16: "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life". This verse, he said, was the very essence of the teachings of the Bible. It meant more than any other portion of the teachings, and one who could fully realize this great sacrifice made by God, enjoyed to a greater extent the fruition of His words.

The infidel told you that God was a hard taskmaster, but He is a God of love in all its meaning. The man who loved Deity alone through nature, generally took along a beer keg to assist him in that direction. A good many told you that they were doing the best they could, but when it came down to a fact they were not doing anything of the kind.

If God did the best he could in giving Jesus Christ to save the world, the best you can do is to accept the gift. A number of the delegates furnished testimony of their experience, and through cards over 50 men and boys expressed a wish to live better lives.

Announcement was also made that meetings will be held in the Y. M. C. A. Assembly Hall every night this week, with F. B. Hoagland as leader. The Parks sisters, cornetists, will assist in furnishing the music at the meetings.

An after-meeting was held in the hall at the close of the regular meeting, in which testimony was offered to encourage those who had professed a desire to live a new life. Much enthusiasm was manifested by those who remained.

Prayer for young men in foreign mission lands was the topic treated in Assembly Hall at 2:30 Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Swift was to lead, but was called away by the death of his father. In his place was H. J. Scudder, returned from four years in Madras. Mr. Walter led the singing. There were ready responses, and much spirituality was manifested.

The boys meeting at 4 Sunday afternoon in Association Hall was one of those which will long be remembered. The youthful congregation was large. The meeting was led by Sumner F. Dudley, and began with a service of song. A piano and clarionet aided the strong manly voices and the service was very impressive. After prayer and an autoharp solo by Mr. Blackwell, Mr. Dudley made a few remarks on the story of Jesus and Nicodemus, and applied it to modern life, telling in a straightforward, earnest way how to inherit eternal life. Silent prayer followed, and he asked all who would now start in the new life to raise their hands. Then came the most effective part of the service, over thirty boys expressing a desire to become followers of Jesus and enter into the happy estate of a Christian. An after-meeting was held, in which the new converts were counseled in their change of life, and encouraged to continue in the straight and narrow path.

A preparation meeting was held in Association Hall yesterday morning. Robert E. Speer was the leader, and made it a very helpful meeting for all.

After a short talk on why we should pray, by Mr. Speer, a number of short earnest prayers were offered. The room was well filled.

The women's meeting, held in the Trinity Reformed Church Sunday afternoon at 4, was largely attended. The meeting commenced with a song service, led by Horace J. Martin. Scripture reading and prayer by the leader, Mr. Cooper of the International Committee, followed, after which he made a short address. After a few introductory remarks, he told of the different kinds of Y. M. C. A. work: the city work, divided into the spiritual, educational, social and physical branches; the college associations and the great amount of good that is being done by them; the Railroad Y. M. C. A., and the splendid results it has accomplished; and the work among the Germans, colored people and Indians. He urged everyone to put themselves more in the place of the homeless young men and seek to aid them in their endeavor to lead a Christian life.

For the Railroad Department of the Y. M. C. A. service was held in the First M. E. Church Sunday evening. Rev. Dr. C. R. Barnes opened the meeting with the usual exercises, after which it was put in the hands of Jerry R. George as leader. After a few words of introduction, Mr. George called on each of the railroad men present to testify for three minutes.

Mr. Baker, a United States Expressman, was the first to speak. He testified of the great goodness of God and how He had aided the good work.

Mr. Lewis, an engineer on the D L & W was the next speaker, and told how the Railroad Y M C A had helped him and how many it was helping every day.

F W Weisenflue, a fireman on the D L & W, compared the Christian and his life to the fireman and his duties.

Mr. Burns, a brakeman on the same road, compared the dangers of life to a runaway train, and spoke of the great amount of work yet to be done.

Mr. Raritan, a machinist, gave some of his experiences in the Christian life and among the railroad men.

H. G. Peabody, the sweet singer of the railroad men, sang the testimony of the men on the railroad.

Tom Conan ended the testimonies with one straight from his honest heart. He told of the condition of the railroad men many years ago and of their improvement, and then added the story of his conversion.

H. A. Lesse of Elmira was introduced by Mr. George, and told of how he had been lifted up from the depths of sin and how he had become a "man". Then, in his plain and simple way, he counseled all his hearers to follow his example.

After a hymn Rev Dr C R Barnes closed the meeting with the benediction.

The union services at the Crescent Avenue Church last evening opened with a selection by the Young Men's Christian Association double male quartette. After this J. H. Elliott read as a Scripture lesson part of the sixteenth chapter of St. John. Dr. Richards then led in prayer, and spoke a few words.

J. H. Elliott, the first speaker of the evening, took his text from the last chapter of first Chronicles, "And who is willing to consecrate his services this day to the Lord?" In his discourse he dwelt on the words consecration and service. He said there were more people dying from being rusty in church work than there were from overwork, and gave many illustrating incidents, some of which were taken from his own experience.

People could not do more real service for the Lord than in inviting people to the church and in speaking a few kind words to them when inside. Much of the church work was simply dress parade, as it were, and not real service, and if one used the same energy in bringing people to Christ as he does in social life or business, much more would be accomplished. He closed his talk with these words "Service for Christ brings blessing untold".

After the choir had sang "Nearer My God to Thee", Thomas Cochran of St. Paul was introduced.

He said that the Y. M. C. A. had the effect of bringing young men into more active service in the work of the different churches. He asked this question, "What shall the convention in this city accomplish?" One never knows what real love is until some severe trial has come, and the trial in this case is with the souls of men. He offered in closing this motto for Christians: "More, Lord Jesus, More."

The meeting was closed to permit those who wished, to attend the farewell meeting in the First Baptist Church.

The union meeting in the First Baptist Church at 7:30 p. m. was presided over by Pastor Yerkes, who opened with prayer. The first speaker was Jas. E. Swain, secretary of the college associations. He said that the blood of Jesus Christ tells of the great sacrifice God made for us, and we must realize the preciousness of the sacrifice to appreciate the redemption price that was paid that the world might be saved. Take away sin and you take away sorrow and distress. The blood of Christ secures forgiveness, peace, sanctification, and justification, and cleanses all who accept it as a saving power, for it was shed to save sinners.

Robert E. Speer of New York next spoke of the lack of aggressiveness on the part of those who profess Christianity to use their endeavors to secure more converts. There were too many, he said, who were afraid to use their powers of perseverance on their friends and acquaintances. There were various reasons to be assigned for their half-heartedness. A great many were high in social standing, and they feared if they prosecuted missionary work it might not be admired in their set. During political campaigns men were not averse to going among strangers and importuning them to support their particular cause and candidates, and there was no reason why they should not speak of God's cause to strangers with equal avidity and earnestness. Oftentimes one had the impulse to speak out, but their courage failed them and they kept putting it off. What was needed was more confidence, more pluck and a better understanding of the teachings of the Bible.

At 9, when the time came to call the farewell meeting of the convention to order, the church was packed with those anxious to hear the closing exercises. With the delegates grouped together in the front pews and the State Executive Committee seated on the platform, President Murray called the session to order.

The report of the Committee on Resolutions was first presented, and the substance of the preamble presented was that they rejoiced in the reports of increased membership, regretted the falling off in Bible and educational training departments; commended the diligent and efficient work of the State officers for the past year, and that an assistant be employed for State Secretary Arthur Lucas; they were encouraged by the good reports from nearly all departments, and especially congratulated the Plainfield Association on the handsome new building in which they were now located. They extended the most sincere thanks and were under great obligations to Plainfield citizens for the hospitality extended during the convention, and especially to the Christian Endeavor and Epworth League societies, churches and pastors for the interest displayed and courtesies extended to make the convention a success.

The Committee on Credentials reported that 215 delegates had been registered, as follows: International Committee, 5; State officers, 9; local delegates, 148; college delegates, 32; railroad delegates, 7; corresponding delegates, 6; visitors, 7.

President Murray announced that the State conventions of Iowa, Wisconsin and South Carolina, had sent greetings to them. And he was particularly pleased to state that the crowning work of the convention for Plainfield, was in the fact that in the boys meeting in the afternoon 33 had professed a desire to lead better lives, as had over 50 in the men's meeting in Music Hall. He said that now that the time had come for these to depart, he trusted that they might carry home some of the fire that had enthused them during the convention. The people of Plainfield had been glad to have them here for increasing the prospects of leading New Jersey to Jesus Christ.

As a parting message he wanted to read Mark x: 49, and from this secure encouragement to continue the work with vigor. Inasmuch as great blessings had been received, he thought that a short season of prayer would be proper. The suggestion was followed and a number of short prayers were invoked by delegates.

D. A. MacPhie followed next and said that some cried that the young men monopolized too much time and interest. This was an age for young men, and everything possible was being done to strengthen him morally, mentally, physically and spiritually. There were 900,000 young men in this country outside of the church, and when filled with true manliness, they would wield a great power. Their habits of life and thought were fixed early in life and the Y M C A was endeavoring to lead them into the proper channels.

L. C. Drake of Newark, president of the State Executive Committee, wanted the delegates to show their appreciation of the good they had received by pledging themselves that they would try and convert at least one sinner during the year.

Rev. J. F. Elliott said that the great audience present expresses the belief and confidence that Plainfield has in these young men and their work, and he, himself, had never mingled with a class of workers who had the spirit of God any more than these delegates had. He trusted that every one of them would go home carrying the good influence into every home they came in contact with. The meetings were like the good weather, the longer they lasted the better they were liked.

The closing talk of the convention was made by Robert E Speer. The convention might prove good and again dangerous to the delegates. Conventions are not a normal condition of Christian life—they are an excitement and urgency. Life is an even, unbroken devotion to Christ, and when you go out to do active work and run up against sinners you are liable to receive a chill. Though you may change but Christ will not, it is a splendid thing to realize what it means to have Him at our head. The trouble is that too many rest on their love towards God, rather than on God's love towards them. The way to steady your life throug the year is to follow implicitly theu nchangeable love of God.

The last act of the convention was for the delegates to join hands and sing "Blest be the tie that binds", which was rendered with much feeling. It was a most impressive and affecting scene.

President Murray then declared the 25th annual State Convention of the New Jersey Y. M. C. A. adjourned sine die.

Dr. Richards pronounced the benediction, after which the delegates had a general handshaking and departed greatly benefited by their attendance.

The Gospel in Hope.

After the regular Sunday-school session of Hope Chapel was over yesterday afternoon, the superintendent, H. C. Squires, had the pleasure of introducing to the scholars Robert E. Speer of Princeton College, who made a short address on the lesson which the scholars had just studied. He took for his subject the life of Christ. His remarks were very interesting, and he showed very plainly to his hearers the reward to be won if they would cross the line and come to Christ. During his remarks he related many incidents about people he had known who had come to grief by putting off this free and costless salvation. Mr. Speer is a very fine talker, and during his fifteen-minutes discourse he held his hearers' close attention. Short addresses were made by Mr. Swain, a delegate to the Y. M. C. A. Convention, and Rev. G. K. Newell, pastor of the chapel.

TWELVE DAYS OVERDUE.

The steamship City of St. Augustine, from Jacksonville for New York, is now twelve days overdue.

She has not been seen since Feb. 5.

A Cranford Suit.

The case of Lent against Rogers was tried before Justice Newcorn this morning. The plaintiff sued to recover a two per cent. commission agreed to be paid for furnishing architectural plans for building a house for the defendant at Cranford. The commissions amounted to $167.70, of which $82 had been paid, leaving $80.70 to be collected. The defense alleged that several of the bills were incorrect, and also placed in evidence counter-claims. Reed & Coddington were the attorneys for the plaintiff, the former trying the case, while George H. Bruce of New York was counsel for the defendant. Decision was reserved until tomorrow morning at 10. The summing up was made in an aggressive manner by both attorneys.

Sarcastic.

"Railroad Canal; look out for the Draw" was found hanging on the fence opposite the North Plainfield Public School this morning, at the point where the trolley tracks are submerged by water.

Settled Out of Court.

The new love story by Mrs. Alexander, "Settled Out of Court", begins on Page 2 of this issue, and is continued on Page 8. It will run through the week, and will be succeeded by "The Hollow Ruby" by Julian Hawthorne and "Between Scylla and Charybdis" by Mrs. E. Lynn Linton. All of these serials are brand-new and copyrighted to Daily Press use.

Sentence Suspended.

In the City Court this morning three young men were arraigned for disorderly conduct and making general nuisances of themselves at the North Avenue station late Saturday night. Judge Coddington warned them to keep away from the station hereafter, unless called there on business, and sentence was suspended.

Christian Poetry.

Dr. Donahue of Brooklyn will lecture next Thursday evening at 8:30, in the hall of the Catholic Young Men's Lyceum, on "Christian Poetry".

[Copyright by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

The light of a fine evening in April was fading as the Dover boat rushed into Charing Cross station, and an army of porters boarded the luggage vans and opened the carriage doors.

From a first-class compartment stepped a young man of perhaps twenty-eight or thirty, above middle height and well set up. He wore a brown tweed suit and brown boots. He had also a bronzed complexion, handsome, good-humored, bold, brown eyes; brown, wavy hair and long mustaches, a shade or two lighter; in short, he was brown all over. He turned to the carriage and assisted a lady to alight, a small, slight girl, who looked little more than seventeen when she smiled or spoke. Her cheeks were pale, but her lips were ripe and rosy, while her dark, delicate eyebrows and lashes contrasted with her fair, reddish hair and deep blue, nearly black, eyes, big and lustrous.

She was dressed in black—very well dressed in the sense of freshness and becomingness—but not richly.

"Are your friends here to meet you?" asked the gentleman, taking a neat leather bag from the carriage and holding it for her, while he directed the porter to carry his valise and heavy overcoat.

"I expect a lady to meet me, but I have never seen her," returned the girl with a smile. "So I feel a little puzzled," her accent was foreign but her English was fluent.

"Oh, I can get you a cab, when you have cleared your baggage—only you'll feel rather blue, being all alone in this wilderness on your first visit, too! I can see you to your destination if you like. I am quite disengaged!"

"You are very, very good, but I am not at all timid—"

Here a tall woman, in a fur-lined cloak and black velvet bonnet adorned with red feathers and a veil drawn tightly over an exceedingly aquiline nose, came up at a quick pace. 'Oh! are you Miss Cavallo?" she exclaimed breathlessly.

"I am!" was the quick reply.

"Thank God. I was so afraid I should be late! The buses are so full just about this time of day—people going to theaters and concerts and what not! And I kept worrying and worrying about you—poor dear! to be left by yourself all alone in this great stony station! come along—and see to your luggage—you'll be glad to get to the end of your journey and to rest."

"NO! AU REVOIR," HE RETURNED.

The lady spoke with great volubility—and with the true London twang.

"This is your bag? I'll take charge of it, sir," she continued, with a suspicious glance at her young friend's traveling companion.

"Good evening," said Miss Cavallo, holding out her hand, with some slight hesitation. "I shall always remember your courtesy with pleasure." There was a quiet, natural dignity in her voice and manner.

"I hope to see you again!" exclaimed the brown gentleman, eagerly.

"You are very good, but for the present it is adieu."

"No! Au revoir!" he returned, lifting his hat, with an air of great deference. He followed them into the room where the custom house officers examine the baggage, and there exchanged a few more words with his fellow-traveler, whose box was looked at before his. Again they said good-by and she walked away.

"Anyhow I know her address," he said to himself, as he unlocked his portmanteau for inspection—this was soon accomplished. As he turned to leave, he trod on something soft, and, looking down, saw a black lace scarf which he recognized as one which his fellow traveler had unfastened from her neck and hung on her arm while in the train. He picked it up. "She's off by this time. I must send it—or take it to her"—he thought with a smile as he folded it up and thrust it into his pocket, then he jumped into a cab and drove to his hotel.

Here he was evidently expected. He asked if dinner had been ordered, and if Mr. Dixon was waiting for him. Hearing he had not come yet, he retired to his room, from which he issued half an hour later, spick and span, freshened and brushed up, a soldierly, good-looking fellow, though not what could be called a handsome man. Dinner was laid in a private room, where before the fire stood a gentleman—a short, slight, light-colored man, clean-shaven, with slate gray eyes and an interrogative mouth. As the traveler entered he exclaimed: "Ha! Forrester. I am heartily glad to see you!" and they shook hands with great cordiality.

"How long is it since we met?" asked Forrester.

"Nearly seven years, I think! and you have been roasting—for most of them—in some of the worst parts of India! Yet you scarcely look a day older, while Soudan has written itself in wrinkles and crowsfeet on my prematurely aged countenance and dimmed the fire of my eyes!"

"They look dev'lish good still, my dear fellow, and you seem in excellent case, while I suppose you have been heaping up riches—"

"But cannot tell who shall gather them," interrupted Dixon, with a laugh. "For I begin to fear I am a confirmed bachelor."

"Oh, pooh! you are too young to talk like that. You are not so much older than I am."

"Five years in time, ten in nature."

Here the waiter brought in dinner, and during their repast the two friends only spoke of mutual acquaintances and general topics.

At length it was over. The waiter put a bottle of special claret on the table, and by Forrester's orders a log of wood on the fire. "We don't want it," he said; but one of the joys of home life is to see a fire all the year round."

They drew their chairs nearer, and Dixon with a kindly expression filled his glass and said:

"Your health, Forrester, and success! No one is happier than I am that your luck has turned at last—only don't throw away your money—when you get it."

"Why, Dixon, I have it! There can be no doubt I'm old Selwyn's heir."

"Oh! we'll go into business matters presently! I never was more surprised in my life than to find that your grand-uncle died intestate. He was such a methodical, money loving man. Certainly we never drew up any will for him, though we managed all his other business, and he was most confidential with my poor father."

They continued to talk on this subject, their conversation showing that Forrester was captain in a regiment of Bengal lancers, and not troubled with too much of this world's goods; that his grand-uncle, brother of his maternal grandmother, was a miserly personage who had amassed a large fortune. He had few relatives, and Cecil Forrester was his nearest of kin. Dixon, his guest, and man of business, was one of his earliest friends. They had been to school together. Dixon's father had been trustee and confidential adviser to Forrester's mother, and the management of the family affairs seemed to belong of right to the firm of Dixon & Phelps, Lincoln's inn.

"I could hardly believe my eyes," said Forrester, pushing the bottle towards his guest. "When Tready's letter came giving me the news of old Selwyn's death without a will, I did not know whether I was on my head or my heels. By Jove! I didn't lose much time in getting leave and telling the other fellows there would be a move in the regiment, for, of course, I'll send in my papers. Then I explained matters to the money lenders that had their claws in me."

"I earnestly hope you are not heavily incumbered," said Dixon.

"A mere featherweight now, my dear fellow, but a crushing load that was forcing me down to ruin three months ago. I've been an awful fool, Dixon, but I shall be a rock of sense in future. Lord! how easy it is to be wise and prudent and high-minded when your pocket is well lined. By the way, you must let me have some money, Dick, and settle with my creditors, as soon as possible!"

Dixon paused before replying.

"You shall have some, of course!" he said, "but I must warn you to be prudent, for a claimant has sprung up to dispute your inheritance. I fancy it is a mere attempt to extort money, but, it will cost you something to defend yourself, so you had better hold your hand till all preliminaries are settled."

"Why! who can dispute my claim!" cried Forrester, impatiently.

"It was a great surprise to me, I assure you, to receive a letter from Welford & Son—they are solicitors in Parliament street—stating that they were instructed to enforce the claim of their client, the daughter of the late George Selwyn, younger brother of our client deceased, who was his nearest of kin."

"But George Selwyn never married!" cried Forrester.

"No one knew if he did! and I do not believe it," returned Dixon. "He was a Bohemian, and rather a bad lot. He was years younger than your grand-uncle, who used to send him money from time to time. He died some years ago."

"Then you do not think there is much to fear from this claim."

"No; but it may give us trouble! However, it is a warning not to be too secure, nor too lavish in your expenditure."

"Why? What the devil do you mean, Dixon? At the worst, this strange claimant would only divide the spoils with me, and the plum old Selwyn has left behind him will stand two bites. eh!"

"Well, no! If George Selwyn's daughter is legitimate she would take the whole, she is the niece, you are only the grand-nephew."

"What an infernal shame! How disgracefully unjust the law is," cried Forrester, with an angry light in his eyes.

"It generally seems so, to those it does not favor," returned Dixon dryly. "But I think it may puzzle Wilford & Son to make out a case. We'll see."

"HELP!"

A WOMAN'S DESPAIRING CRY.

It is Heard. A Prominent Actress Escapes Great Danger.

(SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.)

How startling is a woman's cry for help!

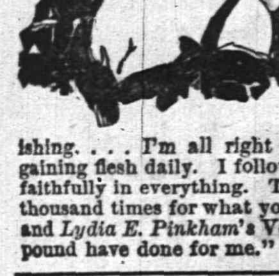
"What can I do? Where shall I go?" She knows not. This cry goes out today from every city, town, and hamlet in this country.

It comes from women who are suffering tortures of body and mind from some form of female complaint. Many, through natural modesty, do not consult physicians, for many dread their examinations. They know not where to seek for help.

This alarming condition of things is simply wrong. The peculiar ailments of women are curable, and in most cases very speedily. Lydia E. Pinkham's genius and liberality have given to every woman a sure and consistent means of relief.

No woman should suffer when she can obtain free advice. She can state her case fully to Mrs. Pinkham, woman to woman, without reserve, and the answer will come from one of her own sex. Be one of the vast army of women who write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., and preserve your health. "Only a woman can understand a woman's ills."

A prominent actress, in a letter to Mrs. Pinkham, says:—



". . . You cannot imagine the fearful condition I was in when I first wrote to you. I was simply of no use to myself or any one else. I had worked hard, and my nervous system was shattered from womb trouble and travelling constantly. I ran the gauntlet of doctors' theories, till my health and money were rapidly vanishing. . . . I'm all right now, and am gaining flesh daily. I follow your advice faithfully in everything. Thank you ten thousand times for what your knowledge and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have done for me."

The WREN in Business

It is characteristic of the Wren that it will sneak in and occupy the nest made by another bird, in preference to building one of its own. This same trait is often seen in business. It is shown by the imitators of

COTTOLENE

No sooner has the wonderful merit of this new vegetable shortening, so much better than lard, created for it a remarkable sale and popularity, than the business wrens are ready to move upon the market with many worthless counterfeits. Any housekeeper can be easily and cheaply convinced of the value of COTTOLENE by simply giving it a trial. They will then be unwilling to go back to lard, or go down to fraudulent imitations.

TIME GETTING SHORT

Two Weeks More To Pass Appropriation Bills.

An Extra Session May Be Called for. Financial Discussion Blocks the Road—A Project for a Dam Across Minnesota Rivers—Crisp To Speak on Several Measures.

Washington, Feb. 18.—With five appropriation bills still unacted upon and but two weeks more of this session before it, the senate will not be inclined to discuss matters other than appropriation bills this week. There is always the possibility of a financial discussion springing up under the very lax rules of the senate and more or less of the time of the morning hour may be consumed in this way. The hope of getting a vote in the senate on the various financial propositions has not been altogether abandoned. It is believed that some agreement may be reached after the sundry civil bill is out of the way. The coming week will be required to pass the Indian bill and the sundry civil bill, which will be reported to the senate to-day.

To-day is suspension day in the house, and arrangements have been made by which gentlemen in charge of several measures that have hitherto attracted more or less attention and occupied a greater or less amount of time, will be recognized to ask that they be passed under suspension of the rules. Among these are the following: The bill to increase the efficiency of the revenue marine service by establishing a retired list in connection therewith. This bill is earnestly advocated by the treasury department and is believed to have the support of a large majority of the house, but hitherto Mr. Clark (dem., Mo.) has been successful in talking out of place and preventing a vote.

The bill to equalize the pensions of veterans of the Mexican war, making them $12 under the general law. The bill to equalize the duties and pay of the steamboat inspection service. The bill to authorize the construction of dams across the St. Louis and Cloquet rivers, Minn., by the Altamonte Water company.

This proposition involves the largest project ever undertaken in the west—the construction of a dam 100 feet high, 700 feet in thickness at the base and 100 feet wide at the top. Primarily it is undertaken to supply the city of Duluth with water, incidentally, a power estimated at 600,000 horse will be developed that may be used for manufacturing and commercial purposes. Between the city and source of supply is a range of low hills about 100 feet high and the dam is necessary to carry the water over that. The passage of the bill has been recommended by the committee on Indian affairs (which has jurisdiction because the building of the dam would flood the Fon du Lac reservation), but a minority of the committee interpose a vigorous dissent, because, for one reason, they are not satisfied with the financial ability of the water company to carry out the project; that it has "many of the unstable features of a boom, which, if carried out, would end in destroying confidence in the resources of that section of the country and would materially retard its progress." Speaker Crisp has notified the gentlemen in charge of these several measures that they must have a quorum on hand to promptly dispose of them, or they will be required to give way to other business. The consideration of the naval appropriation bill, and of the general deficiency bill, which Mr. Breckinridge has given notice he will call up as soon as the former is out of the way, will probably occupy the rest of the week, save Saturday, which has been set apart for the delivery of eulogies upon the late Senator Z. B. Vance of North Carolina.

May Teach Him Another Lesson.

London, Feb. 18.—The Times correspondent in Cairo says: "The khedive is determined to get rid of the present ministry and render impossible the existence of any ministry working loyally with England. The khedive is deaf to all advice from men of position and experience, but he is ready to listen to every idle tale from flatterers. He gives alarming proofs of his unfitness to discharge the duties as a ruler of Egypt. He is largely influenced by the Journal Egyptian, which openly promises him the armed support of the whole French nation in case of need. The interests of England require that the khedive's desperate course should be arrested with a firm hand. This can only be done by a sterner lesson than any yet received."

Killed the Innocent.

Huntingdon, Pa., Feb. 18.—The body of a new born male child was found yesterday by Coroner Greenberg on the premises of Mrs. Mary Stinson, of Marklesburg. The baby's mouth was stuffed with paper and its throat was cut from ear to ear. A piece of bloody glass, probably the instrument used, was found near by. Officers brought Elsie Hicks the reputed mother of the babe and its supposed murderess, and Mrs. Mary Stinson, her aunt, to the county jail.

Their Labor in Vain.

Detroit, Feb. 18.—Daring thieves stole a United States express safe from one of the company's wagons last night, but failed to secure the contents. A search by several detectives and policemen finally disclosed the safe under a box car. It had been dragged 400 feet. Express officials decline to state the value of the safe's contents.

La Gascogne Will Sail Wednesday.

New York, Feb. 18.—The new piston has been placed in the French line steamer La Gascogne and Chief Engineer Martin states that everything is ready for the steamer resuming her regular trip on Wednesday.

They Walk Across.

Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., Feb. 18.—The Hudson river is frozen solidly across at this point, and hundreds of people walked to the Jersey shore yesterday.

ONE KILLED; MANY INJURED.

A Misunderstanding of Orders the Cause of This Wreck.

Guthrie, O. T., Feb. 18.—Through a misunderstanding of orders the southbound Galveston express, on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad, heavily loaded with day excursionists and a north-bound livestock extra collided at 11:45 o'clock last night while rounding a curve five miles south of this city. One man was instantly killed, two fatally injured and eighteen received serious wounds.

Engineer Uppleby of the stock train, who lost his life, had orders to stop at Seward, three miles south of the wreck, to allow the passenger to pass, but it probably will never be known why the orders were not obeyed.

The trains met on a sharp curve, in a deep cut in a bend of the Cottonwood river.

Passenger Engineer Frey saw a shower of sparks thrown into the air across the bluff near the end of the curve. He realized in an instant the sparks were from another engine, and reversing his machine, he leaped into the darkness against the side of the cut, calling to his fireman to jump also, but before the latter could comply the extra came around the curve at the rate of forty miles an hour and the two engines came together in a terrible crash, and were buried into each other one third of their lengths; a dozen freight cars piled into a great heap and the baggage, express and mails of the passenger train completely telescoped and demolished all in an instant. Added to the terrific noise was the escaping steam and the bellowing and plunging of hundreds of cattle injured or maddened by the smell of blood, completely drowning the groans of the injured and the cries of the badly frightened passengers. The passenger coaches remained on the track, but many of the gigantic Texas steers breaking loose from the wreckage, plunged into the darkness making it dangerous for anyone to venture out to assist the injured.

Buried beneath the engines and crushed to death was Freight Engineer Charles Uppleby. Lying beside his engine, terribly burned and scalded, was Passenger Fireman Patrick Coldron, who was picked up for dead, but after several hours revived and now lies suffering terribly but with no chance to live.

Many passengers were badly bruised and cut by broken glass, but none fatally.

The injured were brought to this city and are receiving the best of treatment. Seventy head of cattle were killed. The loss to the railroad company willl exceed $50,000.

GHOULS AT WORK.

Under the Cover of Darkness Many Graves Are Opened.

Indianapolis, Feb. 18.—Yesterday morning Sexton Kelley, of the Hebrew cemetery, discovered that ghouls had invaded his charge during the night and a hasty examination revealed the fact that several graves had been opened and the bodies carried away. Friends of the deceased were notified and a further examination showed that three bodies had been taken.

A warrant was sworn out on an affidavit charging that the body of Benjamin Fallender had been stolen and on this authority the police made the round of the colleges but could not find Fullender's body or that of any one else whom the Hebrews recognized. It is now believed that the other graves were robbed several days ago and that the names are being withheld to keep friends in ignorance of the affair.

WRECK ON THE SANTA FE ROAD.

Caused by Mistaken Signals—Many Passengers Injured.

Kansas City, Mo., Feb. 18.—A passenger train on the Santa Fe road was wrecked near Pittsburg, Kan., last night and eight passengers injured. They are:

Sheriff Hiram Adsit, of Pittsburg, both legs broken and badly bruised; George Davis, leg crushed; Joseph Ennis, leg broken and injured internally; Miss Bertha Garver, side lacerated; Fred G. Ramsey, conductor, injured internally; Mrs. Dr. Johnson and son, badly bruised; Miss Laura James, leg and both arms broken.

The wreck occurred at the crossing of the Missouri Pacific and was caused by a mistake in signals. Every passenger on the Santa Fe train was more or less injured.

To Protect Life from Trolley Cars.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 18.—The Homan Manufacturing company of New Jersey has an appliance called the Homan wheel fender and safety attachment for street cars, which covers all the requirements necessary for the preservation of life and limb to those coming in contact with the dangerous trolley cars. The appliance, besides having a take-up device in front, has a netting which extends entirely around the bottom of the car, covering the wheels, making it impossible for anything to come in contact with them. The inventor is Frank H. Homan of 140 Madison street.

This Brute Must Hang.

Cleveland, Feb. 18.—Lafayette Prince, the wife murderer, has been sentenced by Judge Noble to be hanged on May 29. Prince's crime was one of the most brutal on record. His wife had left him because of his ill-treatment and upon her refusal to return to him Prince secured an axe and after decoying his wife to the street literally chopped her to pieces.

Must Not Collect Evidence.

Constantinople, Feb. 18.—The commission sent to investigate the Armenian outrages is still at Moosh. The Europeans wished to visit the villages in the neighborhood, but the authorities decline to let them, saying that the foreign delegates were entitled to watch the proceedings but not to collect evidence.

Killed While Coasting.

New Brighton, Pa., Feb. 18.—A bobsled coming down Ninth street hill collided with a dairy wagon. David Prezenger, aged 17, was so badly hurt that he died in a few hours. The other six people on the sled were injured, but none seriously.

Not a Newspaper Man.

Gorham, Me., Feb. 18.—Captain Saul C. Higgins died yesterday of old age. He was 101 years old and was in good health until his death.

ROMAN CATHOLIC IRE

The German Emperor the Cause of Anger.

Held Conversation with Count Hoensbroech, Who Deserted the Jesuit Faith—Royal Patronage at the Charity Ball—Mr. and Mrs. Runyon Guests—Tariff Discussion.

Berlin, Feb. 18.—The money aristocracy of this city, who hold sway in society just outside the nobility and court, had their annual carnival, the subscription ball, at the Royal opera house. As usual the affair was under the personal patronage of the emperor and empress.

This is the great opportunity of the season for those Berliners who are sufficiently rich to help public charities and are debarred from the capital's high life and the charmed circle of the Old Castle. It is in fact their only chance to see among them the imperial family and the attendant noblemen. The emperor is the attraction. He goes to draw the big bankers and shopkeepers and their families and thus swell the charity fund, and the ladies and gentlemen of his household go because he does.

Stood Shoulder to Shoulder.

The subscription ball is noteworthy also as marking the end of the social season, which this year has been remarkible for the strain put upon the social leaders. To call it a ball, however, is hardly correct. The parquet of the big opera house had been built over with an even dancing floor. The space seemed ample until the guests began to arrive, but as early as 5 o'clock it was evident that dancing would be hardly possible. The guests were then densely packed, standing shoulder to shoulder without even room enough to shift positions without risking torn clothes and frowns of remonstrance.

Americans Favored.

The emperor and the empress stayed until 11 o'clock. The emperor was in good spirits. He greeted all his acquaintances warmly and visited freely the occupants of the diplomatic boxes. After a few minutes with M. Herbette, the French ambassador, and Mme. Herbette, he stopped for some time with Mr. and Mrs. Runyon. He and the American ambassador exchanged stories with such success that the parquet rang with their laughter. During the rest of the evening the Runyons got a good share of public attention as they were supposed to have been especially favored by the emperor.

With supper over and the court gone, the crowd on the floor began to decrease rapidly before midnight. By half past twelve it was possible to dance and between 1 and 2, when the ball closed, there were many couples on the floor.

Was Denounced Bitterly.

The emperor roused the ire of the Roman Catholics by singling out Count Hoensbroech for a long conversation at last week's court ball. Hoensbroech deserted the Jesuit order, published pamphlets against it, joined the Evangelical church, and ever since has been denounced bitterly by the whole Catholic press. That Emperor William should treat him with any special favor, has been resented by Catholics as disrepect of their faith. The matter was regarded as of small importance until the agitation of the clerical editors seemed to threaten the maturing friendship between the chancellor and the Catholic deputies. Prince Hohenlohe felt that his plan of a clerical-conservative alliance was in danger and is understood to have mentioned his fears to the emperor. At all events, word has come from the court circle that his majesty did not intend to distinguish Hoensbroech in any manner, but was merely curious to learn what changed his religious convictions and when he decided to declare his conversion. The Reichsbote and Kreuzzeitung protest that as the head of the Prussian Evangelical church, the emperor had the best right in the world to question a new member as to his reasons for becoming a Protestant, especially when that member is being persecuted for his new faith by former friends of his family. Most of the newspapers, outside the clerical party organs, say merely that it is the emperor's duty and privilege to speak with everybody received at court and that nobody has the right to criticize him for his courtesy.

Our Ambassador "At Home."

Ambassador Runyon and Mrs. Runyon will be at home from 3 to 5 o'clock on Washington's birthday. The embassy has received recently numerous applications from American visitors for presentation at court. Mr. Runyon has answered that it is quite impossible to grant these requests. He is anxious to have this understood so as to prevent the disappointment of persons coming to Berlin to be introduced to the emperor. American visitors, he hopes, will give up the idea of being presented by their ambassador.

The customs tariff committee of the reichstag has approved the proposal to increase the duty on cottonseed oil from 4 to 10 marks.

It has been made known officially that the federal council will reject the reichstag's resolution to repeal the dictatorship laws in Alsace-Lorraine. The committee in charge of the anti-socialist law will not end the discussion of the measure before the middle of March and the vote in the reichstag can hardly be taken before Easter.

The emperor has almost recovered from the attack of influenza, which kept him in his room yesterday, and has received the official reports as usual. He is greatly concerned for the condition of Archduke Albrecht of Austria, and has ordered that bulletins be sent to him hourly from the archduke's bedside.

is a virtuous vice. The world is better for it. It makes men ambitious—and it makes women careful of their personal appearance. It doesn't take much money to keep well-dressed now-a-days. Cleaning or dyeing makes it possible to use soiled or fadded garments. And there's where our ax comes in. We are in the Cleaning and Dyeing business. Our cleaner is ready, and our dyer has his fall shades mixed.

Decatur at Tripoli.

Feb. 16, 1804, was the date of Decatur's gallant act in the harbor of Tripoli, the destruction of the American naval frigate Philadelphia, at that time a prize of war in the hands of the enemy. The captive was lying, fully manned and armed by the Tripolitans, under the guns of the pasha's castle, the neighboring forts and a flotilla of galleys. Decatur volunteered to board her from the decks of the Intrepid, a ship modeled after the Tripolitan vessels. Lawrence, McDonough and Charles Morris, a boy of 19, were of the party. Sailing up in the afternoon, with her men, disguised as Maltese, showing themselves on deck, the Intrepid reached the outer batteries about dark without alarming the enemy. Decatur stood beside the Maltese pilot, and the men lay in the shadow of the bulwarks. The first battery was passed in silence, but a little farther on came a hail demanding the name and purpose of the stranger. The pilot answered in the language of the country that the ship had lost her anchors in a gale, and her captain wished to run a hawser to the frigate Philadelphia and lie by her for the night. The captain of the Philadelphia consented and sent off a boat with a hawser. Decatur quickly did the same, and the boats met midway between the vessels, joined the ends of their hawsers and separated. Then the crew of the Intrepid noiselessly drew their vessel close up to the captive. As she grated alongside the watchman on the Philadelphia cried out, "Americanos!" Decatur was ready and sang out, "Board!" With Morris he sprang to the hostile deck, followed by his crew. The Tripolitans fled in a panic to the forward deck, and Decatur formed his men to charge. With one dash the enemy was scattered, some cut down while resisting, some captured and others driven over the rail. Details from the ranks of the captors then passed around the ship, and at signals from Decatur she was set on fire fore and aft.

DECATUR.

A Modern "David."

On Feb. 17, 1864, the United States sloop-of-war Housatonic was sunk in Charleston harbor by a spar torpedo thrust against her side at the water line. The deed was performed by Lieutenant George E. Dixon of the Thirty-first Alabama. It proved that the dreams of inventors from Fulton's time to the present are not wholly wild, and that torpedo boats may play a part in warfare. Dixon's craft was built of boiler iron in the shape of a cigar. Her length was 30 feet, breadth 4 and depth 6. Originally designed for submarine use, some 35 lives were sacrificed in experiments. Dixon rigged the boat to skim the top of the water and strike with a percussion torpedo.

The Housatonic was one of the finest of the wooden fleet and lay in the north channel, completely blocking that entrance to Charleston harbor. Dixon and Captain J. F. Carlsen of the artillery and Seamen Becker, Wicks, Collins, Ridgway and Simpkins of the navy volunteered to destroy her. Their little boat sneaked along the beach at night and lay hidden all day near their victim. At 9 o'clock in the evening the outlook on the Housatonic saw a speck on the water moving toward the ship. On approaching nearer the speck looked like a plank moving swiftly over the water. He sounded the cry, and all hands rushed on deck, but only in time to save their lives. The ship sank instantly up to her tops. Five men below went down in her. The plank disappeared, and the mystery was not solved until after the war, when divers cleared the channel of wrecks. They found the Housatonic, with a hole at the water line, and 100 feet away the David, which had destroyed her. The daring crew lay securely coffined in the iron machine they had so skillfully guided to strike the blow.

Mr. Sohl's Benefit.

The thrilling and successful drama of railroad life, entitled "The Danger Signal", by the late H. C. DeMille, will be presented in Music Hall, Monday evening, March 4, by a competent company, with special scenery and properties for every act.

The event is made especially prominent by the fact that the friends of Joseph Sohl will give him a benefit that night.

Tickets may be obtained from any of the employes of Music Hall, Hotel Grenada, and at the box office.

"The Danger Signal" was played over 100 nights at the Lyceum Theatre, New York city, and has met with great success throughout the country.

Popular prices of admission will prevail, namely, 25, 35, 50 and 75 cents, and $1.

The experience of Geo. A. Apgar, of German Valley, N. J., is well worth remembering. He was troubled with chronic diarrhoea and doctored for five months and was treated by four different doctors without benefit. He then began using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, of which one small bottle effected a complete cure. It is for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

Chauncey Olcott Tonight.

Chauncey Olcott, the popular singing Irish comedian, will give a new comedy-drama, "The Irish Artist", in Music Hall tonight. The scene is laid in an Irish fishing village in 1815 The costumes and scenery are said to be very fine.

Mr. Olcott has beome very popular with the public. His fine stage presence, his delightful singing, and his majestic acting, make him a leading Irish comedian.

"Laid at Rest."

How refreshing and how commonplace these words, and yet withal how full of meaning, especially when used in connection with the name of Susan B. Adams, the subject of this short memorial. During her fifteen years residence here, she was "about her Father's business", for having an intimate acquaintance herself with Him, it was the joy of her heart to lead others to Him.

Yesterday afternoon at her late home, 314 East Second street, the funeral services were held. Appropriate and feeling remarks were made by Aaron M. Powell and Rev. W. E. Honeyman of this city, and James C. Adams of Newark. There was a large attendance of relatives and friends, including many members of the W. C. T. U.

Miss Adams was a typical Christian worker in the temperance cause, and her best and most earnest efforts were for suffering humanity held in the fetters of the drink curse. The cause of temperance loses a patriot, and a bright light, and her nearest and dearest friends deeply and keenly deplore her departure. Miss Adams was at one time press correspondent for the W. C. T. U., and has contributed many valuable articles to this paper. Consecration to the service of the Master seemed to be the governing principle of her life. "To be followers of Jesus we must surrender all to God; our will, affections, body and soul"; these words were her meaning of true consecration and the life of self-denial which she practically lived.

Interment was made in the Friends' burying-ground on Peace street.

Railroad Men Happy.

The employes of the Jersey Central were this morning made happy by the arrival of the pay car, bound west, in charge of Paymaster Hess and Chief clerk Timson, who distributed the welcome little envelopes to the efficient servants of the road.

—A large number of Y. M. C. A. delegates were guests of Hotel Albion during the Conference, and speak in high terms of that leading hotel.

Compound Rhyming Words.

In the south they have a very expressive phrase for one indifferently well—"frobly-mobly"—and to be in "mubble-fubble" signifies low spirits. In Leeds, when a person is overpowered with astonishment, he is said to be "much struck," a phrase forcible but scarcely polite. "Huck-muck" is an expression of like character, meaning foul, miry, and in Devonshire a bedraggled, besmirched person is said to be "muckson up to the huckson."

In Gloucestershire a wavering, unstable or worthless man is called a "meckle-keckle fellow," and it is worthy of remark that in Derbyshire poor ore is called "keckle meckle." An awkward simpleton is called "hauvey-gauvey" in the neighborhood of Leeds. In Warwickshire they style such a one as "hobgoblin," or else it is from "hob," a lout, and "bog," a lump. "Gobbinshire" is the abode—"that never was writ in the traveler's chart"—of uncouth folk. They say of a slovenly loafer in south Cheshire:

Gobbinshire, Gobbinshire of Gobbinshire Green,
The ronkest owd beggor as ever was seen.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognise her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,

Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. E. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

T. R. VAN ZANDT,
304 and 306 Park avenue.

Variety the Spice of Life.

There is nothing benefits mankind so much as a change, even if it's only a change of linen. But what we mean to convey is that too much of any one thing becomes monotonous. The clerk, tied for hours at his desk, seeks relaxation on his flying wheel; the policeman, on his feet for hours (?), finds relaxation in an easy chair by his, or any other friend's fireside; a man badgered by a shrew of a wife seeks relaxation by tilting a can over his head, and as the beer disappears, he gazes with consolation at his reflected countenance at the bottom of the growler Even at the theatre how many plays are monotonous when all on the one theme; how a bit of sentiment is relieved by a hearty laugh, a merry dance or comic song. And if "variety is the spice of life," it reaches perfection in the great comedy, "She Could n't Marry Three."

The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. COL. HUSE'S STORY.

"Will you forgive me, general?"

Gen. John W. Turner was seated in his office a few days ago when these words, more in the nature of a salutation than a plea, were addressed to him. Looking up, he saw before him a man of military bearing, with snowy hair and whiskers—a man who would be noticed in a crowd. It had been many years since Gen. Turner had seen that face, but his recognition of his visitor was almost instantaneous.

"Why, Col. Huse, how glad I am to see you! Forgive you? Of course. The war is over, and I have no feeling of enmity toward those who fought on the other side."

Then followed an interchange of antebellum reminiscences that would have filled a volume.

Gen. Turner's visitor, who introduced himself in this curious fashion, was Col. Caleb Huse, of Newark, N. J. Before the war he was an instructor in chemistry at West Point, and Gen. Turner was one of his pupils. Gen. Turner shared in the trials and triumphs of the civil war as an officer of the Union army; Col. Huse, although a New England man, took a more important if less trying position in the service of the Confederacy. During those four years of which the struggle lasted Col. Huse represented the interests of the South in Europe. He was the financial agent of the Confederate government; he purchased all the supplies and arranged every detail in connection with the payment therefor.

Here is the story as told by Col. Huse to a representative of the Globe-Democrat:

"In the year 1860 I received leave of absence, it being then just ten years since I had graduated. I went to Europe and spent considerable time there. On my return, in 1861, Col. Delafield, who was superintendent of West Point, informed me that the University of Alabama desired an instructor to place the cadets of the school on a military basis. He said he had recommended me for the position, and asked me if I would like to accept it. I replied that I would, and, after some slight preliminary arrangements, I went to Alabama, and at once entered upon my new duties. In February, 1861, while there was yet no talk of war, I resigned my position as a Union officer. In the meantime, just prior to my resignation, my leave of absence had been revoked, and I had been ordered to Washington. There was nothing further from my thoughts than that of taking any part in the conflict, since I had resigned my commission. In April, however, I received a letter to go to Montgomery from Stephen R. Mallory, Secretary of the Navy, who had known me for many years. I was then just 30 years old. On the very day on which the first shot was fired on Fort Sumter I received my orders to go to Europe to purchase such ordnances as might be required during the contest which had just begun. I started out accordingly without delay. I was the sole financial agent of the government of the Confederacy in Europe. At one time I had 100,000 stands of arms waiting my order in the Imperial Arsenal at Vienna, and ten batteries of artillery at the same place. The Government of the United States tried to prevent our purchasing these, but the governments of Europe took the ground that they were ordinary manufactured products of their countries, and as such they must sell to all who desired to purchase. England, of course, had recognized the South as a belligerent, though not as a power. In any event, there were nations which were anxious to see the war continued. It was the first real attempt to conduct the affairs of a great nation on democratic principles; the prediction had been made that it was bound to go to pieces, and, the wish being father to the thought, there was a strong desire to see the prophecy verified. Then the cotton manufacturers of England were amassing fortunes. Cotton had been lying on their hands; now the supply was scarce, prices went up, and the cause of the increase in prices being the war, a continuance of the war was not in any way considered a disaster. But I am talking philosophy rather than facts. Let me come to the latter.

"As I have told you, I received my orders on the day that the first shot was fired on Fort Sumter. I arrived in Charleston on the evening of the day on which I started out. I went from there to Baltimore, by the Bay line. The navy yard at Norfolk had just been destroyed. The passengers who came on board the boat upon which I took passage made its destruction their one topic of conversation. When I arrived in Baltimore preparations were being made for the burial of the four soldiers belonging to the Massachusetts regiment who had been shot on the previous day. Needless to say the excitement was intense. Men walked through the streets muttering vengeance. One man did not know what side his neighbor espoused, so that there was a great deal of bitter discussion; there was war in the atmosphere; there was something in every look and gesture that told of the intensity of feeling which had been aroused; the talk was of war, of the treachery of the South, or the justice of the cause, as the case might be. I saw the guns being handed out from the stores of the dealers in such supplies. The point which I wished to reach was New York, but no trains were running; it was said that the bridges had all been destroyed. I therefore took a carriage for York, Pa., but got no further than Philadelphia. This city was reached on Tuesday, and from there I started for New York after a night's rest. While on the train I observed a passenger sitting behind me, whom I discovered to be Caleb Cushing, who had been a townsman of mine. I paid no attention to him, supposing that he did not know me, as I had not seen him since I was a boy. However, having left the train and taken the boat, which was necessary in those days, I again met Cushing, and raised my hat to him. He returned my salute, saying:

"'Good morning, Mr. Huse. You're on the Southern side now?'

"This was rather startling, remembering as I did that Mr. Cushing was the chairman of the Charleston convention that nominated Breckinridge for President.

"I replied: 'Yes, Mr. Cushing. What chance do you think the South has?'

"He replied in these words: 'What possible chance can it have? The manufactories of the country are all in the North; the armories and arsenals are all in the North; the arsenals of Europe are within ten days of New York, and will all be open to the United States government, while they will be closed to the South. Whole ports will be blockaded.'

"'Good morning, Mr. Cushing,' I replied, and the subject dropped.

"Now, I have arrived in New York. Here, too, the excitement was at its height. I had been warned by a friend that I would have to be careful, and the warning was scarcely necessary.

"On the morning of my reaching the city the first sight to which my attention was drawn was that of Anderson's command marching up Broadway. I had no letters of introduction; nothing which the man under such circumstances usually carries. My mission was such that letters of introduction might have proved dangerous. I knew that if my movements were to be traced it would probably be through my baggage. So this I had ordered removed to the express office, to be kept there till further instructions were received with regard to it. Subsequently I got a young friend to carry it to Liverpool, England.

"I called on the cashier of a certain New York bank and asked the question: 'Are there any letters from Montgomery?' He was greatly startled and answered me by inviting me into the bank parlor. He immediately locked the door, pulled down the shades, and then said:

"'Now, what is it?'

"I said: 'I perceive, sir, you are agitated by my calling on you; I will not embarrass you by telling you my name. If you have any letters from Montgomery, please send them round to the office of Trenholm Bros., of Pine street, to which firm's place of business I immediately proceed.' Mr. William Trenholm was one of the members of the firm. His father had been Secretary of State in the Confederacy, and his son, also, William, occupied an important position in the treasury under Cleveland's first administration. I found at the office a member of the firm, to whom I explained the object of my visit to New York. I told him that I was without money and required at least $500 with which to start for Europe. He handed me $500, I think it was. I know I received the sum which I mentioned would be necessary. The senior member of this firm of Trenholm Bros. was at Charleston; another member was at New York, and a third at Liverpool, England, in partnership with a gentleman named Frazer, both doing business under the title of Frazer & Trenholm. This explanation becomes necessary in order to enable you to understand how our financiering was done, a point upon which I will subsequently touch.

"I now went over to Canada and took a boat, the North Briton, from Hamilton, for Liverpool. But we had again to run into American waters at Portland, and here was taken on board a portion of a Maine regiment of troops, who were being moved to the front. In connection with the sea voyage there is nothing special to narrate, except one little incident which impressed itself forcibly on my mind at the time. I was silent, as you can understand, as to the object of my journey. Even to a Southern sympathizer on board I never opened my lips with reference to it. But one day at dinner the war was in some manner brought up. Sitting beside me was a young naval officer, who startled me by this remark:

"'I should not be surprised if you were sent over by Jeff Davis to buy arms for the Confederate army.'

"The matter had left such a strong impression on my mind that I can recall what I had on my dinner plate—beef and brown potatoes. I took a potato on my fork and put it into my mouth in order to gain a little time to think. When I had swallowed the potato I answered:

"'I should think if Jeff Davis wanted to send a man to Europe for any such purpose he would send some one who knew something about arms.'

"'Well,' said the young officer, 'as a rule those fellows who say least know most.'

"There the subject was allowed to drop, much to my satisfaction.

"I arrived in Europe in due time, and while there received full authority from the Confederate government to carry out my work without consultation with any one. These instructions were necessary, because of the danger of written documents being seized by the enemy. And how do you think I received this one document to which I refer? Well, it was sewed up in the sole of an old boot and carried to me one day by a young man who had come to start a paper in London to arouse sympathy for those who were fighting for the lost cause.

"How were our financial matters arranged, you ask? The plan adopted was one of the simplest in the world. Cotton was bought in the South, being paid for in paper money. It was then shipped in fast steamers to Nassau and Bermuda. From there it was consigned to Fraser, Trenholm & Co., of Liverpool, England. The proceeds of the sale of this cotton were placed to my credit, and, with the money so obtained, I purchased the supplies necessary for the Confederate army. Everything was paid for in cash, and thus the lowest prices were obtained. The confidence of the people of England in the South was unlimited. As an instance of this, let me tell you a little story of how the government of the Southern States made a profit of over $1,000,000 in 1863. There were two vessels lying in the Victoria docks, London. They had been built as opium smugglers and were for sale. They were offered to me, but I had no money with which to buy them and declined the offer. They were some time afterward purchased by some London speculators and sent to Bermuda loaded with arms, ammunition, etc., for the South. But their owners were afraid they could not run the blockade. Under these conditions I made arrangements with the new owners to buy one ship, giving in exchange for it some cotton warrants. These warrants entitled the bearer of them to a certain number of pounds at sixty days after the date of drawing. The gentleman who sold me the ship was afraid to risk sending his warrants to have them met, so he came to me and asked me for duplicates, so that, if the warrants were destroyed, he could still have the written evidence of the indebtedness. I could not give the duplicates. The ship was named the Merrimac, and a very short time afterward she was sailing from Wilmington with a load of cotton. The night was dark and stormy, and she came in collision with another vessel, her sister vessel, curiously enough. It was with difficulty she got back into port. A meeting of the board of survey was held, and it was decided that the vessel could not be repaired at Wilmington for the government. It was sold at public auction by the Confederacy, and brought no less than $1,100,000, although it had not cost $1. The next day she was sent out by her purchaser and was captured by the blockading squadron.

"I remained in Europe during the four years of the war. All that time I acted as financial agent for my government. No one had any power to purchase anything for the use of the Confederate troops but myself. Mason spent his time in England as representative of the Confederacy in a sense, and, by the way, once when he showed a disposition to interfere with me we had rather a sharp tilt.

"'I want you, major,' said he, 'to inspect some supplies which have been purchased through me under contract.'

"'I want to inspect the contract first,' I replied.

"'Young man,' said he, 'do you know to whom you are talking?' He was one of those very pompous men. 'Whom do you acknowledge as your superior?'

"'No one on this side of the water,' said I. 'The only superior I recognize is the secretary of war and the officers between him and myself.' And then I pulled out the instructions I had received and showed him the old shoe in which they had been sewed up.

"The war, like this story, came to an end. I traveled over Europe for a time, listened to some of her representative men on public affairs, and finally returned to the South. I was never in politics. My first vote was given for Tilden. Naturally, I took to business. Since then I have been engaged in it. I have forgotten the war and the cause which I represented for so long, and I have given you a history of some events connected therewith which never yet found a place in print."

Peffer Is Careful of Those Whiskers.

One of the pleasant sights occasionally met with at the Capitol is the display of harmony that exists in private among seemingly the most incompatible elements of both branches of Congress. Early during the present Congress it was almost a daily occurrence for ex-Speaker Reed and Representative Bourke Cockran of New York to sit down together by themselves in the House restaurant and eat lunch.

In the Senate restaurant the other day, a quartet sat down at a table together that created some interest. It consisted of Senators Sherman, Chandler, Cullom and Peffer. Mr. Sherman was sitting at the head of the table, Senator Peffer at his left, Mr. Chandler at his right, and Mr. Cullom next to Mr. Peffer.

The latter had tied a napkin under his chin and over his whiskers, and wore a profound look of wisdom. It lent a rich, picturesque effect to the group, and incidentally illustrated the tender care the Populist Senator from Kansas bestows upon his luxurious hirsute adornment. When out in the open air, Mr. Peffer hangs his banner on the outer wall, allowing the blasts of Boreas to dally with unrestrained freedom with his pride and joy; but no designing oyster may seek seclusion and refuge within that tropical growth of hair; no stray spatter of clam broth may tarnish the gloss of those silken strands.

While the group was thus engaged, Senator Stewart's stalwart form passed in at the door. There were a number of vacant seats at the table; but the Nevada statesman only cast a glance at his hereditary enemy, Senator Sherman, and crossed the room with serene disregard of the quartet.—Washington Post.

Holding His Congregation.

To succeed in this is one of the tests of the modern preacher. There is so much preaching, so many churches and such a multitude of lecturers and other speakers, that people leave the preacher who is dry and uninteresting. It is often a sore trial to a worthy man who is doing his very best. Sometimes congregations are heedless and blameworthy in that they desert a man they ought to stand by. A Scotch preacher was fortunate in this matter in his congregation according to the following story:

A prison chaplain was recently appointed in a certain town. He was a man who greatly magnified his office, and, entering one of the cells on his first round of inspection, he with much pomposity thus addressed the prisoner who occupied it:

"Well, sir, do you know who I am?"

"No, nor I dinna care," was the curt reply.

"Well, I am your prison chaplain."

"Oh! ye are; weel, I hae heard o' ye before."

"And what did ye hear?" returned the chaplain, his curiosity getting the better of his dignity.

"Weel," replied the prisoner, "I heerd the last two kirks ye were in ye preached them both empty, but I'll be hanged if ye'll find it sic' an easy matter tae dae the same wi' this ane."

Pool and Billiards in a Church.

The Adams, Mass., Congregational church recently dedicated a congregation house and parsonage containing some radical modern features. The house, besides containing more completely the features found in parish houses, has a bowling alley, a well equipped gymnasium, and a billiard and pool room, the most radical feature of all. The auditorium has a platform with footlights, as near an approach to a stage as could well be built in connection with a church, even in the midst of liberal Adams folk. The church has a well fitted kitchen, many tables, lots of table linen, silverware, and dishes. It has reading rooms, class rooms, and a study for the pastor.

The bowling alley is in the basement, and is always full of merry youths at accessible hours. The gymnasium in the attic is constantly patronized. Last week a class of young men were organized and Professor Seely of Williams College was engaged for instructor. The young women have become jealous, and it has been decided to prohibit the use of the gymnasium by the boys for several hours each day and turn it over to the girls, who are determined to form an athletic association, too.

The church is not selfish. It has thrown open the doors of its fine congregation house to the whole community, believing that a bettering of social conditions is a step toward purification.

There are one or two of the old conservative element who look unfavorably upon the congregation house, and its well patronized pool and billiard tables. One says:

"By and by there will be a saloon connected with every church. If you put in billiard tables, bowling alleys, and gymnasiums, and say as long as the boys will play they had better play at church, why not put in a bar, for as long as men will drink, why not let them drink at church?"—Boston Journal.

A PAINTER RUNS AMCUK

With His Throat Cut He Wrecks Three Flats.

Business Losses Unbalance His Mind. He Climbs to the Roof by the Air Shaft Where He Threw Snowballs Dipped in Blood—Desperate Fight with the Police.

New York, Feb. 18.—Otto Blady, a painter, 28 years old, while insane, late yesterday afternoon, cut his throat from ear to ear with a razor, then wrecked three flats at 1,712 Second avenue, and kept the police at bay for almost an hour in a fight on the roof of a five story house.

Until about a month ago, Blady was in business with his brother, Adolph, at 492 Amsterdam avenue.

They failed, and Otto accused Adolph of having cheated him out of the money he put into the business. He went to board with a former employer named Richard Palintee, who lives with his wife on the second floor of the Second avenue house.

Worried Over Losses.

He was unable to get work, and, although he seemed to have money enough for all his needs, Blady grieved constantly about the loss of his money in the painting business, and at times appeared to be losing his mind.

Yesterday afternoon Blady started out to see a man about a job. He returned shortly after 5 o'clock.

He looked wild, and acted so strangely that Mrs. Palintee, who was alone, became frightened, but tried to soothe him by kind words.

Otto sat in the dining room and Mrs. Palintee went into the kitchen to get him something to eat.

Mrs. Palintee had scarcely turned her back upon her eccentric boarder when she heard a groan, and running back into the dining room saw Blady sitting where she had left him beside the table, with blood running down his clothes from a great gash in his throat. In his hand, he still held the razor with which he had cut himself.

Three Flats Wrecked.

Mrs. Palintee uttered a shriek, and ran into the hallway to call for help.

Her cries seemed to arouse Blady to frenzy, and seizing a hatchet, he rushed about the flat, wrecking everything in it. He smashed windows and doors, broke everything breakable, and turned the place upside down.

Then he climbed into the airshaft through a small window in the bed room, and mounted by means of the cross beams to the flat on the third floor.

Into this he gained entrance by kicking out the window, and surprised John Shea, a truckman, and his bride of three weeks at dinner.

Fight with a Bloody Intruder.

The appearance of the man, covered with blood and his throat gaping, threw Mrs. Shea into hysterics, but the husband grappled with his ghastly intruder. For ten minutes they fought in a small room used as the family larder, and after the fray the Shea family produce was unfit for use.

Blady then broke away from Shea and again made for the air shaft. He climbed to the fourth floor, and played havoc in the flat occupied by Mrs. Vieth.

Again Blady climbed up the air shaft, with his head broke the skylight covering it and climbed out on the roof.

Here he stood on the coping at the front of the building and amused himself by pelting the crowd in the street with snow that he first saturated with the blood running from his throat.

The whole house and the neighborhood were in a state of panic by this time, and Policemen Reilly and McManus, of the East Eighty-eighth street station, were attracted to the scene.

Police Held at Bay

The policemen made their way to the roof, but Blady declared he would kill the first man that came near him, and he waived his hatchet in a way that made Reilly and McManus recoil from their attack.

The crazed man ran along the coping of the houses for half a block, pursued by the policemen, one of whom had drawn his revolver, but neither relished tackling their man.

By a misstep Blady stumbled and fell, the hatchet flying from his grasp. In a moment the two policemen were upon him, but it took fifteen minutes of hard fighting to overpower the maniac, although he had lost a great amount of blood.

Bound hand and foot, he was taken to the Presbyterian hospital, where the doctors do not think he can live.

It was more than an hour between the time Blady cut his throat and the time he was overpowered and taken to the hospital.

Japan Orders Battleships.

Washington, Feb. 18.—The navy department has information that Japan has ordered two first-class battleships in England to be built on the Thames, one at Blackwall and the other at London. They are to be of 12,250 tons displacement, length 370 feet, breadth 73 feet; to have armor for 226 feet of their length of from 10 to 18 inches thickness, and an indicated horse power of 4,000. Their armament will be two 12-inch breechloading rifles behind 14-inches of armor and ten 6-inch rapid fire guns. The armor plates are to be harveyized, 6,000 tons having been ordered.

Cattle Die from Exposure.

Houston, Tex., Feb. 18.—The cold's effect on cattle is said by stockmen to be disastrous. Texas live stockmen estimate the loss above 25 per cent. One member of the Texas Live Stock association says that the loss is greater to-day than it would have been ten or fifteen years ago, because the wire fencing has cut the cattle off from the bottoms.

Death on a Bob-sled.

New Brighton, S. I., Feb. 18.—Fourteen year old Thomas Burke was steering a big bob-sled, on which were about a dozen of his friends, down the Monroe avenue hill, when the sled struck a truck and Burke's head hit a wheel with force enough to fracture the skull. The boy died within a few minutes. None of the others was hurt.

REPUBLICANS IN CONFERENCE.

Mr. Platt Meets Friends—Did They Condemn Strong's Appointments?

New York, Feb. 18.—Ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt held a conference at the Fifth avenue hotel yesterday afternoon with Chairman of the State Committee Charles W. Hackett, Benjamin J. Odell, W. L. Proctor, Senators Lexow, Parsons, Kilbourne, Speaker Hamilton Fish, Edward Lauterbach, Assemblymen Hamilton, Halpin, Hoops, and other prominent republicans.

What the subject of discussion was can only be surmised as all those who attended refused to say what transpired. It is reported, however, that the gathering was for the purpose of acting on Mayor Strong's recent appointments. After it was over Mr. Platt said that no resolution condemning the mayor or mentioning him was passed. He refused to state what occurred at the conference. The only thing that he would say was that politics in general had been talked over.

On some sides it was stated that the conference had not been prolific of results, and that owing to lack of unanimity of opinion certain proposed measures of retaliation against the mayor fell through. This belief was not generally entertained, however, as it was thought the leaders had come to an understanding even though it involved no startling attack on the enemy.

PORTRAITS BY WIRE.

Successful Test of a Rapid Automatic Telegraphic Transmitter.

Chicago, Feb. 18.—W. W. Lowd, train dispatcher of the Northern Pacific railway gave a successful exhibition of his invention for transmitting pictures by telegraph. The test was made in the presence of a number of railroad officials. One of the pictures sent over the wire was that of a boy and the reproduction was exact. Later developments showed the faintest details can be transmitted even to the shading of the features of a person, a smile or a scowl. A cut was sent over the wire showing a collision between the Elbe and the Crathie. Mr. Lowd now has his device in the patent office and until the patent is secured he does not intend to explain the methods of his invention. There may be a possible question as to the right of Mr. Lowd, as this invention has been already patented by a man named Stumitz, who calls it the orograph.

TOO MUCH WHISKEY.

A Pitched Battle in a Saloon in Which a Safe Is Robbed of $1,600.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Feb. 18.—The mining village of Midvale was the scene of a riot last night. Saturday was pay day at the mines, and the Huns, Slavs and Polanders drank freely. The Slaves and Poles engaged in a pitched battle in the saloon of Michael Canfield. The Poles drove the Slavs from the place and then assaulted the proprietor.

They wrecked everything in the place and carried the safe out into the street where they broke it open. The proprietor says it contained over $1,600, which he drew from a bank on Friday to make a payment on a property. Eight men were seriously wounded in the fight. John Molenski, it is believed, will die.

MASKED MEN ENTER THE JAIL.

Unable To Get Into the Cell They Fire a Volley at Their Victim.

Kingston, N. Y., Feb. 18.—Yesterday morning a mob of masked men, supposed to be negroes from Hamilton, surrounded Sheriff Goldworthy's house, took the keys from him and gained entrance to the jail corridor with the avowed purpose of taking out and hanging George Tracy, a negro, who shot and killed his wife at Hamilton in this county, in January. The mob was unable to get into the steel cell in which Tracy was confined with two other negroes. Tracy crawled under his bed and the mob began shooting through the bars of the cell door and succeeded in putting six bullets into his body, killing him instantly. The two prisoners confined in the cell with Tracy escaped unhurt.

200 PRISONERS TORTURED.

Armenian Outrages Still Continue. Women Carried Off.

London, Feb. 18.—Prof. Minas Tcheraz, editor of the Armenia, says he has letters from Turkey telling of more outrages. The Turks have seized several parties of peasants who were leaving the disturbed districts for the frontier, he says, have killed the men and have carried off the women. His correspondents report that elsewhere the Kurds have killed all the Armenians of any local reputations.

Another story is to the effect that some 200 Armenians, held as political prisoners in Van, are tortured periodically with the bastinado and hot irons and during the recent cold weather were obliged to go outdoors without clothes.

Claims $1,000 for a Kiss.

Alabama, Ala., Feb. 18.—An extraordinary suit has been instituted in this city. A young widow was a passenger in a train from Louisville to Nashville, and occupied a seat near those of a newly married couple. The bridegroom having left his wife's side for a moment, returned while the train was passing through a tunnel, and in the darkness kissed the widow in mistake for his wife. The lady willl not believe that it was a mistake, or an accident, and claims $1,000 from the young husband as a solace to her ruffled feelings.

Murdered by Toughs.

Logansport, Ind., Feb. 18.—Barnard Hamel who has been missing since last Monday was found last night dead in an abandoned well in the rear of Amon's carriage shop. The dead man drew $60 pension money last Monday and was seen in company with some toughs, who it is believed, murdered him and threw the body in the well, head down. No arrests have yet been made.

The Elbe's Dead.

London, Feb. 18.—The body of Wilhelm Murst, a fireman on the steamship Elbe, was washed ashore at Deal yesterday. A lifebelt was fastened to it. An Elbe mail bag was found near by. The seal, which was intact, bore the mark—"Newspapers, Bremen for Chicago." Two oars and several lifebelts from the Elbe came ashore about two miles from Deal.

WOMEN IN CONVENTION

Thousands of the Fair Sex Gather at the Capital.

Many Important Feminine Matters To Be Discussed—Nobility Adorn Washington—Social Purity in New York City May Be One of the Themes for Discussion.

Washington, Feb. 18.—To-day will witness the beginning of the greatest gathering of representative women ever held in the United States, or for the matter of that, in the world, and Washington hotels and boarding houses are filled with those who will be in attendance. The second triennial session of women of the United States convocation and it includes all the national organizations of a peculiarly feminine character. Every sphere of female effort will be represented and there will be female ministers of the gospel, politicians, lawyers, physicians, authors, editors, educators, dress reformers, social purists, prohibitionits, missionaries, church workers, stenographers, publishers, and many other classes, not to speak of women famous as millionaires, or as society leaders. Religious effort will have its representation in the National Baptist Woman's Missionary society.

Eighteen organizations will meet having a membership estimated at between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 women.

The president of the National council is Mrs. May Wright Sewall of Indianapolis, who has declined re-election and wants Mrs. Rachael Foster Avery, the corresponding secretary to be elected as her successor.

Nobility Attend.

Many women of national and even international reputation will be in attendance. Some of them are the Countess of Aberdeen, Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Russell Sage, Miss Susan B. Anthony, Mrs. Elizabeth B. Grannis, well known in connection with the social purity crusade in New York city; Dr. Jennie de la Lozier, the New York physician; Mrs. Laura C. Bullard, of Brooklyn, the millionaire; the female minister of the gospel, Rev. Anna Shaw; Miss Frances E. Willard; Mrs. French Sheldon, the African explorer and Madame Alberti, the delsartist. Organizations of women in Germany, France, England, Canada, and many other countries willl also be present.

The meeting of the council, beginning to-day, will last fourteen days, and during this period thirty-two sessions will be held. Papers on a multitude of subjects will be read and action will be taken on questions of national interest in which women are concerned. Religion, dress, politics, morality and other pertinent topics will be considered.

Mrs. Sewall Talks.

Mrs. Sewall, the president of the National council, told a United Press reporter something about the council and what it expected to accomplish. She said its practical work was conducted through the agency of four standing committees namely: The committee on dress, the committee entitled "Equal Pay for Equal Work;" the committee on divorce, and the committee on patriotism. Mrs. Sewall suggested that to the male mind this might seem a curious assortment, both very feminine and very masculine, and in explanation she said:

"In proportion as a thing is perfect you know it must contain both feminine and masculine elements. But I do not know that dress is really more feminine than it is masculine. Men and women alike need to be clothed. The dress of women undoubtedly affects the health and the financial circumstances of men even more than the dress of men does. However, I suppose it is patriotism which men may think masculine. Certainly it cannot be divorce reform, since as it is impossible for any divorce to be granted that does not affect one man and one woman, that subject must be of equal masculine and feminine interest. We are sometimes told that patriotism is on the decline. I do not believe it. The highest test of patriotism that the world has hitherto demanded of a man is that he should be ready to die for his country. I am sure that day is dawning when a test superior to this will be the willingness of the men to live for their country; and in the development of this patriotism, as in the burdens of the former patriotism, women must bear their share. The new patriotism must mean such an interest in the daily affairs of one's country that one will be willing to forego some ease, some pecuniary emolument in order to give his personal attention to public affairs."

Children Find $5,500 in Gold.

Quincy, Ill., Feb. 18.—Thomas French, an old stonemason of the village of Mendon, died during the past week. When his children began to search his effects yesterday they found in an apparently dicarded bureau $5,500 in gold, all in English coin, consisting of sovereigns, guineas and crowns. They also found $350 in United States greenbacks, sewed in his clothing.

Hundreds Starving.

Hennessey, O. T., Feb. 18.—An appeal for aid has been issued by settlers in the strip. Hundreds of families are absolutely starving, eating prairie dogs and horses. The suffering is unparalleled. Cattle have been dying in droves as a result of the unprecedented "northers" which visited both territories and Texas within the past few weeks.

At the Mercy of the Waves.

Rowley, Mass., Feb. 18.—Miars Jewett and Albert Stevens, dory fishermen, lost their oars Thursday in Ipswich bay and were at the mercy of the waves for thirteen hours without food or drink. Yesterday they were picked up off Equam, in an exhausted condition, by the lightkeeper.

Italy Trains Snowbound.

Rome, Feb. 18.—A heavy snow has fallen throughout Central Italy. Three trains which left Ancona for Rome last night were able to proceed but forty miles.

Emergency Hospital

Doctors and nurses realize the necessity of counteracting the effects of the "shock" which accompanies all accident and surgical cases, and which more often proves fatal than the original cause.

Animation is temporarily suspended. Something must be done to start "the wheels" going again, as it were. The stomach is in no condition to digest a sufficient amount of food to nourish the other organs of the body, so they resort to the original raw food, because the least amount of it contains the most life, strength and blood-producing qualities of anything known to medical science. It will, unaided, sustain strength for weeks, and can be retained by the Bovinine is not a medicine, but a builder of flesh and bone, and a maker of blood. For all cases of sickness, chronic invalids, infants or the aged, it is indispensable. 25,000 physicians endorse it. Sold by all druggists. The Bovinine Co., New York.

CHAPTER II.

"I confess, you have made me feel creepy," said Forrester. "By Jove! I'd feel inclined to blow my brains out if my expectations were wrenched from me! However, there is no use in going half way to meet trouble! Don't suppose I mean to throw away my money. I intend to keep a firm hold of it. My scheme is to buy a place in the country—not a grand place, you know—a superior sort of shooting lodge, and make it my headquarters; at any rate till I marry, as I suppose I shall! By the way, I saw an advertisement of the very thing I want in the paper I got at Dover." He rose as he spoke and crossed the room to where his ulster lay over a chair and pulled a newspaper from the outside pocket. With it came the lace scarf, which he threw on the table as he reseated himself to read the tempting description of ideal shooting quarters on the border, to be sold at a great sacrifice.

"Ah! well, it is time enough to think of purchasing property just yet," said Dixon. "I say, where did that come from?" nodding toward the scraf. "Have you turned a diptomaniac?"

"No!" said Forrester, smiling. "This is a treasure trove which I must return to its rightful owner. A young lady who traveled over with me from Paris—a deuced nice girl, too, Dixon! I was almost late for my train and jumped in without noticing that there was another passenger already seated till we were moving off—when I saw a young thing in black at the other side of the carriage stand up and wave a kiss to a stout, elderly, gray-bearded man on the platform. By and by I put up the window for her, and we got into conversation; it seems that she had never been in England since she was an infant. Her English was perfect, and a slight foreign accent gave it distinction. I never met any girl who talked like her. She is not what you would call pretty, but she has a pair of eyes, by Jove! you can read volumes in them, and they look you—she was so composed and at her ease. I might have been another woman for all of coquetry in her manner. I had a deuced pleasant journey, I can tell you. But for all our talk I could not get the smallest clew to who she was or where she was going, except that the gray-bearded buffer at the station was her papa. I'd like to see her again, Dixon. I picked up that scarf which she dropped at the station as she was going off. I saw her address on her wraps, and I'll take the scarf to her to-morrow."

"Don't be a fool, Cis!" said Dixon, gravely. "She may be an adventuress, and you are given to getting into scrapes about women. You remember—"

"DON'T BE A FOOL," SAID DIXON, GRAVELY.

"No, I don't," interrupted Forrester. "Why should I worry myself about the follies of my boyhood? I never got into permanent mischief. And Dixon, there was something devilishly attractive in that girl!"

"Take my advice, don't go and see your fair friend; send the lace by parcel post with your compliments—why trouble yourself further about a chance acquaintance who may be a mere adventuress for all you know; remember you are a big catch now."

Forrester laughed heartily. "Do you think I cannot take care of myself, old man?"

"Yes, I do; you are just the sort of fellow to get into a scrape, and pay dear for extrication."

"Many thanks for your flattering opinion! I'll see how I feel to-morrow. I may not be inclined to take a journey due north—my charming companion lives at Kilburn. But, Dixon, your news has taken the bloom off my glorious anticipations! What do you think of the outlook?"

"Oh, the other side will have to prove a lot, the marriage, the birth, identity and no end of points. I have no great fear, but we had better be careful."

"I shall try to enjoy the next few weeks, whatever happens! There's nothing so foolish as not to improve the shining hour."

The following day was fully and pleasantly occupied. With replenished pockets, Forrester visited high-class tailoring and outfitting establishments, also his club, where he was recognized by several acquaintances and cordially greeted. He was always popular, and vague rumors of his succession to untold wealth threw his popularity into high relief.

"It is all deucedly pleasant," he thought, as he sat at breakfast the second morning after his arrival in London. "Gad! everything wears a new aspect, but—" There was a break in the current of his thought, he became vaguely aware that something was wanting, and at the same moment his eyes fell upon the black lace scarf which hung neglected over the back of a chair.

"By Jove, I will go and see her!" he exclaimed, half aloud. "I am not such a fool as Dixon thinks. Why should I avoid a bit of harmless amusement," he reflected. "Her eyes have haunted me ever since we said good-by—and she'll miss her scarf. Yes, I'll be off to Kilburn as soon as it is late enough to call. I suppose I may call before luncheon?—there is nothing very prim or stuck up about her! Then I can get back in time to look at that mare Bligh was recommending. I'll be off, and frighten old Dixon with an account of my visit after it has become an accomplished fact!"

He finished his breakfast very deliberately—walked to his club, where he read and replied to several letters, looked in at his bootmaker's and tailor's, and at length hailed a hansom and set forth on his voyage of discovery.

"Thirteen Alma terrace, Kilburn," he said authoritatively to the driver.

"Beg pardon, sir, but is it before or after we come to the station?"

"Oh! I haven't the faintest notion! Ask the policeman or anyone when we get near it."

"Kilburn is a biggish place, sir," returned the Jehu, and they drove off at a good pace.

It took many inquiries and divers turnings to and fro, back and forward, before Alma terrace was discovered, and proved to be a melancholy road bordered by semi-detached villas, with very high, steep steps to their front doors. No. 13 had very fresh lace curtains and brightly polished brass handles, and a neatly-kept garden.

"Wait," said Forrester, descending and ringing the bell. The garden gate was unlatched by some machinery from within, and by the time he had ascended the high steps the door was opened by a rosy-faced girl of perhaps twelve, with a huge cap and long white apron.

"Please walk in, sir," was her reply to his inquiry for Miss Cavallo, and Forrester was ushered into a front room which opened into another at the back originally by folding doors, which were now removed and replaced by portieres of many colors. Cheap Japanese screens, brackets upholding specimens of indefinite china, painted tambourines, photographs, oleographs, and many other "objects d' art" decorated the walls. Some gay colored rugs here and there partially hid a threadbare carpet. A widely varied collection of chairs offered rest to the weary, and a sofa, draped by a huge rug of kangaroo skins filled a good deal of space in the back room.

Forrester stood in the window gazing at the door, which soon opened to admit his traveling companion who came in with a half-amused smile playing on her lips and gleaming in her eyes. She held his card in one hand.

"It is you, then?" putting out the other to him. "I was so puzzled who Capt. Forrester could be."

"I have taken the liberty of calling without permission," began Forrester. "But I was anxious to restore your property which I found on the floor directly after you left the station. I tried to overtake you in vain. Now, here it is," and he took the scarf from his pocket.

"Oh, thank you very much! I was so vexed when I missed it! My mother gave it to me on my seventeenth birthday. I value it greatly. Pray sit down."

She unfolded and examined the lace, saying softly: "I am so glad to have it again!" Then she lifted her smiling eyes to his and added: "It is very good of you to take this trouble. Hold—how did you find me out?"

"That was easy enough. I am not so unobservant as to miss making a mental note of the address on your wraps! After enjoying a talk with you I was anxious not quite to lose sight of so agreeable a companion!"

"That is very flattering," she returned, laughing a pleasant refined laugh, Forrester thought. "I did not think that words of wisdom came naturally to me."

"Oh! I do not mean to insult you by saying that your conversation was improving. That would not have created a wish to hear it again. Are you going to make any stay in town?"

"I may be here a month; I may be longer."

"Why do you banish yourself to these wilds? You are too far from everything."

"Because there is no other place for me. I am alone and know no one in London except Mrs. Bartlett, and she is a friend of my father and mother. Mrs. Bartlett is my hostess, the lady who came to meet me."

"Oh! you'll be deucedly bored here. What are you going to do with yourself?"

"Oh, no, I have plenty to do. No one is bored who is not idle. I am going out with Mrs. Bartlett this afternoon to present some of my letters of introduction. That will take most of the afternoon. In the morning I have my practicing and letters to write."

"Indeed—but all that is not amusing," said Forrester, much puzzled. Why should she present letters of introduction? What was her business? Why did she want business?

"Perhaps it is interesting, which is better than amusing. I came over to try and find engagements as a concert singer, though I fear it will be very difficult."

—a long-drawn ah!

"I am rather anxious about it. You see my father has spent a great deal of money upon me, both in Paris and Milan, and I want to make some return. Are you fond of music, Capt. Forrester, and do you know any musical people?"

"I am decently fond of music, but must acknowledge that I only ignorantly worship! The only musical personage I know is a Dr. Delaney. He was in my regiment. He has retired now, and lives somewhere in the north. He used to sing Irish melodies and Jacobite ditties very well indeed."

"He was not professional."

"No."

"Ah—" she evidently dismissed Delaney.

"Though I am no judge, may I venture to ask for a song?" asked Forrester.

"You would really like to hear me sing?"

"Beyond everything!"

"Then you must tell me truly if you think my singing would please English people."

"I shall be brutally frank," said Forrester.

"Yes, pray do!" She rose and went to an open piano on which lay a quantity of music. "I shall sing you a little Neapolian Barcarolle," she said, "quite one of the people's songs."

The accompaniment imitated a guitar. Her voice was contralto, wonderfully rich and full, to come from so slight a form. She sang with spirit and expression, putting a graceful espieglerie into her rendering of the verses.

"If the public don't like that they will be hard to please!" exclaimed Forrester fervently.

"You like it? Yes, I see you do! and I suppose you represent the ordinary cultivated public!" and she turned to look at him. Forrester was greatly fascinated, she was so frank, so unaffected, so in earnest about her work and transparently simple into the bargain.

Their talk flowed easily, until interrupted by the entrance of Mrs. Bartlett, who sailed in attired in a trailing black silk afternoon dress, a cap of black and gold lace with streamers of red ribbon and a 'pincenes' with a long handle hung by a ribbon from her neck. Her nose looked even more prominent without the background of a bonnet. Smiles wreathed her lips and satisfaction beamed in her eyes which were something the color of a boiled gooseberry.

"Now this is nice and friendly of the professor," she began, when she interrupted herself, "why, it is the gentleman you traveled over with, Angela."

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

AT REST.

"Aunt Hetty" Johnson.

Death removed from a circle of loving friends last Thursday the dear soul known to all as "Aunt Hetty", relict of Clark Johnson. She would have been 77 years of age April 12. Her life was a shining example of Christian piety, and her memory is a blessed heritage.

At the 1818-1893 celebration of the First Baptist Church of Plainfield, the historical discourse reviewing the church records for the 75th anniversary referred as follows to "Aunt Hetty" and other saints long in the faith:

"Only five of those who united with the church under Mr. Hill are with us now, Zerniah Stead, widow of Deacon Stead, now in her 96th year, Mahala Sims, Mrs. Hetty Johnson, Jerome Pack, by baptism, and William C. Ayres by letter."

Services for "Aunt Hetty" were held Saturday, Feb. 16, at the home of her son, Russell C. Johnson, 167 West 81st street, New York. Rev. Dr. David J. Yerkes, pastor, officiated, and spoke tenderly and fittingly of the departed. Sunday morning the body was brought to Plainfield, and laid at rest in the Evergreen Cemetery beside the husband who preceded her to Paradise. At the funeral services two beautiful hymns were sung above the casket by a quartette from Astor Lodge, F. and A. M., of which Russell C. Johnson is a member. In a letter of condolence sent to Mr. Johnson by the lodge, was the following beautiful quotation:

"With the morn that angel face may smile
Which you have loved long since and lost awhile."

Have You Been to the Mission?

The subject of Dr. Barrett's sermon last night was "Immortal Life". He showed first that there was no scientific obstacle to our belief in immortality. The righteousness and justice of God require us to believe in it. The unconquerable thirst which men have for immortality, the horror which they feel for annihiliation, can only be explained by the belief that this god-given hunger will be satisfied. The suffering and disciplining of God's children can only be explained by the fact that we are being educated for another and a higher life. The terrible wrongs of this world can be justified by the other life in which all wrongs shall be righted.

Go to Grace Church tonight, and hear the sermon on the "Divinity of Christ". Everybody is invited.

OFF THE TRACK.

Obstacles Heaped Before the Local Trolley Traction.

CITIZENS WITHHOLD CONSENTS.

Company Working Hard to Get Rights of Way for the Extensions To the Central Station—Another Council Meeting Next Week—Policemen Confirmed—License Ordinance Amended—Other Business.

The rapid-transit train was switched off the track by the fine Italian hand of the oldtime obstructionists last night, and the Common Council had to wait the arrival of the wrecking-train Chandler W. Riker. Mr. Riker was expected to be on hand to superintend the progress of the street-railway-extension franchise through the Council; but before the session Chairman Fisk of the Committee on Streets received a telegram, which he read to the Council when that body had convened, stating that because of obstinate property-owners near the North Avenue station it would be impossible to present the matter before the Council that night.

"We expected"—said Mr. Fisk—"to be able to offer the ordinance granting the extensions for which the company and the committee have been working; but we are of course prevented from proceeding on account of the trouble in getting consents."

On motion of Mr. Fisk it was decided to meet again Monday night, Feb. 25, at 8, when, he said, not only the street-railway but also several other matters would be ready for consideration.

To a reporter of The Daily Press, after the meeting Mr. Fisk said that the trouble on the eastern extension was chiefly from Fifth street people, and partly from those on Sixth street as well. Of course, he added, the company can get from Netherwood to the North Avenue station by way of Richmond street, but it wants to avoid going around Robin Hood's barn, and will make every effort to get through Fifth street. The obstruction to the West End extension is that it has thus far been impossible to get consents enabling the line to get a clear way to the North Avenue station. The company wants to complete the extensions at the start, bringing all cars to the central station, and it is now at work to overcome the obstacles which have been cast up before it. I hope that all will be ready next week Monday."

THE LICENSE QUESTION.

An important ordinance was introduced by Mr. Moore. It provided for the amendment of the liquor-license ordinance so that an applicant for license would not have to get the signature of the owner of the building in a case where the applicant was a tenant under a 10-years lease, if said lease had been secured with the owner's having full knowledge that the tenant was to conduct a liquor business on the premises.

The ordinance was as petitioned for at a previous session by Alexander D. Findlay, who represented that his landlord, Chas. Bock, had declined to sign his application this year although Bock had agreed at the signing of his 10-years lease a few seasons before that he might conduct a liquor business on the property during the life of the lease.

Mr. Dumont thought that it was unwise to attempt to amend the liquor ordinance while several other applications for license were pending.

"This"—he said—"is an effort to assist a man to carry out a contract—which I do n't approve."

On motion of Mr. Fisk the ordinance was tabled. Mr. Findlay's application has been advertised with Mr. Bock's signature attached, since his petition to the Council for the amendment.

POLICEMEN CONFIRMED.

The Police Board reported that the nominations by the Mayor of Nicholas Meyers and John Hartpence for regular policemen and Martin Vanderweg for special policeman had been investigated and approved. They therefore moved that the nominations be confirmed, and this was unanimously done.

Henry Haurand applied for a license to sell liquor at 115 East Front street. The application was referred to the Committee on License.

An application for an electric light on Arlington avenue between 300 and 400 feet beyond Ninth street, was referred to the Committee on Police and Public Lights, with power.

Mr. Erickson said that a number of reports and papers had been committed by the Council of '94 to the City Clerk for transfer to the Council of '95, and added "I 'd like to know where they are!" "Down stairs!" said Clerk MacMurray, and went down to get them. When he came back he had packages for several of the committees, and they were distributed.

AGAINST THE TROLLEY.

The memorial of the School Board against the passage of the electric railway through Arlington avenue between Fourth and Fifth streets, past the Stillman and the Franklin schools, or which these columns have already spoken, was read and referred to the Commitee on Streets. The document urged that the noise of the cars would interfere with the studies in the schools, and that there would be danger to the children attending the schools and using the avenue where the cars passed.

Accounts were ordered settled, minutes of the previous session were approved, and all the Councilmen went home except Messrs. Bird, Frost and Stockton, who were n't at the meeting.

A LADY OF FASHION

is said to have a rope of diamonds—holes bored through them so that she can put 'em on a string like beads. This is a very poor way in which to treat gems. Yet purely from the romantic point of view,

"THE HOLLOW RUBY"

may possess brilliant and prismatic beauties such as are found in the story of that title which Julian Hawthorne has written and which is to be published in The Daily Press, beginning Saturday, Feb. 23.

It is, of course, a tale of Eastern life and is full of startling incident and humor. Hawthorne has surpassed himself in this novel story, and it has been fully and fittingly illustrated.

Like all the serials published in these columns, it is brand-new and copyrighted.

Judges, Not Jude.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—In looking over The Press for February 16, under the headline "Memorizing the Bible', I see these references:

"A riddle at the marriage feast"—Jude XIV: 14.

"Gideon's signs"—Jude VI: 36.

As there is only one chapter of only 25 verses in the book of Jude, in my Bible, I would like to have an explanation of the above.

Do not think that I am a Bible student, or that I am criticizing, but I am always interested in news of this kind, and make it a point to preserve all such good things as this. But I want them correct. Please enlighten the ignorant, as I know The Press shines for all.

HOBOKEN LAWYER.

[The references were attributed to Jude by typographical error in spelling out the abbreviation "Jud". Judges is the book meant in both cases.—ED.]

Tea, Candy, and Dolls That Do Things.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS: You announced last week the coming entertainment of the Young Ladies Mission Band of the Presbyterian churches.

We have had to change the date, and so on Feb. 28, in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue Church, from 4 to 10 o'clock, tea will be served, an exhibition of glace candy-making given, and a valuable collection of live dolls displayed.

Will you kindly make note of this? Further information will be furnished as plans are perfected.

Seven Additions to the Substitute Force

The civil service examination papers were received by the local board of examiners yesterday from Washington, showing that the following passed successfully in the examinations held in this city February 2:

Clerks—F. L. Lancaster, Frank J. Quase.

Carriers—Wm. T. Newman, C. J. Shay, Charles F. Glaentzer, Wm. H. Milliken, Jules Stephany.

Temperance in Roselle.

John H. Sayers delivered an address before the Sons of Temperance in Roselle last night. The attendance was good, and the talk served as an incentive to considerable enthusiasm among his hearers. Hereafter the division will hold their meetings in a public hall, instead of a parlor circle.

Sam Allen Landed.

Col. Waring, Commissioner of Street Cleaning of New York city, through his assistant Col. Chas. K. Moore, late of Fanwood, has appointed as foreman Plainfield's own Samuel C. M. Allen. Mr Allen has had experience enough, and his friends hope that he will succeed in his new venture.

Masquerade in the Mountains.

At Gillette, the palatial country residence of the son of the late ex-Mayor Lang of Newark, there will be an invitation masquerade party, Thursday evening. Guests from New York, Newark, Jersey City and Plainfield will be present, and Frazee of this city will furnish the music.

—Love at first sight never occurs more genuinely than in meeting of the feminine fair with the embroideries at Peck's.

O. W. O. Hardman, sheriff of Tyler Co., W. Va., appreciates a good thing and does not hesitate to say so. He was almost prostrated with a cold when he procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He says: "It gave me prompt relief. I find it to be an invaluable remedy for coughs and colds." For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

THE GUTTER FOR A BED.

But Officer Frederickson Thought the Police Station Was a Better Place.

Matthew McGrath is a hobo, and like all of his kind when he is n't broke he is before a bar in a saloon, with the result of usually landing before the bar of justice. At least this is the particular experience which McGrath has every time he comes to Plainfield.

Yesterday he struck town, and, possessing a little change, he immediately proceeded to fill up on cheap whiskey, and naturally enough at dusk felt the need of sleep. He acted on the impulse of the moment, and either lay or fell down in the gutter on Second street.

Shortly after Policeman Frederickson came along and gathered in the sleepy McGrath, and conveyed him to a more secluded if not better bed in the alleged police station.

When arraigned this morning he admitted he was drunk, and when the Judge asked him what his occupation was he replied: "Well, I tell you, Judge, there 's no use lying to you, I mend umbrellas. But say, if you'll let me go I'll promise to get right out of town."

Inasmuch as the culprit's only fault was shiftlessness and an appetite for liquor, he was told to get and stay away for a year.

He made his exit with alacrity, and started on a bee-line for Scotch Plains.

THE TABLES TURNED.

This Time the Son-in-Law Is to Blame, and Not the Mother-in-Law.

Thomas Eagan married the daughter of Mrs. Lawler of Spooner avenue. There is standing joke that ordinarily a mother-in-law is the bane of her daughter's husband, but in police court this morning the circumstances were reversed, and Eagan was before His Honor for annoying Mrs. Lawler.

Eagan lives in New York with his wife and little child, and earns a livelihood by ringing fares on a Broadway cable car. Yesterday he took a day off, and came to Plainfield to renew acquaintance with his friends and incidentally to pay his respects to his mother-in-law. He saw his friends first, and during the various chats imbibed considerable of the amber fluid, which had a vivifying effect on his inward spirits, but a disastrous effect on his outward appearance.

Then he started to see Mrs. Lawler, but she saw him first and barricaded the door against his entrance, and sent a messenger after Policeman McCue, who arrived and took Eagan into custody.

During the night word had been sent to his wife, and she and the child appeared in court this morning, to intercede, if necessary, in his behalf.

But it was n't necessary for Mrs. Lawler did not want to press the charge. After some interchange of words with the prisoner, she asked Judge Coddington to let him off, if he would promise not to annoy her any more. He promised, and the family left the court, Mrs. Lawler meanwhile imforming him if he ever came near her again, she would let the law take its course.

Tennis Court Skating.

Young people of Washington Park are now enjoying all the delights of skating without having to walk to some of the distant ponds. The ice on the tennis court of Mr. Overton of Rockview avenue, which was flooded just before the blizzard, has been swept off, allowing the boys and girls of the neighborhood to glide across its glassy surface.

To Rehabilitate His Castle.

"Count" J. K. VanNess, the legal luminary who resides on a large estate of his own between this city and the village of Scotch Plains, contemplates many improvements on his property when the frost leaves the ground.

Building Loan Election.

An adjourned meeting of the New Jersey Building Loan and Investment Company, for the election of officers, will be held in the office of Bolce, Runyon & Co., this evening at 8.

To Make Boys Better.

The boys department of the Y. M. C. A. is planning for an active year. Meetings for boys will be held Sunday afternoons, and it is planned to have practical talks on subjects of interest every two weeks. The impetus given the work by the Convention will aid greatly. A conference was held yesterday afternoon by Mr. Manning, Mr. Clemens, and some of the younger members, at which plans were thoroughly discussed.

Gun Club to Build.

The Independent Gun Club of this city and North Plainfield held a special meeting in the Crescent Hotel last evening and decided to erect a club-house on their grounds near Hyde's woods. The plans and specifications are now out, and the club will soon commence the construction. The building will be 18x24. It will be a fireproof building. There will also be a large platform surrounding the structure.

Leal's '95.

The class of '95 in Leal's School have chosen a class pin. It is an ornamented shield covered with maroon enamel, on which "Leal's" and "'95" are lettered in gold. The design is very pretty.

VICTORY FOR GRANT.

Police Board Unanimously Reappoint Him Captain.

'T WAS DONE SATURDAY NIGHT.

Captain Grant Had n't Been Told Till a Daily Press Reporter Congratulated Him—Council Not Yet Notified.

In spite of the repeated malicious and venomous attacks of the so-called Republican organ, George W. Grant was on Saturday night reappointed Captain of Police for the year, at a salary as before of $90 a month.

The reappointment was unanimous.

When a reporter of The Daily Press talked with Mayor Gilbert this morning about the matter the Mayor expressed surprise that the reappointment had not been reported to the Council at the meeting of last night.

Captain Grant had not heard of the news till The Press told and congratulated him. He was appreciative of the victory he has won over his enemies, and said he would devote all his energies to the protection of property and the enforcement of the city ordinances, as heretofore. He will be heartily supported by a most efficient corps of experienced officers.

AS SUDDEN AS SAD.

Mrs. Harriett Sarson, Stricken with Illness in the Morning, Dies in the Afternoon.

Yesterday afternoon at 4 occurred the death of Mrs. Harriett Sarson, which was as sudden as it was sad.

During the early hours of the morning Mrs. Sarson had been engaged about her household duties at her home, corner of West Front street and Grant avenue, and was apparently enjoying the best of health.

Just before 9 she stepped into the home of Mrs. James C. Neils, who resides next door, as she had been in the habit of making friendly calls among her neighbors at odd moments, and was engaged in conversation concerning the passing incidents of the day, when she was stricken with serious internal pains, which continued to grow more overpowering every minute. She was assisted to a couch, and Dr. J. B. Probasco summoned, but he was unable either to relieve her suffering, or find what the ailment was. At 2 Dr. W. H. Murray was called into council, but no successful remedy was devised.

During the intervening time Miss May, her daughter, was at her side, and Mr. Sarson was summoned from his work at the Ackerman house, and between them, with the assistance of sympathizing neighbors, every effort was exhausted in the endeavor to relieve her distress, but without avail. And surrounded by her husband and only daughter, and the circle of friends, her life-light went out at 4, the home thereby losing a lovable wife and mother and the community an excellent type of womanhood. The family have resided in Plainfield for five years, and during that period Mrs. Sarson has won her way into the hearts of all with whom she has come in contact, by the genial and obliging disposition which were her characteristics in and out of home.

The demise is made doubly sad to her family by reason of the fact that extensive preparations were making for an elaborate wedding at Miss May's marriage to Austin Compton, March 13. Of course the event will be one of simplicity and quietude now.

A postmortem examination over the remains will be held this afternoon by the attending physicians.

The interment will take place in Plainfield.

TO FLORIDA.

To Have a Smithy of His Own.

Thomas Marley, for over 18 years a faithful employe of Horse-shoer Michael Quinn, intends to embark in business on his own account in a few weeks. Mr. Marley is not yet ready to announce his location, but will do so in due time through the columns of The Press.

EVANGELIZING YOUNG MEN.

Plainfield's Y. M. C. A. Continues the Good Work of Convention Week.

The promoters of the series of meetings which were opened last night in the Assembly Hall of the Y. M. C. A. are in a fair way of enjoying a realization of success, for last night a large number of young men were present, several of whom took the first step towards living better lives.

The meeting was conducted by Frank B. Hoagland, and opened with a song service, the Parks sisters adding much to the music by their cornet playing.

Mr. Hoagland's opening talk was brief, but pointed. He knew that there were a great many in the audience who were Christians, and a number who were not. It was among the latter that it was hoped some good would be done. He said, however, that it was very seldom that he found persons who never gave a thought to teachings of the Bible. A great many come to the Association rooms simply for the physical, mental and social advantages, but the object was to get them into the circle of Christianity.

The talk was followed by several relating their experiences, after which nine raised their hands to indicate that they were ready to join the army of religious workers. An after-meeting was held in which these nine were counseled and advised.

Announcement was made that a meeting would be held Friday evening, notwithstanding that it was a holiday.

TO SELL MUSIC HALL.

Stockholders Vote to Dissolve the Corporation.

A meeting of the stockholders of Music Hall Association was held yesterday afternoon at which 570 out of 800 shares were represented. For years the hall has been what might be termed a white elephant on the hands of its owners, and at this meeting it was decided to dispose of the property and dissolve the Association. The vote on this proposition was unanimous. It will be some weeks, however, before this can be consummated, owing to the necessity of complying with corporation laws relative thereto. The Board of Directors will under the law have charge as trustees of the matter of arranging the details to dispose of the property. It is understood that several persons are inclined to purchase the hall, if they can get it at their price.

Good Voices and Nimble Feet.

Those stellar comedians, Conroy & Fox, with their clever company of singing and dancing comedians, will present a new musical comedy, "Hot Tamales", in Music Hall, Washington's birthday, matinee and night; and it will be in keeping with their reputation for refined and humorous work. The singing of Miss Josie La-Fountaine is charming, and Messrs. Harry E. Fairbanks and J. C. Cherry possess powerful and effective tenor and basso voices respectively. The comic portion is stimulated by the splendid dancing of Thomas Watson, and of Ben Shields the ex-ball player. Miss Kittie Allen is a wonderful wing-and-duck dancer, and Miss Alice Gilmore, the famous Irish character actress, singer and dancer, has no equal. The others are all well-known, among them being Miss Dot, Miss Marble and Miss Cassie Stevens.

WOMEN'S CONVENTION

Mrs. Mosher Speaks to the Triennial Assembly.

The Professor of French and History at the Hillsdale, Mich., College, Talks on What Will Increase the Happiness of Home—Some Interesting Remarks.

Washington, Feb. 19.—Mrs. Stewart Mosher, professor of French and history, Hillsdale college, Hillsdale, Mich., spoke on "The Ethical Adjustment of Woman's Home and Sociological Duties." After an introduction alluding to women in history noted for home devotion and public ability and the increasing demands upon woman's time owing to the advancement and opportunities of the age, she said:

Many a woman in the medium walks of life, seeing with clear eye the opportunities for self development, is asking with burdened conscience what should be done and what left undone? How may the duties of domestic and home life imposed by a loved father and mother, husband, brother, sister or children be faithfully met, and the demands of society, culture, inclination, the church, and philanthropy receive due attention? Regarding home as paramount let us give to domestic labor that dignity and reverence which it deserves.

Our Homes a Sacred Trust.

The home, that altar the most sacred of human building, whose shrine is near the heavenly gate and whose flame it lighted with God's love, the bulwark of our nation's liberties and the promise of its perpetuities, our homes are the most sacred trusts committed to human hands. The highest graces of character are demanded by the sick and suffering of our households. The entrance to life and the passing therefrom bring us alongside the most solemn mysteries of existence. Holy must be the priestess who approaches thus near the great God at work. The hearthstone to which our loved men and women, buffeting the world in strife for honor or wealth, return is the pivot around which revolve the influences arousing to better or worse impulses, and a satisfactory, a refreshing supper, and a peaceful evening have helped more than one to prosperity, while unpalatable food, annoying surroundings, fretful and fretting home influences may compel St. Peter to refuse more than one expected guest at the gates of paradise.

Servant Girl System.

It often happens that there must be helpers in our homes, and here commence many of our perplexities. The servant girl system needs a reformation in which maid and mistress must have a share. Let us be broad and cordial in the recognition we give our home keepers in whatever station they are, and so shall home duties maintain their equipose in the new demands and opportunities of the age.

Again let us notice, first, that the home and the public sides present themselves with various demands and attractions. To some the duties of wifehood, motherhood, sisterhood, come with imperative force and the answering desires of their natures make response.

With Many Talents.

For them the home is engrossing and satisfying, but it behooved them with wisdom and order to adjust those duties to the outside demands that they may return their talents ten fold to their families. Home life is their profession, yet they need to go outside the domestic circle for social pleasure and self improvement and to add their contribution to the general work of the world.

There come calls of life to many a woman from more public directions, business, the law, the pulpit, the school-room demand for help in scores of undomestic ways. Must there in consequence be a complete severance from home duties? The proportion of men and women is such that many may be relieved from immediate home responsibilities. Their hours of service may be elsewhere, but though their hearthstones may be under the immediate control of sister or friend, its sweets and blessings are theirs in proportion as they contribute thought, money or love. The single woman has the opportunity to carry into the ruder, more selfish struggle for the necessities of existence the true womanly instincts which should help to make of the whole world, a home of the race, a faint prototype of the celestial home shadowed in all creeds.

Teachings of the Mother.

The sociological duties, which the present age is demanding of women, the enlargement and the completer fulfilling of the old. Nature gives the teaching of the little child to the mother. It does not say when her power to teach is exhausted. It is no new principle that to-day has intrusted our public schools almost exclusively to women and is calling them to honored positions upon school-boards and among college and university faculties. It is then no peculiar innovation when a medical faculty grants a diploma to a young lady, but a conformation to nature. It has been fitting that laws made by men should be interpreted by men, and governments formed for men should be administered by men, but when in the advance of the race and the enlargement of woman's sphere she becomes a recognized factor in the society to be governed, and when she herself must assume the defence of her rights and redress of her wrongs instead of some knighted hero, as in the days of chivalry, then she too begins to seek the interpretation of the great commandment "and thy neighbor as thyself."

Have Women a Right To Vote?

Patriotism, philanthrophy, when or where in the darkest time or clime have not women laid their all at need upon these altars? They tell us that since women do not choose to fight in armies, they have no right to lawmaking and to law executing. Then perish from off the land all wars, and let woman's heart, warm with the thrill of childrens' love, join in devising those international laws ushering in the millenium of peace.

ELECTRICAL WORKERS STRIKE.

Contractors' Association Upheld by the Master Builders' Committee.

New York, Feb. 19.—The Contractors' association held a meeting yesterday at their rooms, No. 117 East Twenty-third street. Mr. Strong, the president of the organization, presided. Just before the meeting Mr. Strong made a statement in which he said it was entirely untrue that the Brotherhood of Electrical workers had sent a notice to the contractors that unless after Feb. 15 the eight-hour day went into effect the men would strike.

"We received no notice whatever until Feb. 14, when they sent word to us that the eight-hour rule must go into effect on Monday," he said. "We, of course, could not accede to such an absurd request as we had contracts outstanding to the amount of $350,000. If we granted the brotherhood's demand it would make a difference of at least ten per cent. to us. All we asked for at any time, at the conference between our committee and theirs, was a ninety day notice. We told the men at the conference that if they fulfilled their contracts, which expired on the 17th, and continue on the same basis until May 1, we would then proceed on the eight-hour basis. When we had offered our terms they said that the rule must go into effect on the 18th and left the room. On Saturday night we told the men to come to work on Monday at the old rates. They did not do so and insist on calling the strike a lock-out. A committee representing the Master Builders' association called on us and stated that they would like to present the contractors' side of the case to the board of walking delegates of the building trades.

"The Master Builders' committee said that they upheld the contractors. The contractors told them that the men could return to work immediately at the old terms with the promise that the eight-hour rule should go into effect on May 15, and also that any minor differences should be laid before a board of arbitration, consisting of a committee of five of our association and a committee of five of the builders. The Master Builders' committee will confer with the board of walking delegates and report to us. We shall hold another meeting to-day."

MAYOR STRONG NON-PARTISAN.

He Did Not Criticize Mr. Platt—Studies the People's Interests.

New York, Feb. 19.—Among other visitors on Mayor Strong yesterday were ex-Collector Joel B. Erhardt, John Proctor Clarke, F. B. Thurber and John S. Smith. In reply to the question of a reporter as to the nature of the visit of these gentlemen the mayor would say nothing, but further remarked:

"I have been wrongly accused of having criticised Mr Platt. This is entirely untrue, and any interview to the contrary is false. No, sir, I don't propose to allow any legislature in Albany to interfere with my actions here. They can go ahead and do as they see fit there, and I will go ahead and do as I like here, considering only the best interests of the people and the city from a non-partisan standpoint."

GENERAL POLICE SHAKE-UP.

Fall River Police Commissioners Desire To Better the Service.

Fall River, Mass., Feb. 19.—There was a great surprise in police circles yesterday, a result of the biggest shaking-up the force ever received. Every officer was called to the Central Police station in the forenoon and each was notified of a change in his beat and the patrolmen in the outside or village stations were transferred to the Central station and vice versa. Men who have patrolled the same beats for years were transferred and placed on a footing with the nine new men who reported for the first time for police duty.

The commissioners say the cause of the change is a desire to better the service, more particularly in the enforcement of the liquor laws.

1,500 Thrown Out of Work.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Feb. 19.—The William Coal breaker, located at Duryea, was destroyed by fire last night. A large number of miners are in the shaft but no danger is apprehended to them, as the shaft is 500 feet away from the breaker. It is owned and operated by the Connell Coal company of Scranton. The loss is $90,000. Fifteen hundred men and boys are thrown out of employment. The origin of the fire is not known.

Carnegie's Men Drowned.

Pittsburg, Feb. 19.—The information has just been received in Homestead that Michael Roates and Andrew Sinfo, two Homestead men, were lost by the sinking of the steamship Elbe. Roates was employed in the beem mill of the steel works and Sinfo was a clipper. They had been visiting for two months at their homes in Austria. They sailed from Bremen for America in the steerage of the ill-fated steamer.

He will be sentenced to-morrow. Anthony Comstock of New York, who gathered evidence in the case, was present in court.

UNITED MINE WORKERS

The Six Days' Session of Sensationalism Ended.

Bitter Feeling Against McBride—Members Severely Censured—Installation of Officers by the Knights of Labor—No Alliance with the American Railway Union.

Columbus, O., Feb. 19.—The sixth annual convention of the United Mine Workers of America adjourned sine die last evening, after having been in session six days, every one of which was made the occasion for springing some unpleasant sensation. While John McBride had been exonerated on two charges, during the closing moments of the convention another sensation was sprung in which he figured conspicuously. He was a delegate to the recent American Federation of Labor convention at Denver, but instead of going there himself he sent N. R. Hysel, an attorney of this city, who is McBride's legal adviser. John Nugent, a coal operator, who has just been expelled from the United Mine Workers union, was also a delegate. To these gentlemen largely belongs the honor of securing the election of John McBride to the presidency of the American Federation of Labor.

Censuring Mr. Hysel.

Late in the afternoon James O'Connor, of Spring Valley, Ill, offered a resolution censuring Mr. Hysel for misconduct at the Denver convention, claiming that he violated the trust placed in him by voting against independent political action when the constituents of the convention, which made it possible for him to go, had expressly declared for such independent action.

The resolution called forth a storm of opposition and was discussed pro and con for an hour. It was at last amended so as to censure John McBride for sending Hysel to the convention, delegates charging that McBride knew that Hysel would vote as he did before he sent him. The vote stood 121 ayes to 168 nays. The original motion to censure Hysel was then tabled by a similar majority, thus indicating that the feeling against McBride is growing.

Bitter Against McBride.

Another instance in which the feeling against McBride manifested itself was when the committee on officers reported. The national officers were recommended for endorsement, but when it was discovered that this carried with it an endorsement of the manner in which the great coal miners settled their strike last June, there was much opposition, and the national officers, had a very narrow escape from rebuke the recommendation being adopted by the scant majority of 14.

The scale committee deemed it advisible to take no notice and their recommendation to defer was endorsed. But it is generally understood that they have practically agreed upon the compromise scale of 60 and 69 cents, and the executive board will settle it in April.

Knights of Labor Meet.

Immediately after the United Mine Workers convention adjourned, the new Knights of Labor organization held a session and installed their officers—master workman, W. B. Wilson, and secretary-treasurer, C. R. Martin.

After the meeting adjourned Mr. Wilson said to the United Press that he had received several letters proposing an alliance with the American Railway union and that if after due consideration, everything was found to be all right, he had no doubt but such an alliance would be affected.

The Ohio delegates arranged for a meeting for the purpose of mapping out a policy for the Ohio miners, but before the hour set for the meeting arrived it was declared off, the delegates concluding to wait till the regular annual meeting in April to take action, when secession will be considered.

A Husband in Disguise.

St. Louis, Feb. 19.—I. A. Turner of St. Catherines, Ont., who was stylishly dressed in female garb, was refused admission to the Planter's hotel yesterday when his sex was discovered. Turner explained that he was searching for his wife, who eloped from St. Catherines six weeks ago with a commercial traveler and that he had traced the pair to this city. His disguise was adopted to aid his search. Turner secured lodging elsewhere and is now watching the depots and hotels.

Mutual Settlement of Prices.

Concord, N. H., Feb. 19.—T. P. Sullivan of this city, secretary of the Granite Manufacturer's association of New England, received a message yesterday informing him that the manufacturers and cutters of Barre, Vt., had signed an agreement covering everything for one year from March 1, terminable on three-months' notice. The bill of prices agreed on as a basis of settlement is principally the same as that which existed for the past three years.

AT FOOT OF MT. OSSIPEE

A Winter Item from a Summer Resort.

THE NEWS COMES FROM FROZEN-IN CENTRE HARBOR.

On the Shores of Ice-Bound Lake Winnipesaukee.

The lake which the aboriginal Indians designated "The Smile of the Great Spirit,' and which the poet Whittier has immortalized in song, now presents to the myriad lovers of its summer beauty, a forlorn and dreary waste of ice and snow, over which the biting winter winds from the bleak mountain tops hold high carnival.

It is a wonderful transformation from the summer lake known to tourists, and, as may well be believed, the chill and nipping air is prolific of those foes to mankind, kidney troubles, neuralgia and rheumatism. Naturally, therefore, a great desideratum in this locality, as well as elsewhere, is how to cure these painful curses of the human race.

One of the old residents here, Simon D. Glines, of Centre Harbor, N. H., a man known all over this section of the country, has solved the question to his satisfaction, and his advice and counsel have done no end of good to those who live in frosty climates.

"It is with the greatest pleasure," he says, "that I offer my testimony and advice for the good of others. I had been troubled with kidney disease for many years. I was afflicted with la grippe and increased the kidney trouble.

"I was then attacked with rheumatism and suffered tortues. I tried many doctors and many remedies. Everything failed to effect a cure.

"I am now entirely cured of both kidney trouble and rheumatism, and I want to tell the people that I owe my present good state of health entirely to Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. After so many years of suffering it has completely cured me, and I would advise all afflicted as I was to give this splendid medicine a trial. I will freely answer all letters of inquiry."

That Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy will cure rheumatism, neuralgia and kidney complaints, is beyond question. It has been proved again and again, and is always successful. Prominent people, as well as those in the humbler walks of life, are continually testifying to the remarkable value of this medicine; to such an extent, indeed, that physicians, druggists and the people everywhere have come to recognize Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, as an absolute specific for these diseases—the remedy that can always be depended upon to cure. The spring is the very best time to cure these affections, and this remedy should be taken now.

Wherever these diseases exist, this grand medicine should be used at once. It is purely vegetable and harmless, and what gives it greater value and the people greater confidence in it, is the fact that it is the prescription and discovery of a well-known physician, the successful specialist in nervous and chronic diseases Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th st, New York City, who can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

A False Diagnosis.

La grippe is confounded by many persons with a severe attack of catarrh, which in some respects resembles the former. These individuals suffer severely with pain about the forehead, eyes and ears, with soreness in throat and stoppage of the nasal passages and in fact, are incapacitated for work of any kind for days at a time. These are catarrhal sufferers. Ely's Cream Balm has been used with the best results in such cases. The remedy will give instant relief.

MOTHER, I KILLED HER

A Murderer's Cool Remark to His Parent.

A Brute, in a Fit of Jealousy, Almost Severs His Wife's Head from Her Body and Makes His Escape. His Brother-in-Law Will Shoot Him on Sight.

Hoboken, N. J., Feb. 19.—A worthless and drunken husband only five days out of the Snake Hill penitentiary, in a fit of causeless jealously deliberately murdered his wife yesterday. The woman was respectable and hard working and supported her husband's aged mother as well as herself while he was serving time for cruelly ill-treating her.

Christopher Spearling is a German, 42 years old. He is an engineer, but is rarely at work. He always preferred to spend his time in getting intoxicated and beating his wife Helena, who is two years younger. The couple had no children, but lived with old Mrs. Spearling, who is over 70, at 224 Madison street, this city. A few months ago Spearling was sent to the penitentiary for wife-beating. His wife has meanwhile been supporting herself and old Mrs. Spearling by taking in washing. On last Wednesday Spearling was released, and as usual he celebrated the event by drinking heavily.

Drew a Razor.

Yesterday morning he came in and told his wife to go into the bed room and change her clothes, as he wanted her to go to the station house with him. He declared that she had been unfaithful to him, and that he was going to get a divorce. Spearling followed his wife into the bed room, and his mother, who remained in the kitchen, heard them talking excitedly.

Mrs. Spearling started to go back into the kitchen when her husband drew a razor from his pocket, and springing upon her from behind drew the razor across her throat. The blade cut a deep gash from ear to ear, nearly severing the head from the body. Mrs. Spearling dropped to the floor with hardly a groan. Her husband calmly wiped his bloody hands on the bed clothes, and going out into the kitchen, said quietly: "Mother, I have killed her."

The old lady rushed into the bed room and found her daughter-in-law lying dead in a pool of blood. She ran to the window and screamed frantically for help. Several nieghbors ran in, but before they arrived Spearling had managed to disappear, leaving the razor with which the woman had been killed lying upon the floor.

Will Shoot Him on Sight.

A crowd soon surrounded the house, and among the people was Henry Zang, who married a sister of Mrs. Spearling. As soon as he understood the brutality of the murder he procured a pistol and started in search of his brother-in-law, declaring that he would shoot the fellow on sight, though he could not find no trace of the murderer.

The woman's body was removed by Coroner Volk to an undertaker's shop, where the ghastly wound in her throat was sewed up and the body prepared for burial. Then it was taken back to the Madison street house, where old Mrs. Spearling, half crazed with grief, awaited it. Detective Gallagher and Roundsman Cross were detailed by the chief of police to find Spearling, but they had no better luck than Zang in their search. All the ferries and trains were watched, of course, and the police say that they think Spearling has not been able to get out of town and is in hiding somewhere in this city or one of the neighboring villages.

In the House of Commons

London, Feb. 19.—Sir William Harcourt, chancellor of the exchequer, looked after the government's interests in the debate preceding the division on Mr. Chamberlain's motion. He referred to the conservative demand, last voiced by Lord Salisbury on Saturday, that the government appeal to the country on the home rule issue alone. There never had been, he declared, and there never would be a general election with a single issue. The ministers regarded themselves as absolutely bound, until condemned by the house of commons, to prosecute the policy which they had been delegated to carry out. This was replied to by Arthur Balfour, the unionist leader. After the division Sir William moved the closure of the debate on the address. The motion was carried by a vote of 279 to 271 and the address was agreed.

Nation's Friendship.

Paris, Feb. 19.—Count Torrielli, the new Italian ambassador, presented his credentials to President Faure at the Elysee yesterday. In King Humbert's name he assured the president that the Italian government would endeavor earnestly to maintain more cordial relations with France. President Faure replied that France was as anxious as Italy to preserve the friendship of the two countries.

In Memory of George Peabody.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 19.—The centennial of the birth of George Peabody, the philanthropist, was observed here yesterday by appropriate exercises in the public schools. There was a mass meeting of teachers in the Central school, and resolutions were adopted looking to raising a fund by penny subscription to erect a statue of Peabody in statuary hall in the capitol at Washington.

Sentenced to Death.

Meadville, Pa., Feb. 19.—The sentence of death was yesterday pronounced upon Fred McDonald, the 17-year-old boy who was convicted of the murder of John McAndrew a companion of the same age. He heard the sentence without flinching and remarked as he was taken from the court that "It didn't take long to do that job."

Body of an Elbe Victim.

London, Feb. 19.—A fishing boat arrived at Dungeness yesterday with the body of Walter Schull, a passenger on the Elbe. The body had a life belt around it and upon one of the fingers was an engagement ring with the inscription "Emmy Schoeller."

SIX MINERS KILLED.

Five Others Are Fatally Injured by an Explosion of Gas.

Pottsville, Pa., Feb. 19.—By an explosion of mine gas yesterday the West Bear Ridge colliery of the Reading Coal & Iron company, at Mahanoy Plane, six miners were killed and five were burned, four of them probably fatally.

Five men were probably instantly killed, and it was some time before their bodies were recovered from the workings, but the sixth man was taken out alive and died while being carried to the hospital.

It is feared that four of those injured are fatally burned.

The origin of the explosion is not known, but it is supposed that a naked lamp ignited a large body of gas that had been let loose from a blast that was made in the gangway.

The explosion set fire to the timbers, cutting off the escape of the five men killed in the mine.

The six men who were taken out alive were nearest the gangways and escaped the suffocating fuses of the gas and the avalanche of coal and timber which followed the explosion.

A fierce fire broke out in the gangway, but nevertheless the work of rescuing the imprisoned men or recovering their bodies, if dead, was at once proceeded with.

A line of hose was run into the gangway and late in the afternoon the dead bodies of the five men were recovered.

The fire in the mine is still raging fiercely and is in a place not easy of access.

FOILED IN HIS ATTEMPT.

An Editor in Hard Luck, Resorts to Fraud.

Emporia, Kan., Feb. 19.—A stranger giving his name as Harwell P. Heath attempted to cash a draft for $360 at the Citizens' Bank of Emporia purporting to be from the First National bank of Pasadena, Cala, on the Nassau bank, New York. He was arrested and a telegram to Passadena brought the answer that the draft were fraudulent. In Heath's pocket were trip passes, San Francisco to Chicago and return in favor of Frank H. Truesdell, and newspaper clippings showing that Truesdell had been managing editor of the Elmira (N. Y.) Telegram and recently at work on the San Francisco Chronicle.

A receipt for dues of the San Francisco Press club and personal cards seem to identify Heath as Truesdell unless the articles are stolen. Heath refuses to answer questions.

WILL SUE THE ELBE'S OWNERS.

S. H. Frank Wants $50,000 Damages for the Loss of His Brother.

Buffalo, Feb. 19.—Siegmund H. Frank, brother of Jacob Frank, the Buffalo ticket broker, who lost his life in the wreck of the steamship Elbe on the morning of Jan. 30, is about to begin an action against the North German Lloyd Steamship company, owners of the lost vessel, for $50,000 damages for alleged negligence in causing his brother's death.

One of the first steps in the proceedings was taken yesterday when Eugene L. Falk, attorney for Mr. Frank, made application to Surrogate Stern for limited letters of administration on the estate of the deceased. The surrogate granted the application, giving power to Mr. Frank to begin the action.

A PROTEST FROM LABOR.

An Objection Made to the Consolidation of Many Bureaus.

Albany, Feb. 19.—The senate was prompt in getting together last night and there was a large audience. The usual number of petitions against Sunday opening was presented. A protest was received from the state branch of the American Federation of Labor, against the abolition or consolidation of the factory inspectors bureau, the bureau of statisticcs of labor and the board of mediation and arbitration.

The protest says these bureaus are the only safeguards protecting the workingmen against unjust or rapacious employers and that their abolition would mean a direct slap in the face of organized labor.

A Lively Time Expected.

Philadelphia, Feb. 19.—Local elections will be held in every township of all the counties in Pennsylvania to-day and in every city and burough. Mayors, burgesses, councilmen, school directors, election board officers and other officials are to be elected. Here in this city an interest that has not been equalled for years has been aroused by the mayorality canvass made by Charles F. Warwick, the republican candidate, and ex-Gov. Robert E. Pattison, the democratic standard bearer. The contest has been particularly fierce and waged with a vindictiveness with which no political battle in this city has been fought for a long time.

A Victim of Anarchists.

Chicago, Feb. 19.—Dan Daly, one of the policemen who charged on the anarchists during the Haymarket riot and was almost killed by being struck on the head by a piece of the bomb, was taken to the Detention hospital yesterday, having been stricken by another violent attack of insanity. He rushed around his home flourishing two revolvers and threatening to kill everyone in the house. He has been in the asylum twice.

From the Elbe.

London, Feb. 19.—Several hats, caps and bonnets were washed ashore near Lool, Cornwall, yesterday. One cap was marked "Elbe" outside and "Soper" in side. The articles are supposed to have been carried to the Cornish coast by the strong east winds of the last two weeks.

Looking for Gentry.

New York, Feb. 19.—Detectives were sent out from the Central office to look for James A. Gentry, the murderer of Miss Madge Yorke, the actress, early yesterday, but up to last night no clue of the man had been obtained. Every policeman on the force has been furnished with a description of Gentry.

Old Glory Only.

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 19.—The following bill has passed the senate: It shall be forbidden to display any flag or flags other than the stars and stripes on public buildings.

GOLD COIN QUESTION

Stewart's Resolution Laid Before the Senate.

Senator Gray Defends the Administration in the Purchase of Gold Abroad—Three Measures Passed by the House While Two Bills Are Defeated—Other Congressional Work.

Washington, Feb. 19.—The day's session of the senate was interesting from start to finish. Early in the day the resolution offered last Saturday by Mr. Stewart (pop., Nev.), declaring that there was no authority in law for the purchase of gold coin in preference to other coin, was laid before the senate and Mr. Gray (dem., Del.) took advantage of it to reply to the attacks made last Saturday upon the president of the United States in connection with the contract for the purchase of gold by the issue of 4 per cent. thirty year bonds.

Congress Sat Dumb.

Mr. Gray entered into a defense of the action of the president and showed that the president had twice appealed to congress for aid in sustaining the credit of the United States; that congress had sat dumb, and irresponsive to these appeals; and that the executive action was dictated by his duty under the laws. It was entirely the fault of congress, not of the president, if the government had to pay interest at the rate of 3¾ per cent. instead of 3 per cent.

Senator Sherman (rep., O.) also addressed the senate in contending that a promise to pay in coin meant payment in such coin as the holder of the bond desired; and that, as the government had required gold coin to be paid for all the bonds issued since 1869 honesty and fair dealing required their repayment, principal and interest, in gold coin. Mr. Sherman, however, was far from approving the contract whereby 4 per cent. thirty year bonds were sold to the syndicate at 104½ when they were really worth, in the English and American market (measured by the quotations for the 4 per cents. having ten years to run), 120. He characterized the bargain as faulty and improvident on the part of the United States, but concluded that it had now to be submitted to. There was no action on the resolution.

Amendments Passed.

When it was out of the way the agricultural appropriation bill was taken up, and was, after a couple of hours discussion of various amendments, passed.

Then Mr. Jones (dem., Ark.) came forward with a motion that the senate proceed to the consideration of the bill reported by him from the finance committee on the 12th providing for the issue of bonds and the coinage of silver. This motion was antagonized by a motion to adjourn, made by Mr. Hale (rep., Me.), but the senate, by the very decisive vote of 17 to 38, refused to adjourn. After some intermediary skirmishing the debate came to a direct vote on the motion to take up the silver bill, and the friends of that measure prevailed, with a majority of three—the vote being: Yeas, 30; nays, 27.

The bill was laid before the senate, and then, after notice by Mr. Jones that he would try to have a final vote before adjournment to-day, the senate adjourned.

May Receive Bullion.

The Jones' bill provides as follows: That from and after the passage of this act the secretary of the treasury is hereby authorized and directed to receive at any United States mint, from any citizen of the United States, silver bullion of standard fineness, and coin the same into silver dollars of four hundred and twelve and one-half grains each. The seigniorage on the said bullion shall belong to the United States, and shall be the difference between the coinage value thereof and the market price of the bullion in New York on the day the deposit is made, and all expenditures for coinage done under the provisions of this act shall be paid out of said seigniorage; and the secretary of the treasury shall deliver to the depositors of such bullion, standard silver dollars equal in amount to the price thereof as aforesaid; and whenever the said coins herein provided for shall be received into the treasury, certificates may be issued thereon, in the manner now provided by law.

In the House.

The house yesterday devoted four hours to the transaction of business under the suspension of the rules, during which time three measures were passed and two defeated. Those passed were bills fixing the minimum pension of pensioners of the Mexican war and the Indian wars from 1832 to 1842 at $12 per month; amending the statutes concerning the regulation of steam vessels and granting Mount Vernon barracks, Alabama, to that state for public purposes.

The measures defeated were to create a retired list for the revenue cutter service and granting to the Altamonte Water company the right to construct dams across the St. Louis and Cloquet rivers in Minnesota.

An hour was devoted to the naval appropriation bill.

A point of order was made by Mr. Sayers of Texas, against the paragraph authorizing an increase in the enlisted force of the navy.

Mr. O'Neill of Massachusetts, chairman of the committee, reserved his decision until to-day.

The resignation of Representative Wilson of Washington—senator elect—was received and accepted.

A Big Order for Cars.

Detroit, Feb. 19.—A contract for fifteen hundred freight cars, with all modern improvements, has practically been closed between the Michigan-Peninsula Railroad company of this city, and the New York Central railroad. This will give employment to between 2,500 and 3,000.

To Resume Work on Full Time.

Reading, Pa., Feb. 19.—The Reading Hardware works will go on full time, sixty hours a week next Monday. For some months the company has been working but forty hours a week. Over 80 hands are employed.

is a virtuous vice. The world is better for it. It makes men ambitious—and it makes women careful of their personal appearance. It doesn't take much money to keep well-dressed now-a-days. Cleaning or dyeing makes it possible to use soiled or fadded garments. And there's where our ax comes in. We are in the Cleaning and Dyeing business. THE DAILY PRESS.

A. L. FORCE, Publisher and Proprietor.
WALTER IRVING CLARKE, Managing Editor.

TOWN AND HOME FAVORITE.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., FEB. 19, 1895

Newark women have organized under the name Phylitesiepoma. The society has an important mission from the start—educating the dear public how to say its name.

Asbury Park gave the Hub a bad scrape yesterday, and is entitled to be called the Hub of Summer conventions. Plainfield wheelmen are glad Jersey got the L. A. W. convention, and Plainfield will be there.

The neighboring town of Madison had a housecleaning time yesterday, and scrubbed James Stout, a hermit who had not had a bath in 14 years. James was a graduate of Bowdoin College, and as a prize pupil in mental philosophy boycotted soap because B. T. Babbitt refused to advertise in the Bowdoin College paper.

At last a reason has been found for the existence of a Greek-letter society in the High School. It is the protection of the members from those dreadful teachers. The Press is told that one of the bright boys of the High School when asked to get up and recite his lesson said he did n't know, and kept his seat. The teacher, it is said, insisted on his rising and making an effort to tell what he had been asked. As he refused to get up, he was suspended. The boy being a member of the Greek-letter fraternity, that august body has, it is reported, decided to demand that the offender be restored to good standing in his class, or there'll be trouble for the teacher who laid him off. The strike of the students will be watched with interest. The mystic cabal of the society invests the matter with a certain degree of awe that is a novel and refreshing feature of rebellions.

Central Avenue Afflictions.

Some of our Central avenue residents are having a hard time of it this Winter. Charles F. Abbott's eldest son, Wesley, is laid up with a very severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism which has affected him in both feet, one leg and one arm. He is unable to move and has to be frequently lifted for a change of position. Dr. Endicott is giving him careful attention. A. S. Patterson also is a sufferer. He has had several slight attacks of gout during the Winter which have greatly debilitated him.

But last Friday he was compelled to take to his bed which he is yet unable to leave. He also has been attacked in both feet, ankles, one knee and elbow. Dr. T. S. Davis has used some new German (homœpathic) remedies, which first brought speedy relief from the intense pain, and then checked the tendency of the disease to shift to various parts of the body. At last account both patients were resting easier.

Fine, Says Dr. Cuyler.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—Our people might be glad to see this "Echo of the Convention", in the form of the letter just received from Dr. Cuyler.

Yours truly,
WM. D. MURRAY.

Feb. 19, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER MURRAY—I went over to your Convention at some risk with my sore throat and cough, and on account of a detention of the train I did not reach home until midnight.

But I was glad to meet the "Jersey Boys", and several letters which I have received make me think that my hoarse talk did some service.

Most heartily yours,
THEO. L. CUYLER.

P. S.—That was a fine Convention.

Soft Skating.

A number of people went to Hyde's pond yesterday afternoon, to enjoy the skating, but were sadly disappointed as the ice was poor. Despite its softness, some ventured on the ice. Several received severe wettings by stumbling on the rough ice and falling into the slush.

—Alexander Muir of West Fourth street, whose hand had been crippled by a burn, had the use of it restored by an operation by Drs. Murray and Tomlinson in Muhlenberg Hospital yesterday.

—At the meeting of the Plainfield Bicycle club last night six new members were elected. The question of securing a physical instructor was brought up and will be more thoroughly discussed after more information on the subject has been obtained.

The experience of Geo. A. Apgar, of German Valley, N. J., is well worth remembering. He was troubled with chronic diarrhoea and doctored for five months and was treated by four different doctors without benefit. He then began using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, of which one small bottle effected a complete cure. It is for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Short Stories of Heroism from Real Life.

A Champion of Warsaw.

Feb. 19 and 20, 1831, the second generation of Polish patriots defeated their oppressors at Grochow, the same suburb of Warsaw where "Koscinsko fell." The insurrection of 1830-1 was led by adherents of the old champion and the revolutionary army at Grochow marshaled by one who had stood on the "rampart heights" with those "trusty warriors, few, but undismayed," when

Leagued oppression poured to northern wars
Her whiskered pandours and her fierce Hussars.

This was Michael Radzivill, scion of the oldest and most noble line of princes in the realm. Although his family sided with the Russian czar as against the young enthusiasts of the second insurrection, Prince Radzivill took the field at the head of 60,000 patriots, deposed the czar's brother and viceroy, the tyrant Constantine, and drew up his battalions on the classic heights to defend the capital. The czar had sent the renowned Marshal Diebitsch with 120,000 Cossacks and hussars from the imperial camps to restore his brother to the throne. Radzivill defeated him at Grochow, with enormous loss. Believing that a settlement was possible, the prince then laid down his sword.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

A Great Success.

There are many remarkable successes on the road this season, but none exceeds the popularity enjoyed by the latest New York success, "She Couldn't Marry Three." Press and public accord it an ovation wherever presented. The scenic effects are superb, the story an intense and interesting one, unlike the many unreasonable and unnatural plays with which the public are surfeited. It is full of hearty laughter, bright and catchy music, the most sensational climaxes.

The company is one of the strongest on the road, the scenery the most magnificent ever built, and as the curtain rises on each act, prolonged applause attests the public appreciation of each beautiful stage picture. The great scenic artists, Messrs. Daniel Crimmins and Herbert Speck, feel justly proud of their work on this production.

—A supper and sale of fancy articles takes place in Vincent Chapel this evening.

$100 Reward $100.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognise her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,
of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,
Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. E. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

NEW FIELDS FOR NOVELISTS.

Why Does Not Some Writer Use an Eskimo as Heroine?

The division of the earth among contemporary novelists has not as yet included Greenland, where some new writer can lay the scene of a story in which the heroine will wear sealskin trousers and calm her troubled heart with mighty drafts of train oil.

Neither has any novelist seized upon China, where great things may yet be done by a story teller who really knows something of that modern and multitudinous sphinx, the Chinaman.

But with these exceptions there is very little desirable territory which is not pre-empted. This of course greatly hampers new novelists who are compelled to write novels dealing only with English men and women at home.

England is the common possession of everybody, and even the American writer who does not wish to imitate either Mr. Harte or Mr. Howells is compelled to lay the scene of his stories in London or in some one of the many little English colonies to be found in continental cities.

The English novelist who wishes to write a story characterized by some little novelty is reduced to inventing Dodos or other fabulous creatures, an attempt which fails more frequently than it succeeds.

This state of things is so plain to every writer that I wonder that no one has rushed in to occupy the Greenland or the Chinese field.

A Greenland story would at once attract attention because of its novelty, and we who have never been to Greenland could warmly recognize the truth of its local color, and the profound knowledge of Eskimo character shown by the writer.

An advanced Eskimo maiden with a wild desire to wear petticoats instead of trousers and to drink tea instead of train oil could hardly fail to charm the reader.

I am afraid, however, that the advanced Eskimo maid would not survive beyond the first four or five chapters, for I understand that whenever an Eskimo woman exhibits symptoms of advanced thinking she is immediately set adrift on an ice floe—W. L. Alden in Idler.

The Morning Breaketh.

Awake, O ye who sleepeth!
Arouse, be on thy guard.
Hear the voice of Him who speaketh.
Be watch and ward.
Prayers from million hearts ascending
He is answering swift and clear,
Mid strife and turmoil lending
Strength and loving cheer.

Know ye not that He is calling
For workers more and more,
Consecrated for the harvest
About our very door?
Souls a-hungered, drifting
Mid darkness, strife and ruin,
Hearts He now is sifting
To let the sunlight in.

Behold, the morning breaketh!
Crimson the east has grown.
The Lord is swiftly coming
To claim once more His own.
Let us, then, put on our armor,
Work for Him while we may,
Gather jewels for His kingdom
And the glad eternal day.

Charles Houseman, who for years piloted Locomotive 385 through this city in her flight against the wind, who is one of the oldest engineers in the Central's employ, and who now pulls the famous 386 against time, stole away from Somerville yesterday to visit a few warm friends in this city. He was royally entertained.

John Y. Barrett the milkman, whose home is near Evona, is particularly happy, and wears an unusually broad smile as he serves his customers these frosty mornings. He thought he would keep the cause a secret, but The Press has discovered the cause of all his happines—it's a little boy, the first child, and was born on Blizzard Friday, Feb. 8.

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. THE JOYS OF GIBRALTAR.

Its Skies and Flowers and Monkeys and Picturesque Inhabitants.

A sky of a wonderful blue overhead. A sea of sapphire at our feet. Beyond, so far away that they lose themselves in the haze of the horizon, a range of mountains—those of two continents as wide apart in civilization as two worlds, yet blending themselves as one with the distance. Towering above us a rock bristling with fortifications, tunnelled with magazines, set all over with cannon and signal stations. Around us, at the foot of this rock, queer little narrow streets, branching off in every direction, following crooked courses through the town, sometimes, like escaping prisoners, running up wide flights of steps, between high stucco walls, only to be stopped by a higher wall at the top, and so forced to turn abruptly, dodge by a garden and round the corner of a house beyond.

Donkeys with panniers go up and down these steps, donkeys jingling with bells drag every conceivable sort of cart through the streets. Moors, barelegged, with covered heads and flowing garments; Spaniards in long cloaks, soldiers in English uniform, foreigners from many nations, jostle and crowd and shout. Old men and women or small ragged boys drive droves of turkeys, guiding them with whips, snapping their long lashes as our teamsters drive horses. And everywhere one looks, in porcelain pots fastened to the outsides of houses, filling the gardens, covering often the cannon, nodding over the walls, clambering up trees, waving bright colors at us like signal flags from stations on the rock above us—everywhere are flowers; the heliotrope in bushes large as those of our currants, geraniums like trees, red cactus, one great sweep of color, morning glories, roses, the December air as perfumed as that of June.

This, then, is Gibraltar; no gloomy fortress, but a paradise of flowers, a medley of the picturesque. The 6,000 English soldiers add only to the effect, and the new defenses always going on suggest not so much preparations for war as some new marvel of engineering skill, from which beauty of line is never eliminated.

With this marvel of earth and sky above us there could be no indoors for us that day. Even Prof. Prodgers mounted a donkey to make the ascent of those galleries, tunnelling the rock to its very crest, 1,300 feet above, every opening mounted with a cannon. It is here that the monkeys, tired perhaps of awaiting battles for which so many preparations are made, carry on warfare of their own, hurling stones at visitors and soldiers, while they sit and grin at a distance like mischievous school boys.—Harper's Bazaar.

FOR CHEAP GAS.

Expert Stevens Could Furnish It at 37 Cents and Have a Picnic.

There is a bill in the New Jersey legislature limiting the price of gas to one dollar per thousand feet. Mr. Gruber of Jersey City, who introduced the bill, produced figures from an expert gasmaker, showing that 250,000 cubic feet of gas can be made and distributed for $87.12. Deducting 10 per cent. for leakage there would remain 225,000 cubic feet, which, sold at one dollar a thousand, would bring $225, and leave a profit of $137.88. An additional 250,000 cubic feet could be made for $64.12, making the total cost of manufacturing and distributing 500,000 feet of gas a day $156.24. For an invested capital of $200,000, after deducting 10 per cent. for interest, his figures showed that there would remain a yearly surplus of $88,220.40.

The representatives of the gas companies spent some time upon the floor of the House endeavoring to ascertain the name of the expert. After considerable sparring between Mr. Gruber and Secretary of State Kelsey and Col. Fuller, Levi Stevens stepped forward and announced that he made the figures and was prepared to prove their correctness. He said he could secure a million dollars capital and furnish gas of 22-candle power for 30 cents per thousand. In Philadelphia he could supply the city at 37 cents, "and have a picnic," he said. Excellent 22-candle power gas, he continued, can be made for 18 to 22 cents, and it costs about as much more to distribute it.

Mr. Stevens displayed considerable feeling against Secretary Kelsey, whom he charged with being the agent of the New York gas companies. The Trenton Gas Company, he said, was started on a capital of $25,000, which had been watered on the profits, and now amounted to $320,000. Mr. Stevens is now superintending the gas plant at the State prison, where he makes gas at less than 50 cents a thousand, and said he could light the State House for less.

A PENALTY WORSE THAN DEATH.

Belgium Has a System of Refined Torture that Kills in Three Years.

Though the death penalty was practically abolished in Belgium over thirty years ago, the punishment of those convicted of capital crimes is so awful that none has yet been able to endure it more than three years.

The duties of public executioner in Belgium are singular, but not arduous. The courts still continue to sentence malefactors to death, but the guillotine has been replaced by a scaffold, on which is posted a copy of the sentence. Much ceremony is observed in affixing this document. A troop of gendarmes, with their imposing helmets plumed with horsehair, is drawn up about the place of execution, which they gravely guard with sabers drawn, while the red-robed executioner mounts the steps, nails up the decrees of the court, and after a moment takes it down again.

But the condemned man might more mercifully have perished by the axe or rope. He is placed in a dungeon so constructed that from the moment he enters it he will never hear the sound of human voices nor see a living being. His food is passed in through a sliding panel in the door of his cell.

Not one of these prisoners has been able to survive this confinement more than three years. The authorities have striven in vain to prolong their lives by varying their food as much as possible, but those who are moderately or lightly nourished gradually waste away, while those who are generously fed go mad and die raving maniacs.

Not Easy to Please.

Married Man—Why don't you get married, Miss Perkins? You are getting to look like a "back number." You will soon be an old maid.

Miss Perkins—If I were as easy to please as your wife was I would have been married long ago.—Boston Home Journal.

LEADER OF SWELLS.

WARD M'ALLISTER WON FAME BY INSTIGATING NEW YORK'S 400.

He Was a Lawyer and Fond of Genteel Society. He Tried to Establish An American Aristocracy and Succeeded. His Career.

It was his statement that New York society consisted of four hundred people that made Ward McAllister a national character, whose fame soon spread to Europe and made him a more unique personality than civilization in its slow evolution had hitherto produced.

Ward McAllister was the product of New York conditions, and he was proud of the factors that made and kept him prominent. He fitted into the tastes and peculiarities of no other community. He was the offspring of the metropolis in which he had lived for thirty-five years.

He never made any mistake with regard to his own talents and functions. To estimate him as a literary man, as a thinker, a reformer, a doctrinaire, is manifestly unjust, for there is even in his writings a continual protest against such judgments.

He was a social, not an intellectual influence. He had a profound belief that a really good society, in the social sense, must be founded, even in a republic, on something better than mere wealth; that it must have character, distinction, conservative cohesion and must be in a sense exclusive. He has said over and over again that what is known to us as the best society does not get its warrant from birth or from money, but from the ability to separate itself from everything that is vulgar and ignoble, and to exercise with absolute independence the privilege of refusing to associate with anything that did not come up to its own standard—no matter how arbitrary that standard might be.

He was the spokesman of this set. Self elected, perhaps, but tolerated, recognized and looked up to by the set itself.

He rode into popular recognition on a phrase. And his limitation of the genuine society of New York to "four hundred" was the first intimation of his set views of the exclusiveness of that society. He was travestied and abused a great deal for that phrase, but although he defended it with modifications afterwards, he never for a moment gave up the conviction that it embodied.

WARD M'ALLISTER.

His authority for so many years as a master of ceremonies was the result, first of a somewhat variant and confused notion of "proper form" in our society, and second, of the absolute need in all fashionable functions of an expert who had made a study of details, who knew to perfection just where the cross-currents of the different sets touched, and who could with masterful adroitness bring together the right people and so manipulate the function that everybody would feel at ease and know that the viands and the wines and the service were invisibly selected and consummately handled.

He was a member of the Union club, a connoisseur in wines, a gourmet and an arbiter of elegance. His name was known to everybody within the portals of society, and his good offices were sought by those who desired admission to the charmed circle, but the multitude had never heard of him.

Through him all news about the great subscription balls had been given to the public, and to him a reporter went one day in the spring of 1888 to obtain information about the number of persons who actually composed New York society. Mr. McAllister separated in his mind the four hundred sheep from the million and three-quarters of goats and gave the facts to the world.

The public was amused and surprised. Nobody had imagined that New York's society was composed of so limited a number. The interview was republished throughout America, was made the subject of comment and criticism all over the world, and Mr. McAllister was famous. "The Upper Ten," the approved abbreviation of "Upper Ten Thousand," fell into innocuous desuetude, and the "Four Hundred" became the conventional designation of Mr. McAllister's flock.

This limitation of society took a firm hold on the imagination of the people at large, and the sensation it created did not die out in a day. The endless discussion of Mr. McAllister seemed to please him. A flattering offer was made to him to write a book. The ridicule that followed the publication of "Society As I Have Found It" did not discourage him in the least. He continued to write about his set, and consequently tarnished his prestige to some extent with those who had formerly looked to him for their social law.

Although recognized as the great society leader, Mr. McAllister was not particularly fastidious about his attire. He usually wore sack coats in the street, and was not "dandified." He was stout, weighing probably 200 pounds, and about five feet ten inches tall. He was quite bald; his hair was light brown and inclined to be curly, his heavy mustache and imperial sandy and streaked with gray. His eyes were blue and shaded by thick eyebrows.

He was born in Georgia more than sixty years ago. His grandfather was chief justice of the State, and his father a judge of the United States circuit court. Ward McAllister was admitted to the bar in California in 1851, and for a time practiced law with his brother, Hall McAllister, who subsequently became the leading lawyer of the Pacific slope.

SWINDLERS ROBBED.

With a "Black Jack" Sheffield Took $1,600 in Genuine Bills.

John Sheffield, of Manchester, New York, came down to Jersey City with a big blackjack that, it is said, he borrowed from Sheriff Fitzgerald, of Ontario county. His mission was to beat the "green goods" men at their own game and get the flash roll of genuine money that they show to their victims. He got the roll, but Chief of Police Murphy took it off him and locked him up on a charge of carrying a concealed deadly blackjack though, when arrested Sheffield was running out of Taylor's Hotel, hatless, and with the bloodstained weapon in his hand, with which he had just knocked out one of the green goods operators, after grabbing the roll of $1,600.

Sheffield is a tall and muscular fellow, thirty-five years old, who looks like a typical New Jersey commuter. His birthplace was Watkins Glen, but he moved some little time ago to Manchester where he runs a restaurant. The police think he is a "come back"—that is to say, a green goods buyer who has been swindled and who returns to the scene of spoliation to do the thing over again, and do it better, though, as a rule, they learn very little by experience, and simply get cheated again.

His story is that a friend of his had been robbed by the gang, and that when he received one of their circulars, offering genuine paper money at ruinous sacrifices, he determined to fool them. He wrote enthusiastic letters, telling them to set their presses going and print $5,000 for him in "tens, fives and ones," and have them nice and dry and ready to spend as soon as he arrived.

On a cut rate ticket and a gleam of foxiness upon his features, he came down as far as Port Jervis on Monday. The swindlers had notified him to meet them at No. 87 West street, New York, but he wished to play a game upon them with his blackjack, and he preferred to select his own battle grounds. So he wired them from Port Jervis that they must meet him at Taylor's hotel.

When they reached room 70 one of the men pulled out a bundle, untied it and threw a lot of brand new bills upon the table. As it afterward turned out, there were one hundred genuine $10 bills, one hundred $5's and one hundred $1's, making a total of $1,600.

The man from Manchester asked them if that was all they had got, and they said it was. Then a suspicious gleam came over his face and the operators began to look at each other. Sheffield had been pretending to examine the money, and while doing so had scooped it into a pile. Large beads of perspiration spangled his brow, and he trembled with excitement. The operators then realized that they were being trifled with.

One of the men raised his umbrella to attack Sheffield and the other punched out at him. Sheffield, unable to suppress his feelings, uttered a warwhoop and drew his blackjack. He whanged the big man over the head with it, knocking him over, and then flourished it over the other man, who had stepped back in alarm and stumbled over the bed.

Sheffield put the money into his overcoat pocket and dashed out of the door without his hat. That wasn't what he had intended to do, but he told Chief Murphy afterward that his excitement dominated him, and he couldn't work according to schedule. Bellowing like an alarmed maniac, he dashed down the stairs, waving the blackjack and acting generally like a weird, wild thug.

A uniformed policeman came up at that moment, and the two removed Sheffield to police headquarters. His hair was waving in the breeze and he was breathing quickly, something like a man snoring.

Meanwhile the green goods operators had dashed down the stairs, run through the barber shop and the bar room and then vanished. A policeman at the ferry saw a well dressed man with dark complexion run into the ferry house. Blood was streaming from under his hat and he was much agitated. It was not until after the boat that took the wounded stranger to New York had started that the policeman connected him with the Taylor hotel events.

Sheffield, at police headquarters, told Chief Murphy exactly how he had got the $1,600. This was a weak move on his part, because if he had said the money was his and that he had brought it down to buy green goods with, it would have been given back to him. As it is it will go to the Police Mutual Aid fund.

It Was a Ham.

A Gratiot avenue grocer who has missed a ham or two from the hooks outside his store set a watch the other evening and the result was that a colored man was nabbed just as he got the property into his possession. When taken into the store the grocer asked:

"Well, sir, what excuse have you got for such conduct?"

"Boss, what's all dis row 'bout?" calmly inquired the prisoner.

"Why, you stole that ham!"

"Goodness me! Does yo' charge dat I dun stole dat ham?"

"Certainly, you were caught walking away with it."

"But am it a ham?"

"Of course it is!"

"A sure-'nuff ham—regular meat an' bone?"

"Certainly."

"Fo' de Lawd, but what a narrer escape I has had! Say, boss, does yo' know what I fought that ar' ham was?"

"You thought it a ham, of course."

"No, sah—no, sah—I didn't. I jest dun believe it was a peck of meal in a bag hangin' up dar, an' I wanted to feed my chickens. Ham! Ham! Why, if I'd got home an' found it was a ham, I'd hev begun to eat an' eat, an' kept right on 'till I busted all to smash! Wall, I do declar! Yo' jest orter to put signs up on dem hams so dat folks won't make mistakes an' kill demselves!"—Detroit Free Press.

The Beater Beaten.

"Since Christmas I've begun to have my doubts about Santa Claus," ruefully exclaimed the boy who smokes cigarettes. "I tried to get an extra share by fooling the old fellow, so I got up in the night and put a big hole in the toe of my stocking, with my fishing net under it, so he wouldn't hear the things drop out." "Wot wuz de net result?" inquired the boy who couldn't help being funny. "I found the hole darned just like those in my other stockings—and mother gave me a terrible licking for nothing that morning."

He Would Then.

HAWTHORNE'S SHYNESS.

He Knew that Deer Liked Tobacco, but Wouldn't Talk.

Prof. J. H. Gilmore gave an interesting lecture on Nathaniel Hawthorne, in Rochester recently, in the course of which he related the following: "It was my privilege to meet Hawthorne at the White Mountains. He was there with Pierce and Loring and Spofford, and I saw considerable of him. I shall never forget the whimsical appearance of the man when Pierce was trying to get him to go into the parlor of the hotel. He was quite averse to it. There were clever people there from all over the United States, who had heard of him and were proud of him; but he did not want to mingle with them at all. Pierce insisted upon it, and he complied, and after five minutes he made his escape, and I found him out on the veranda smoking a cigar. He did not want to make friends, apparently, but he made an exception in my favor. I had been spending several summers there, and I knew the woodcraft very thoroughly, and he found out that he could get from me the information that he wanted. He would ask me a question, and my reply would be followed by another question. 'Why?' for instance, he asked me, 'which way would you fish a trout stream?' I said, 'Down stream.' Then he asked me why. I was compelled to answer that a trout, when wounded, runs up the stream, and that if I were fishing down stream he would not disturb the trout below. On one occasion I referred to the fact that the grain of the wood of a certain tree was twisted. At first he questioned the fact, and asked: 'What makes you think so?' I said to him: 'If you will go with me to the woodpile I will show you that it is so.' I thus satisfied him of the fact, but, as to the reason for it, I could only give a theory—that it was caused by the winds. I think that while he was there he found out all that I knew; and I found out very little from him. There was one thing that he knew that I did not find out. One day we were looking at a pet fawn. He said: 'Do you know that every animal of the deer kind is naturally fond of tobacco?' I was taken all aback, because I had been taught that only man and a certain loathsome green worm, the vilest thing the Creator ever made, would touch tobacco. To illustrate the matter to me he put his hand into his pocket, for he not only smoked but chewed, took out a piece of tobacco and handed it to the fawn, and she ate it down as though she liked it, and while I was waiting to see her fall down dead, she was nosing around Hawthorne's pocket for some more tobacco."

Wanted to be Hypnotized.

"Mister," said Meandering Mike, as he stood at the step of the doctor's office, "kin you hypnotize?"

"Can I what?" exclaimed the astonished practitioner.

"Hypnotize. I want somebody dat kin flim-flam my intelleck."

"No. I never made a study of mesmeric science."

"Do yer know anybody dat kin?"

"Y—yes. What do you want with such things?"

"Well, ye see, Doc, it's diss here way. I'm a great reader, I am. I reads every scrap o' paper I gits me hands on, an' it's a cole day when I aint up to de times."

"I suppose you've discovered that hypnotism is being used as a defense for crime?"

"'Course I has. But I ain got no sech idees. Me intentions is t'oroughly honor-'ble. I jes' been offered a job of snow shovelin' down de street, an' I'm blest ef I ain't so hard up I feels mos' like workin' ter git de money."

"But what has that got to do with hypnotism?"

"Well, I t'ought dat ef you could put a dizzy, hanky-panky spell on me, see? so's I could shovel dat snow wit'out knowin' a t'ing about it, 'twould be a ack of kindness ter a feller man. Whut I wants is some one dat kin make me 'magine dat shovelin' snow is rushin' de growler, so's I kin earn de quarter before I knows what's happenin'."—Washington Star.

The Wig-Wag Language of Dogs.

It is no doubt a startling conclusion, but Dr. Louis Robinson, who has been investigating the mysteries of canine language, has practically set up the theory that a dog speaks with his tail tip. In the case of all hunting dogs which pack together the tail is carried aloft and is very free in movement. There is no doubt that fox hounds habitually watch the tails of those in front of them when drawing a covert. If a faint drag is detected, suggestive of the presence of a fox, but not sufficient to be sworn to vocally, the tail of the finder is set in motion and the warmer the scent the quicker does it wag. Others seeing the signal instantly join the first, and there is an assemblage of waving tails before even the least whisper is heard. Should the drag prove a doubtful one, the hounds separate again and the waving ceases, but if it grows stronger when followed up the wagging becomes more emphatic, until one after another the hounds begin to whine and give tongue and stream off in Indian file along the line of scent. When the pack is at full cry upon a strong scent the tails cease to wave, but are carried aloft in full view.—London Dispatch.

How She Won Their Votes.

Those who may have imagined that the woman politicians of the country would not prove resourceful in practical electioneering will be interested in Miss Estelle Reel, formerly of Ohio, who carried the State of Wyoming in her canvass for state superintendent of public instruction. Miss Reel is not only young (27), but charming. Being nominated upon the Republican ticket she determined to lead the same, and did so.

In Wyoming the voting places are few and far between, so the woman candidate adopted an original plan of bringing the cowboys to the front. She procured a list of addresses and an immense stock of the daintiest stationery and a corresponding supply of photographs of herself. Inclosing the picture with a graceful personal appeal to every known or unknown friend, she induced the rough riders of the State to travel in many cases as much as fifty miles to vote for the pretty girl who thus honored them.

Miss Reel is said to be the most delightful kind of a woman, and has designs on still higher positions within the gift of the people.

There is now to-day $1,600,000,000 deposited in the savings banks of the United States. There it is—the storehouse of the poor laboring men of the country. Give them the opportunity and they will supply the national deficiency of $50,000,000 in three days, and the thing will be over.—Senator John Sherman.

TO DEFEND THE CUP.

SOME OF THE YACHTING EVENTS OF THE PAST QUARTER CENTURY.

Yankee Talent Has So Far Held Supremacy Against British Persistency. Personelle of the Contesting Syndicate of 1895. Lord Dunraven to the Fore Again.

When all minor questions at issue in the matter of the international races are put aside, one thing stands out in the most pronounced manner to the credit of the British yachtsmen—that is, their courage and persistency in the face of continued defeat. It is doubtless a national characteristic to be brave and determined under reverses, but repeated assaults after repeated failures stamp them as foemen worthy the steel of their Yankee victors. It is a long list of disasters when the record is gone over. It begins in the year 1870, when the Cambria, owned by Mr. James Ashbury, was beaten. It finishes in 1893, when the Valkyrie, the property of Lord Dunraven, lowered her colors to the Vigilant. And in the years intervening there is seen that the Livonia, also owned by Mr. James Ashbury; the Countess of Dufferin, represented by Major C. Gifford; the Atalanta, in charge of Mr. Alex. Cuthbert; the Genesta, owned by Sir Richard Sutton; the Galatea, belonging to Lieutenant Henn, and the Thistle, owned by Mr. James Bell, crossed the ocean to be repulsed by the vessels defending the cup. The races which those challengers sailed number eighteen, and the period covered is almost a quarter of a century. Still, the leaders of the sport in England do not seem to be discouraged. They are just as anxious now as in the past to win back the trophy which the American captured more than forty-four years ago. So, courage and persistency must, in truth, be marked against their names and their efforts.

When Lord Dunraven left America, after the failure of the Valkyrie's mission, he intimated to a few friends that he had not given up trying to win the cup, but, on the contrary, was more determined than ever, and within a year or two he should again be heard from by the New York Yacht Club. He has kept his word in the most positive way. Throughout the Vigilant's races abroad last summer he and his yachting friends and private designer were engaged in the pleasant duty of studying the performances of the bronze boat, and the more they studied the more they were convinced that British skill and enterprise could at no distant day reach the end in view—the building of a craft that would defeat America's best in their own waters. For this they are working. The craft is being built on the Clyde, and Lord Dunraven is her representative owner and the leading spirit in the challenge which has been accepted for the ninth of these international matches.

E. D. MORGAN, C. O. ISELIN,
W. K. VANDERBILT,
LORD WOLVERTON, LORD DUNRAVEN.

Lord Wolverton is a member of the Valkyrie syndicate. He is not more than 30 years old, but has long been a yachtsman, and is noted for his extensive travels. He has owned several well known boats and is now cruising in the Mediterranean in the steam yacht Fedora, which he chartered from the Marquis of Waterford. This cruise will not finish until the beginning of May. Lord Wolverton was married recently to Lady Edith Ward, only daughter of Georgina, Countess of Dudley, who is quite a yachtswoman, and for her Lord Wolverton had built, just before their marriage, the two rater Douscha, which they took to the Mediterranean on the deck of the Fedora.

The syndicate owning the cup defender now building at Bristol, and which, in all likelihood, will be the New York Yacht Club's champion in the match for the trophy, are three in number. These gentlemen are Mr. William K. Vanderbilt, Commodore E. D. Morgan and Mr. C. Oliver Iselin. When the question of providing the money to build a proper boat with which to meet the challenging yacht was being agitated, there was much anxiety manifested on the part of the club's officials. Matters did not assume a satisfactory shape until Mr. Chester Griswold, member of the Regatta Committee, called upon Mr. Vanderbilt and explained the situation to him. In less time than it takes to tell the result of the interview Mr. Vanderbilt assured his caller that he would build the boat required. The generous and patriotic offer was hailed with delight by the officers of the club. Subsequently Commodore Morgan and Mr. Iselin signified their desire to co-operate with Mr. Vanderbilt, and the syndicate was thus announced, with Mr. Iselin to be in charge of the craft from now until the races are finished in September next.

It is a model syndicate. Mr. Vanderbilt was one of the number that built the Vigilant, and has always taken the keenest of interest in the yachting affairs of the country and in the club's welfare. His steam yacht Alva was a representative vessel, and his twin screw steamer Valiant, now in the Mediterranean, one of the grandest pleasure craft afloat. He expects to return to America with his steamer in time to witness the cup races, and there isn't a yachtsman in the land but that will wish that he may have the great pleasure of seeing the boat which he so quietly and promptly assured Mr. Griswold he would build defeat her British antagonist.

A NEEDLE'S JOURNEY.

Traversed a Woman's Body Many Times, and Was Got Out Last Week.

Dr. D. P. Robbins of Union City, Pa., has a needle that he prizes so highly that a good deal of money would be required to buy it from him. It is an ordinary cambric needle, fine, and two inches long. There are probably not many needles in existence as old as this one. It is known to be sixty years old, for it was lost sixty years ago this month. It was found one day last week.

In January, 1835, Lorina Sherwood, then a girl of 14, lost the needle. She lost it by swallowing it. Ever since then the needle has been journeying to and fro through her body. When she was 16 years old she felt it pricking through her toe. Two years afterward it made itself felt under her left knee, and came so near the surface that every one thought it would work its way out, but it didn't. It turned and started on a new trip.

Several years passed before it was felt again. In the meantime the girl had become Mrs. Durham. A year after she was married the needle announced itself as still with her by coming to some obstruction under her left shoulder blade. It remained there a long time, causing Mrs. Durham great suffering. At last the pain there ceased, and it was presumed that the needle had taken another course. This presumption was correct, for two years later Mrs. Durham felt it near her right elbow. The pain, while it remained there, was intense, but once more the needle started on its travels. Four years afterward it assailed Mrs. Durham's right knee, and an attempt was made to cut it out, but it got away.

So it has been going ever since and Mrs. Durham says that there is no part of her body from her shoulders down that at some time or other she has not felt the pricking and pain of the traveling needle. Three years ago it came to the right knee again, and shortly afterward reached the right ankle.

Since then Mrs. Durham has not felt it until the other day, when she was seized with excruciating pains in her left leg, a few inches below the knee joint. Mrs. Durham lives at Sherwood's Corners, Pa., and Dr. Robbins happened to be on a non-professional visit to that place.

He had heard of the needle that for sixty years had been making a highway of Mrs. Durham's body, and he requested that he might try and get it. He was permitted to make the quest. He cut two inches into the muscle of Mrs. Durham's leg and got the needle. It was headed for another upward journey. It was as bright as when it was swallowed threescore years ago, and has lost nothing of its proportions.

A DYING MAN'S QUEER JOKE.

Made Rich Bequests to His Benefactors Which Turned Out to be Fictitious.

A shabbily dressed man in the last stages of consumption presented himself at one of the Paris hospitals recently and was received and cared for. Two days later a strange story ran from one end of the institution to the other. The consumptive, it was said, was a rich landowner from the south of France, who, to expiate a life spent in debauchery and general wickedness, wished to end his days among the very poor and wretched. It seems he had secretly procured pen and paper and had dictated his will to one of his fellow patients.

He bequeathed all his possessions to the good people who had sweetened his last moments, 100,000 francs to the director, 100,000 francs to the chief physician, 30,000 francs to the hospital which had so charitably sheltered him, and so on. No one was forgotten, not even his companions in misery.

Every patient is solicitously cared for in the hospital in question, but this one received a double portion of attention. Out of delicacy all forbore to speak to him of his bequest, but all watched over the generous giver with particular tenderness, and, surrounded by every comfort, he breathed his last. The brilliant funeral which followed was paid for by the hospital which he had enriched.

But what a sorrowful, stupefying surprise was theirs when they learned at the end of a week that in the region indicated as the native place of the deceased, where his house and land, his valuables and goods were located, he was utterly unknown. The name he had given was false; the will he had made was a hoax.

At first all concerned were furious, but second thoughts showed them the humorous side of the stupendous joke of which they had been the victims, and if laughter is a cure for ills many such have followed in that institution.

LITTLE COOKS AT WORK.

Pies with diaphanous crusts and cakes light and delicate as snow flakes were disposed of in great number at the afternoon reception given by the New York Cooking School, at its headquarters on the top floor of the United Charities building. The objects of the school are to give free instruction in plain cookery to the children of the working people, to teach them to market advantageously, to provide economically, and also to teach the higher branches of cookery to those who can pay for such instruction. Samples of the daintiest coffee, tea, and chocolate are served to the guests, but the bulk of the good things are bought by the visitors, the proceeds going to aid the work of the school.

Since its organization the school has educated thirty teachers, given free instruction at the school to about 1,000 children, and taught in various missions and classes elsewhere about 2,000 others. In addition to this, several hundred private lessons are given every year. These private lessons are a source of revenue to the school, being given chiefly to the matrons of fashionable society, who pay well for the instruction. Women who do not care to learn themselves often send their cooks for a special course of lessons in the higher branches of the culinary art. Classes both day and evening at very reasonable rates are also open to working girls.

CHAPTER III.

"Let me introduce Capt. Forrester to you," said Miss Cavallo. "He has been good enough to bring me my lace scarf which I thought I had lost. I am so glad to get it again."

"Well, that is nice," exclaimed Mrs. Bartlett, "and to come all this way with it. I'm sure you ought to be flattered, Angy, my dear," and she nodded, knowingly: "Pray, sir, are you residing in London?" she added, too curious to heed the logical sequence of her speech.

"No; I am rather a bird of passage, but I shall make some stay in town just now."

"Indeed!" returned Mrs. Bartlett, blandly. "Then perhaps you would give me the pleasure of your company to a small and early gathering, on the 10th, a conversazione in short, mixed with music. We have some literary and artistic friends coming, and I hope to have a genial and intellectual evening."

"Thank you! I shall be very pleased to come," returned Forrester, joyously. "Music has enormous charms for my savage breast."

"Very glad you can join us! My young friend here is good enough to promise her valuable assistance, and one of my inmates plays the violoncello admirably. I endeavor to make my modest mansion a social center of an improving description." She smiled and nodded to Forrester as if taking him into her confidence, while Forrester caught a surprised look in Miss Cavallo's speaking eyes.

"She did nothing. I should accept," he said to himself. "I dare say the company will be a queer crew. It's a shame that such a dainty creature should be plunged into a set of Bohemians, as I suspect she is. By Jove! the carriage of her head is a sort of patent of nobility." Here his reflections were broken by the tinkling of a rather cracked bell.

"Pray join us at our frugal lunch," Capt. Forrester, said Mrs. Bartlett in an altra elegant tone. Forrester fancied Miss Cavallo's eyes said "don't," and therefore replied: "Thanks! I seldom indulge in luncheon and I have an engagement in town, so I must say good morning; by the way, do you ever go to the theater?"

"Oh! we delight in the drama!" said Mrs. Bartlett.

"Indeed! Then I shall send you a box or stalls at the Criterion next week. I have some interest there," returned Forrester, which was true, so far as L. S. D. always has interest.

"Dear me, how very nice!" exclaimed Mrs. Bartlett. Then Forrester bowed himself out.

So soon as the door had closed on him Mrs. Bartlett, with a knowing shake of the head, observed: "What an elegant man, my dear, quite a swell! Why he is gone upon you, Angy! To think of his coming all this way! Mark my words, he has fallen in love at first sight! I suppose he is rich! He has the air of being rich. You must be careful dear, but not too stand off—"

Angy smiled with a far-away look in her eyes. "I suppose he likes to amuse himself," she said, very calmly. "He doesn't seem a bad sort of man—very English, I suppose, at least I never met anyone quite like him before."

"Tip-top style, my dear, take my word for it. But I am glad he didn't stay to lunch—cold shoulder of mutton is sweet eating, but it looks ragged. Come along, I am desperately hungry."

This interview fanned the incipient flame which was already more than smouldering in Forrester's decidedly impressionable heart. He had a great weakness for ladies' society and was equally liked by them. His amourettes were legion, but left little trace on his elastic nature.

There was something, however in the steady but gentle composure of Angela Cavallo which exercised an extraordinary fascination upon him—perhaps it was the charm that strength has for weakness, but, besides, his amour-propre was stirred and stung with a keen desire to ruffle that profound quiet of hers by the breath of emotion—the sweet tremulousness of shy liking.

"I dare say I shall make a fool of myself, I generally do, and women take these passages much more seriously than we do. I fancy that girl could be desperately in earnest—if—if she cared for a man, and how delicious to be cared for by her! She looks better without her hat than with it. She is certainly a gentlewoman, but her surroundings are not exactly aristocratic. Of course, I'll not let things go too far; as soon as I make my arrangements here I'll go on to Scotland. As to this claimant that Dixon talks of, I don't fear much on that score."

Such were Forrester's reflections as he rolled eastward to his hotel. "Did you return the scarf personally, or by post?" asked Dixon a day or two after, with a twinkle in his keen eyes.

"Oh, personally, of course! That was mere politeness."

"And where did you find her?"

"In person with a respectable elderly female, whose house is, she informed me, an intellectual and artistic center."

"Indeed! Well, don't try too much centralization!"

Forrester laughed and changed the subject.

The days flew by and the 10th was soon with them. Forrester had omitted to mention his engagement to his friend and adviser, who told him that he had duly answered Messrs. Welford's letter and had received no further communication, and he (Dixon) supposed the next move would be an application to the probate court. That was something too far off to trouble him, so he sent off a gorgeous bouquet to Miss Angela Cavallo, and indulged in anticipations of a very pleasant evening. Great had been the preparations at No. 13 Alma terrace. Doors had been taken off their hinges and doorways draped with art muslin. Refreshments were spread in the much-glorified kitchen, the grate being draped with embroidered stuff, lent by a friendly artist, and turned into a niche containing a plaster cast from the antique, contributed by another. The scullery was converted into a cave of mystery where a necromancer with a long, white beard revealed the future to those "young men and maidens" who sought him at intervals during the evening.

There were no stately waiters in broadcloth to oppress the company with sense of the unfitness of things; a couple of active maids with fresh white caps and aprons flitted about, but otherwise the male guests did the waiting themselves with cheerful alacrity, and among them none were more active and unremitting in his attentions than Forrester.

Most of the guests had assembled when he arrived and he was cordially greeted by Mrs. Bartlett, who was attired in black velvet with a court-like plume of white feathers in her cap, and some really splendid diamonds (Irish) sparkling round her neck.

"Here's your friend Capt. Forrester, my dear!" she said over the shoulder of one of a group of men, who, parting at the hostess' words, revealed Miss Cavallo, whose eyes met Forrester's with a laughing look as if she were amused at his coming. She was very simply dressed, still in black, which showed the snowy whiteness of her neck and arms, and her thick fine hair of red gold without any ornament whatever. Forrester's bouquet lay in her lap, and she was in the act of drawing off her long gloves. Forrester was conscious of a sudden desire to expel, by no gentle means, all the long-haired and queerly dressed men who surrounded her. One or two were in correct evening attire, but none looked like men of Forrester's world.

"Good evening," she said, giving him her hand. "Thank you very much for these beautiful flowers; they give me so much pleasure."

"Then I am amply rewarded," he replied, gazing at her with undisguised admiration. She met his eyes with the same look of amusement he had noticed before.

"I am going to sing," she said. "Will you take care of this for me?" handing him her bouquet.

"Certainly," offering his arm.

"Oh! I must take M. Dupont's! He manages many concerts and wants to hear me sing," and she turned to a very stout gentleman with a head like a blacking brush and stiffly-waxed mustache. "Pray for my success," she added, in a low tone, and, to Forrester's disgust, she walked off with M. Dupont, speaking to him in French with much animation.

The song was an English ballad. It was given with much expression, and received with applause. As soon as Miss Cavallo rose from the piano the Frenchman approached and spoke to her earnestly for a few moments. She listened with evident interest, a brighter sparkle coming into her eyes and lightening up her face. When there was a pause in their talk Forrester approached and offered her his arm, which she accepted and returned to her seat.

"I suppose your fat friend was properly enchanted with your delightful song," he said.

"Ah! that would be too much to expect from so potent a personage! But he was encouraging. He wants to see me and speak of business! He manages many concerts here. I am afraid it is rather late for any engagements this season. Perhaps next year I may be more fortunate."

"And if you find nothing to do?"

"I shall return to Paris," she replied.

"Paris is your home?"

"Yes, it has been for the last four years."

"You ought to see something of England before you leave it. By the way, will you and Mrs. Bartlett come and see Wyndham in 'David Garrick,' on Tuesday?"

"Oh! I shall be charmed to go. I think Mrs. Bartlett is disengaged." Here they were silenced by a general "Hush" as a slightly disheveled young man stood up to recite. Then two men sang a duet; a piece on the violoncello followed. Then Miss Cavallo played an accompaniment for a lady with a brilliant but rather piercing soprano voice. There was a good deal of spirit and ability in all these performances, and Forrester found himself everywhere amused, though rather impatient at having so little conversation with the fair girl who attracted him. Mrs. Bartlett, however, was most attentive to her favored guest, introducing him to various smiling dames, for whom, however, he found it difficult to invent conversation. At last he was revived by the approach of Miss Cavallo, who said: "Would you like to have your fortune told?"

"Yes, immensely!"

"There is a wonderful man downstairs who is, Mrs. Bartlett says, quite infallible. I want to hear my fate, too."

"I suspect I have found mine!" said Forrester, smiling. "Nevertheless, I should like to see if this wise man will corroborate my suspicions. Come, then."

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

DR. LEWIS BRINGS TEARS

His Speech Made Senator Bradley Cry.

'TWAS A COLD-WATER ORATION.

The Plainfield Pastor Presents the Most Impressive of the Local-Option Addresses Before the Legislative Committee.

Including Revs. Honeyman, Lewis, Richards, McKelvie, Yerkes, Herring, Schenck, Newell and Goodrich, all of Plainfield, over two hundred ministers and representatives of church and temperance organizations appeared before the Senate Committee on Boroughs yesterday in favor of Senator Rogers's local-option bills.

Rev. Albert Lawson, president of the New Jersey Anti-Liquor League, made an address and introduced other speakers, among whom was Dr. Handley of Trenton. The trend of the whole talk was that the bills only gave to boroughs the right of local self-government, and many were the threats, some open and some indirect, that if the bills were not passed the Republican party would be wiped out of power as the Democratic party had been because it had not heeded the voice of the people when they opposed the passage of the race-track laws.

Not a single saloon keeper appeared before the committee at the public hearing on the bills today, but in answer to Senator Bradley's curiously worded invitation the Senate chamber was filled with ministers and temperance men from all over the State. Senator Daly, who was called for by one of the ministers, spoke in opposition to the bill, declaring his confidence in the Judges of the courts, who at present pass upon licenses.

The Rev. Dr. Lewis of Plainfield made the speech of the day. "We know", he said, "that the word has gone forth from the bosses that these bills are to be killed. We have been told there is no use in our protesting, as the Republicans are not willing to do anything to injure their prospects of electing a Republican Governor."

He had voted for every Republican candidate, he said, since the martyred Lincoln, but he warned the Republicans that the people were watching them this year as never before, and if they were denied their rights the party would pay dearly for it.

Dr. Lewis's words so impressed Chairman Bradley as to draw tears from the Senator's eyes.

The Trenton Times refers as follows to the matter:

"One of the most impressive speakers was Rev. Dr. Lewis, pastor of a Plainfield Baptist Church. He was tall, with white hair and flowing white whiskers which gave him a patriarchal appearance. He spoke with much emotion and said this was a fight for American liberty and was the echo of the fight the people made seven hundred years ago when they wrung Magna Charta from King John. He said that he had been advised by one of the ring that the bill would never pass. Bradley had no following and the Republicans were not going to do anything that would hurt their chances of electing a Governor. He said he had voted for every Republican President since the martyred Lincoln, but he warned the Republicans that the people of New Jersey were watching them, and if they denied them that liberty for which our fathers fought they would pay dearly for it. Senator Bradley was so affected by the address of Dr. Lewis that tears coursed down his cheek, causing him to freely use his white silk handkerchief. When he got up to introduce the next speaker he was so choked up that his voice was hardly audible.

"Senator Daly spoke against the bills. He thought the courts were the proper places for granting licenses, and he said he was opposed to the principle of local option, and believed that the minority had some rights."

ON THE INCREASE.

The Second Night of the Y. M. C. A. Meetings Find More Present.

The second of the series of meetings which are being held in the assembly hall of the Y M C A this week, was attended by a large increase over that of Monday night, the audience being a mixture of young and old men, with a sprinkling of young lads among them.

The cornet playing of Park sisters at the opening was appreciatively listened to, after which a number of short prayers were offered. Before the remarks of Conductor Hoagland were made, a season of testimony was had in which the most interesting experience related was that of a young boy, about 12 years of age, who said he had been trying to live the life of a Christian for four years.

Mr. Hoagland said that the Gospel was adapted to every place and class of people in the world. Human nature was the same the world over, and the great teachings and examples set forth in the Bible have to do with us now the same as in Christ's time. The outward life may seem to be all right, but God looked into the heart. Some men say they live pretty near right and do but little evil—just as though there was a catalogue of sins. To offend in one particular means to offend in all. The only way to inherit the Kingdom of God is to express a desire to be better.

Acting on the advice of Mr. Hoagland a number raised their hands for prayers before the meeting closed. The customary after meeting was held.

A LADY OF FASHION

is said to have a rope of diamonds—holes bored through them so that she can put 'em on a string like beads. This is a very poor way in which to treat gems. Yet purely from the romantic point of view,

"THE HOLLOW RUBY"

may possess brilliant and prismatic beauties such as are found in the story of that title which Julian Hawthorne has written and which is to be published in The Daily Press, beginning Saturday, Feb. 23.

It is, of course, a tale of Eastern life and is full of startling incident and humor. Hawthorne has surpassed himself in this novel story, and it has been fully and fittingly illustrated.

Like all the serials published in these columns, it is brand-new and copyrighted.

Husband and Wife in the Same Grave.

Monday afternoon a double funeral occurred at Locust Grove, in which Randolph Pack and wife were interred in the same grave. Mr. Pack died on Wednesday, and his wife was so prostrated by the shock of his demise that she failed rapidly in health, and died on Friday. They were cousins of Gerome Pack of this city, whose son, Edwin W., attended the funeral.

Freshening Up.

Yesterday afternoon two painters retouched the large sign on the hardware store of A. M. Griffin. They worked on a narrow ladder at the height of the third story, but were as unconcerned as though employed on terra firma. The entire front of the building, 119-123 East Front street, is being repainted by the decorative experts, E. E. Marshall & Co.

Freight Trains Late.

Freight and coal trains were delayed several hours last night and this morning on the Jersey Central by reason of a freight locomotive failing to make steam fast enough to pull a train between this city and Fanwood, thus blockading other trains from proceeding.

The Lost Found.

The crowbar which was lost off the Alert hose wagon while running to a fire a few days ago, was found and returned to the department yesterday afternoon by a young man by the name of Taylor. It was found along the Central tracks on West street near Liberty.

For Morals and Physique.

General Secretary Manning of the Y. M. C. A. desires it stated that the Gymnasium will be open nights of this week, notwithstanding the religious meetings in the Assembly Hall. However, it is desired that as many as possible may attend the meetings.

Wanted—Street-Car Ferry-Boats.

At nearly every crossing on Somerset street the electric railroad tracks are submerged with gutter water, the cars leaving a wake like a steamboat as they pass through it. Getting on and off cars the passengers feel the need of rubber boots.

—No police cases were in the City Court this morning.

O. W. O. Hardman, sheriff of Tyler Co., W. Va., appreciates a good thing and does not hesitate to say so. He was almost prostrated with a cold when he procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He says: "It gave me prompt relief. I find it to be an invaluable remedy for coughs and colds." For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

HOME FOR HOMELESS.

Noble Work of the Woman's Temperance Aid.

EFFORTS TO BROADEN THE WORK.

President Mrs. Opdyke Reviews the Splendid Career of the Society and Points Out Future Needs.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS: Recent letters in The Daily Press relative to opening the game and reading rooms in Reform Hall indicate a renewed local need, so that a statement of recent results may interest the people.

Last Summer, when it became evident that the doors of the building we had helped to buy and keep open for ten years were likely to close, our Aid Society faced a serious problem.

Those that have labored with us know that we have proved an aid in many homes during seasons of trial and discouragement. We have done what we could always, quietly and patiently, confident that the time must come when temperance work would quicken and revive. We have kept our credit unimpaired, by prompt payment of our moderate bills, while we have carefully avoided soliciting from the public for our current expenses, although we have received occasional small donations from personal friends for some special need. Our annual dues are thirty cents, and from the regular collections at the meetings we had thirty odd dollars in the hands of the treasurer when the Fall opened. It needed both faith and courage to meet a new venture of such magnitude with our slim resources, but after deliberate and full conference, we agreed to take the entire building for one year from Nov. 1, at a moderate rental. The club are to have their regular meetings free of any expense whatever. We are to make all repairs, provide heat, light and janitor, besides supplying a new steam boiler to supply the old one now lying upside down in the boiler pit.

We have paid six months rent in advance, although it was not stipulated or required, and the entire building has had a thorough cleaning. The dressing room has had two coats of white paint, the stairs stained. Neat scrim curtains have been made and hung at doors and windows.

Locks and catches have been added Rusty stovepipes have been replaced, and one new stove bought. Double doors have been made and placed in the formerly narrow entrance to the boiler room so that the wornout boiler can sometime be removed, just as soon as we see our way clear to pay for it in full and not one moment sooner. We find that stoves are both comfortable and economical this season.

Two new steel gutters have been put up, and the roof, chimneys and leaders have been repaired or replaced. Windows and plank walks have been renewed, and other details have received necessary attention.

Our meetings have grown in numbers and interests. Visits have been paid the sick, while our own households have not been neglected.

Our bills are all paid in full up to date, and like the cruse of oil we still have $15 in the bank while we have not solicited one cent from the people towards these heavy repairs.

How has it been done? By renting the halls, upper and lower, helping each other and keeping our powder dry. Some mason work was generously donated and rebates have been made on some bills for spot cash. Our members and friends have worked as they always do work, patiently and efficiently, without friction or discord, and our ten years experience counts over against a small deposit.

Mr. Rockfellow, our janitor, as well as members of his family, have rendered every assistance possible to help us through our endeavor and we appreciate their unselfish interest, without which it would not have been possible to achieve such satisfactory results.

We shall be glad to show our vouchers to any who desire to see the record on our books, and we feel very grateful to God for this latest proof of His unfailing care.

Now a few words in relation to the future. Many cannot afford the expense of membership in societies, while they need a warm, cheerful place of assembly beyond all doubt. Not long ago a friend returning from prayer meeting counted 72 young men enter a Front street saloon from Music Hall after one act only, then he passed on with a heavy heart. We feel that the building belongs to the people without regard to race, creed, color or condition. We believe that free lectures and musicals should be provided for the enjoyment of young and old at intervals throughout the Winter, and we propose to co-operate with all our religious and temperance societies whenever they desire our aid. We believe that the many generous citizens who donated towards the purchase of our fine property never expected to have it sustained through its own rental, which at best is fluctuating, uncertain, and must tend to direct injury of the work for which the building was dedicated, not to mention added wear and tear.

We can provide music and serve hot beverages, replace the ten-year-old games, and meet the extra expense just as far as our money holds out.

A few lamps would give a homelike glow. Many have papers and periodicals that could be used on our tables and afterwards sent to the prisons, life-saving stations or as otherwise directed by the donors. Our faith and our zeal were never stronger than they are today, and at the same time, while anxious to win the young from the allurements of the fatal saloon, we cannot broaden this work alone nor run into debt.

We have met the situation as sensibly as we knew how, and we are ready to act with and for our people as far and as fully as we have the strength, ability and power.

If our ministers and people think well of this plan will they advise us how and where we can develop and broader this most vital work.

MRS GEORGE F. OPDYKE,
President Woman's Temperance Aid Society.
210 West Eighth St., Feb. 20, 1895.

A MINE OF KNOWLEDGE.

Plainfield Supplying the County with the Latest Points on Law.

The office of Honeyman & Company on North avenue has been a busy place for a few days because of the publication of the third annual volume of the American Corporation Legal Manual This volume was begun in 1893 and was an issue of 717 pages. This year it is an immense volume of 1230 pages, bound in law sheep, and contains a mine of information concerning corporation law and collateral matters.

An examination of the work shows that almost 800 pages are taken up solely with a digest of the corporation laws of every State in the Union; about 60 pages with a synopsis of laws of other countries, including such faraway ones as Egypt, Siam, Japan, Hawaiian Islands, etc.; 80 pages of corporation forms; 100 pages are on the patent laws of the United States and foreign countries; nearly 50 pages are on the trade-mark and copyright laws of the world; over 40 pages give the street railway laws of the different States; and there is an article on receivers of insolvent corporations, etc.

Thousands of legal cases are cited in the volume. The book is handsomely printed on elegant paper and, all in all, it makes one of the most handsome volumes ever sent forth from a publishing house in this section.

An inspection of the list of advance subscribers to the work shows that almost every copy of the large edition has been sold prior to the date of publication, and they represent every State and Territory in the Union. Besides this, copies have been subscribed for and are being sent to Austro-Hungary, Belgium, England, France, Germany, Ireland and Scotland.

The actual amount of labor connected with getting out the work at the home-office is said to have occupied five months, and the number of different writers employed has been eighty-four.

New Officers for the Year.

The annual meeting of the Plainfield branch of the New Jersey Building Loan and Investment Company was held last night, and the following directors were unanimously elected for the ensuing year:

Messrs John D Runyon, Francis S Runyon, L B Woolston, J D Spicer, W R Codington, J A Hubbard, T S Davis, W W Coriell, W H Sebring, H B Rider, A L Force, and H O Newman.

A Society With High Ideals.

The Bear End Debating Club, having for its object the elevation of passing itinerants to a conception of the day, held a very interesting session in their quarters on North avenue last night. The theme considered was "Is". The logic and convincing argument expounded by Col. Williams made the meeting one of practical benefit to its members. Tonight the subject will be: "Is the dictionary right or wrong?"

Trenton a Mecca Now-a-Days.

The Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, held a brigade meeting at the Trenton House in Trenton yesterday, at which the following Plainfielders were present: Lieutenant Morgan Turton; Second Lieutenant Jacob Bilmm, Jr. Sir Knight Louis J. Combs. The organization decided to have their field day at Phillipsburg on the first Monday in September.

Bible Study by W. D. Murray.

Thursday afternoon at 4:30 W. D. Murray will deliver in the Assembly Hall of the Y. M. C. A. Building the same talk on Bible study that he made at the convention Saturday afternoon. The subject is "Study of the Bible as literature"; illustrated by the song of songs. The meeting will be open to woman and the Parks sisters will assist in furnishing music.

—John T. Meeker the popular tea man from Newark has severed his connection with the former employer and in the future will be identified with the Grand Union Tea Co., of Newark, branch store in this city, 138 West Front street.

THE LIBRARY GETS IT.

Schoonmaker Collection to Stay as Public Property.

COUNSELOR C. A. MARSH WINS AGAIN.

The Prerogative Court Decides as He Claimed in the Dispute Over the Cloisonne Portion of the Job Male Estate.

Craig A. Marsh appeared before the Prerogative Court in Trenton yesterday in reference to the matter of the Schoonmaker collection of Japanese pottery and cloisonne ware being turned over to the Public Library in accordance with expressed desire of the deceased owner, Job Male.

The delay of the Public Library in receiving the collection was occasioned by several half-blood relatives of Mr. Male interposing a claim as heirs, to a share of the collection, the personal estate having been exhausted in liquidating his indebtedness.

The administrators, Messrs. Pope and Harrison, were notified by the counsel of these heirs, not to turn the collection over to the library, and they awaited the decision of the Perogative Court.

Yesterday the administrators furnished an accounting of the estate, which was approved by the Court. This virtually abrogates any claim on the collection, and today the Public Library officers were notified that the collection was at their disposal.

Mr. Marsh is entitled to high credit for the successful manner in which he conducted the case for the administrators.

HOMES OF ALL NATIONS.

The World's Tribes Visit America in the Seventh-Day Baptist Church.

The sociable of the Mission Band of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church was held yesterday afternoon at 4. A very pleasing programme, "Homes of Other Nations", was provided by Miss Mineola Tomlinson, ably assisted by Miss Evelyn Lewis.

The first selection on the programme was a piano duet, ably rendered by Miss Violet Truell and Miss Evelyn Lewis. Next there was a series of tableaux showing the different modes of homelife in other nations.

Esquimaux life was first, represented by Misses Bessie Randolph, Violet Truell, May Ross and Clara Scriven, who were dressed in robes and grouped in and about the door of a small hut.

China was well represented by Misses Mattie Maitland, Nellie Miller and Grace VanSickle, who were seated at a tea party.

Holland was a scene of industry. Miss Ruth Maxson, Miss Ethel Titsworth, Jitpha Williams and Miss Bessie Randolph were represented as being at a dairy.

Misses Effie Randolph, Mertie Randolph and Louise VanSickle represented Mexico. Miss May Ross beautifully rendered a piano solo.

Arabia and India were represented by Misses Kizzie Nagle, Edith Titsworth, Mertie Randolph, Bessie Randolph, May Ross and Effie Randolph.

The next tableau represented all the different nations as having come to America and joined hands with her. Miss Violet Truell represented Liberty, and in the scene sang "My Country 'Tis of Thee". This ended the programme, and tea and lemonade were served to the guests by those who had taken part. The table was under the supervision of Mrs. J. G. Miller.

There was a large attendance, and all expressed themselves much pleased.

Handsome and Cheap.

They say that "handsome is as handsome does", but if you had that dining room papered with Love's handsome wall paper you would think that handsome does a great deal. It will make your home cleaner and brighter, and you happier. Besides, the paper is cheap. Call at the corner of North and Watchung avenues, and see for yourself.

Successful Musicians.

The Park sisters—Anna, Georgia and Ada—who are furnishing such pleasing music at the Y. M. C. A. meetings every night this week, have traveled far and wide, and are well-known throughout the country as having aided materially in making many of the great revivals successful. They are able to play an accompaniment to every Gospel hymn without the notes.

Coming Camera Club Events.

The Camera Club expects to hold a special meeting in a few nights, at which a set of interchangeable slides from the Delaware Camera Club of Wilmington will be displayed. On Saturday evening the club will illustrate the lecture of Rev. T. Logan Murphy on "Ireland" in Holy Cross Church.

—At a meeting of Iona Council, Degree of Pocohontas, last night, the Entertainment Committee made their final report. Two candidates were adopted into the council.

PLEASANT AND PROFITABLE.

Monroe Avenue Chapel Increases Its Finances by a Sociable Event.

The apron and bag sale and supper given by the Ladies Aid Society of the Monroe Avenue Chapel last night was successful in providing a pleasant evening for those in attendance and in increasing the finances of the society.

The chapel had been cleared of its seats and in one end were the apron, bag and candy tables, and in the other the refreshment tables.

Mrs. Stephen Haff and Mrs. W. C. Burt had charge of the apron, bag and fancy work sale, and wonderfully persuasive saleswomen they were. These articles were there in every conceivable form that deft fingers could arrange, and it was not long before the stock had been disposed of at lucrative prices.

The candy table was in charge of Mrs. F. Wenzel and Mrs. Arthur Pierson, and their smiling countenances brought many purchasers for the toothsome confections.

Mrs. I P. LaRue and Miss Emily Haff looked after the supper table, and were assisted in serving refreshments by the following: Mrs. U. Brouard, Mrs. H. Frayley, Misses Lida Ackerman, Kittie Ackerman, Ida Stafford, Emma McDonald and Daisy Brouard.

About 100 were present, and the society will net considerable money from the affair.

On March 6 we shall begin publication of a detective story by Nym Crinkle, entitled

"EIGHT MINUTES TO THREE".

A. C. Wheeler, who uses this pseudonym, is one of the best known journalists in the United States. He has been for many years the dramatic critic of the New York World, and is today one of the most brilliant writers on the American press. It is to his inimitable sketches of New York life that the Sunday World owes a considerable part of its popularity. Mr. Wheeler has written many successful stories, of which the best known is perhaps "The Great Laran Rebellion".

"Eight Minutes of Three" is in every way a remarkable piece of fiction, and deserves to rank with some of the weird tales of Poe. It will run five days, and will be followed by a short story of New England life by Mary E. Wilkins.

This story, like all the Daily Press serials, is brand-new, and copyrighted to Daily Press use.

Decided Not to Do It.

PLAINFIELD HIGH SCHOOL,
February 20, 9:30 a. m.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—With regard to the article which appeared in your issue of the 19th respecting the Kappa Delta Phi, the only Greek Letter Society of the High School.

At a special meeting of the said society I was instructed to inform you that the Kappa Delta Phi denies all thought or knowledge of such a course of action.

Yours respectfully,
C. C. GALLUP,

Cause of Mrs. Soreen's Death.

The postmortem examination on the remains of Mrs. Harriett Soreen, whose death occurred very suddenly Monday afternoon, was made yesterday afternoon at 4, by Drs. Probasco, Murray and Ard at her late home on the corner of West Second street and Grant avenue. The decision arrived at by the physicians was that death ensued from concealed hemorrhage.

Frankforts Cause Trouble.

The case of Greiger against Endress, in tort, is on trial before Justice Newcorn this afternoon. The plaintiff is suing for $200 for the loss of two fingers severed in a sausage-cutting machine, while engaged at work in the meat market of the defendant January 3, which confined him in the hospital for one month.

Rescue and Slum Work.

Adjutant Edith Marshall, who is the head of the Auxiliary Department of the Salvation Army, will speak this evening in the lecture room of the First Presbyterian Church on the rescue and slum work of the Army. All are cordially invited.

—The Woman's Temperance Aid Society will hold a business meeting in Reform Hall tomorrow afternoon at 3.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

DON'T KILL MY MAMMA

Little Innocents Watch the Deadly Razor's Work.

An Italian Cuts His Wife's Throat Until She Is Almost Decapitated. The Hard Working Woman the Sole Support of the Family—The Brute Wanted Money for Whiskey.

New York, Feb. 20.—Following close after the Sparling murder in Hoboken, another worthless husband murdered his hard working wife yesterday in exactly the same manner, nearly severing her head from her body with a newly sharpened razor. In this case, however, the murderer was caught redhanded by the police and is now locked up in the Tombs.

Vincenzo Nino, an Italian barber who lives in the dirty back tenement at No. 55 Baxter street, is the murderer. The fellow was married about ten years ago to Marie Morelli, who like him, came originally from Potenza, Italy. The couple have two children—a boy and a girl. Nino is a particularly lazy and shiftless man, who has never done any work when there was any possibility of avoidng it.

A Hard Working Woman.

The poor wife, in order to keep herself, her children and her worthless husband in the squalid apartments they occupied, had to toil about the streets with a bag and hook picking rags industriously from ash cans and refuse barrels.

Not satisfied with forcing his wife to this drudgery, Nino would beat her whenever he was sober enough to hold a cudgel in his hand. The neighbors, who are used to all sorts of noises, frequently had to complain of the terrific uproar which often proceeded from Nino's rooms.

Early yesterday morning the couple began quarreling fiercely, but the neighbors paid no attention until they heard the little girl Anetta scream. "Oh, papa, please don't kill my mamma!"

Neighbors Alarmed.

Mrs. Keveney, who lives directly beneath them, ran upstairs at this, and pushing open the door saw Nino covered with blood and his wife lying on the floor with her throat slashed from ear to ear. Mrs. Keveney screamed, and in a moment the landing was crowded with the tenants of the building. They heard Mrs. Keveney's story, and howling with rage, beat in the barber's door. The Italian crouched terrified in a corner of the room as the crowd, cursing and shouting, rushed at him. The two frightened children were crying bitterly over the body of their butchered mother in the other corner.

Fortunately for Nino, Policeman Fitzpatrick entered at this moment. If he had been a little later the barber would have been torn to pieces by the infuriated crowd.

A Cursing Mob.

As it was it was with great difficulty that they were prevented from using violence to him, and a scowling cursing mob followed the officer to the Elizabeth street station. At the station Nino said that he had killed his wife because she had a lover who had offered her $10,000 if she would kill her husband and go back to Italy with him. The neighbors say that there is no foundation for such an accusation.

The murderer was taken to the Tombs police court, where he told Justice Voorhis that God had told him to kill his wife, and he had obeyed the order. He was remanded until to-morrow. The two little children were put in charge of the Gerry society.

POISONED BY HIS WIFE.

Mrs. Healy, of Whitman, Mass., Indicted for Attempted Murder.

Whitman, Mass., Feb. 20.—Mrs. Alice J. Healy has been indicted for attempted murder of her husband, Aaron A. Healy.

Healy is one of the leading business men of this place. His health failed and physicians became convinced that he was being poisoned. He took up his residence at a hotel and recovered.

Colliery Still Burning.

Pottsville, Pa., Feb. 20.—The fire in West Bear Ridge colliery where the explosion occurred, is still burning, though there are no fears of its spreading or doing any great amount of damage. A manway is being driven and water is still being poured on the place where the fire is supposed to be located. Anthony Meyers, one of the victims, who was reported dead is still living. He and three others are at the Miners' hospital, and while their injuries are serious, are not considered fatal.

Frightful Accident.

Hartford, Conn., Feb. 20.—Thomas Singleton, 33 years old, was killed on the New York & New England tracks at the Avon street crossing last night. He was struck by an engine that was being sent to East Hartford. One of his legs was found twenty feet from the body and the other was found ten feet away. His brother Michael, was killed on a surface car in New York, on Jan. 25, being pulled over the dashboard by the horses he was driving.

Shot in His Cab.

New Albany, Miss., Feb. 20.—As the south-bound passenger train on the Illinois Central was starting out from the depot at Pontoc yesterday, Irwin Wilson ran up with a double barrel shot gun and shot Engineer W. H. Milliner, who fell out of the cab of his engine dead. Business differences brought on the tragedy.

1,800 Men To Resume Work.

Joliet, Ill., Feb. 20.—After a shutdown of two months the local works of the Illinois Steel company, employing 1,800 men will resume operations next Monday. The dispute as to wages has been settled.

They May Yet Hang.

St. Louis, Feb. 20.—Gov. Stone yesterday wired a respite to Heinze and Kaiser, the murderers of Stockman Edwin Brown, who were condemned to hang Friday next. The respite expires March 7.

GENTRY IN THE TOILS.

A Fractured Skull, Broken Rib and Many Stab Wounds.

Philadelphia, Feb. 20.—James B. Gentry, the actor who shot Miss Margaret Winifred Drysdale (Madge Yorke) in a room at Zeisse's hotel, this city, on Sunday night last, was arrested here this morning at Thirty-third street and Columbia avenue.

When arrested the fugitive murderer had a fractured skull, a fractured rib which penetrated the covering of the lung, and three small stab wounds over his heart, where he had cut himself with a small penknife in an effort to commit suicide.

He was at once hurried to the German hospital and the doctors at that institution consider his condition serious. He was evidently a sick man before he committed the murder and the exhaustion and exposure since then has weakened him greatly.

He is unable to talk with any degree of coherency at present, but stated to the doctors that he received his wounds by jumping out of a back window of the hotel, and not from a fire escape as was before reported.

In attempting suicide with the penknife he had opened his shirt and cut himself deliberately, as his shirt was found to contain no rent or tear which the knife would make.

PENNSYLVANIA'S ELECTION.

The Contest Bitter, But Republicans Gain the Victory in Many Towns.

Philadelphia, Feb. 20.—This city still continues to hold its reputation for stalwart republicanism, and elected candidates of the republican party by a majority of 45,000 odd. Seldom in the history of local politics has a campaign been so fiercely fought, as the one just closed.

In Carlisle, the contest was for city council; the new body will stand nine democrats to three republicans. At Westchester, the election passed off quietly, the "straight republican ticket" being elected. The town of Erie, held their election which was confined to the council and school board; here also the republicans had a large majority on both sides.

The tables were turned however at Corry, wherein Dr. R. N. Seaver (dem.) was elected by a large majority over R. P. Dawson (rep.) Four democrats and three republicans were elected, but the election, however, will not change the complexion of the council, which is republican.

York, Reading, Lebanon, Pittsburg and Scranton elected the republican candidates.

CABINET HASTILY SUMMONED.

Claimed That the Meeting Had Reference to the Situation in the East.

London, Feb. 20.—The Standard this morning says in reference to the hasty summoning of the cabinet yesterday that it understands the meeting had special reference to the situation in the far east.

There is much gossip in political circles owing to the fact that Lord Rosebery, the prime minister, upon his arrival at the official residence in Downing street hastily summoned a meeting by sending messengers in cabs to the residences of the ministers—an unusual proceeding.

The precarious condition of the party, as shown by the recent narrow majorities on various questions in the house of commons, and the fact that Lord Rosebery had a long conference at Buckingham palace Monday afternoon with the queen, soon after her arrival from the Isle of Wight, and had a long conference with the whips of the liberal party yesterday, all served to increase rumors that a dissolution of parliament was imminent.

CHARGED WITH MURDER.

Escaped from Chicago, He Is Found by the Police in a Coal Cellar.

New York, Feb. 20.—Canio Branico, age 17, of Chicago, was arrested in this city yesterday on a charge of having murdered Dominick Buonnanna, of that city, on Sept. 13, by shooting him. Branico and his victim quarrelled while skylarking.

After the shooting Branico fled and was not seen or heard of until his capture here. He was found working in a coal cellar. He was committed for thirty days to await the action of the Chicago authorities, who have been notified.

Poisoned by Devilled Crabs.

Columbus, Ga., Feb. 20.—Last evening the entire family of Charles Hanby were prostrated with severe pains and the physicians were summoned, who after an examination, announced that the parties had been poisoned from eating of canned devilled crabs. They were in great agony for several hours but after hard work by the doctors, were relieved and considered out of danger. The crabs were partially decomposed.

No Regard for the Sabbath Day.

Albany, Feb. 20.—Assemblyman Hoffman yesterday introduced a bill amending section 265 of the penal code by adding the following: "It shall hereafter be lawful in cities having a population of 800,000 or more for any person or persons (excepting minors under the age of 16 years) to bowl ten-pins, play a game or games known as fifteen-ball or billiards on the first day of the week."

Wire Cut His Throat.

Maspeth, L. I., Feb. 20.—While the trolley car in charge of Motorman Wm. Radcliffe, on Maspeth division of the Brooklyn city road, was going at full speed last night it ran into a strong barbed wire at the Fresh Pond road. The barbs caught Radcliffe in his throat, tearing a long gash and throwing him against the door with force enough to inflict a severe scalp wound.

Oil Explosion in Pittsburg.

Pittsburg, Feb. 20.—An explosion of benzine and linseed oil at the Iron City foundry on Twenty-third street caused a fire that destroyed the works. William Schutz, a painter, was fatally burned and John Bolage, a workman, was seriously hurt. The loss was $30,000; covered by insurance.

Wants Queues Cut Off.

Olympia, Wash., Feb. 20.—Mr. Campbell has introduced a bill in the senate making it unlawful for any male person to wear a queue. The penalty is a fine of $100 to $500. The object of the bill is to drive out the Chinese.

HIS HORRIBLE DEATH

Terrible Accident to an Employe at Lister's Mills.

A Youth's Apron Caught in an Unprotected Shafting—Neck Broken, Skull Fractured and Bones Protruded Through His Flesh—Sole Support of a Deserted Mother.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 20.—Nothing could have been more horrible than the death of 14-year-old Michael Cavanagh, who was literally dashed to pieces in Lister's Agricultural works, on Lister avenue, yesterday afternoon. The youngster, who resided with his mother at 145 Bowery street, had been employed about the works for some time. Yesterday afternoon he went on an errand to one of the unfrequented rooms near the top of the building, where the shafting runs about two feet from the floor.

The Belt Unprotected.

At one place there is about two feet of the belt unprotected, and over it is a passage way for the use of the employes. Young Cavanagh started to cross this place, it is thought, and it cost him his life. Many of the boys about the place wear canvas-bag aprons, and Cavanagh's apron was a long one. In some way it must have become caught in the shafting and before the lad could tear it away the rapidly-moving machine had curled it up securely. The next moment the lad was whirled from his feet, flung around through the air and then brought down on the floor with a crash.

Every bone in his body must have been broken, but the shafting went rapidly on its course and again and again the lad was hurled through the air to be smashed against the flooring with each revolution. No one was in the room when the boy entered and so it is not known how many times he was hurled against the floor.

A Sickening Sight.

The noise, however, attracted some of the workingmen below and they discovered the lad's form flying through the air. Some one stopped the machinery, while others rushed to the boy's relief, but he was past all help.

Horrible was the sight that greeted the frightened men. The youngster's neck was broken, his skull was fractured in several places and the bones in the body protruded from the flesh in half a dozen different places. All about the shafting were signs of the boy's frightful death. The apron had become securely fastened in the shafting and the strong cords with which the boy tied it to his body would not give way.

Strong Men Trembled.

Word was sent to Lieutenant Prout at the Third precinct police station, and Captain Daly at once hurried to the place in the patrol wagon with Policeman Walsh. Nothing could be done by the captain, however, except to quiet the trembling men and try to get some explanation of the lad's death. Having satisfied himself that it was an accident the captain notified the county physician, and the boy's mutilated remains were removed to a near-by undertaking establishment.

The boy was well spoken of by all his fellow-workingmen. He was steady and industrious and was the sole support of his mother, who was deserted by her husband some time ago.

VIGILANT'S TROPHY HERE.

Came on the Servia to George Gould. Must Pass the Customs.

New York, Feb. 20.—The cup that the Yankee racer Vigilant won on July 24 last at the regatta of the Royal Cork Yacht club, arrived yesterday on the steamer Servia, from Liverpool and Queenstown. It was won from the Prince of Wales yacht Britannia over a course with nine turns, and the Vigilant's margin was two minutes and twenty-two seconds.

Before it reaches the hands of its consigner, Mr. George Gould, it will have to take the regular course through the customs. It is valued at one hundred guineas.

Any "Blow Holes" in This?

Bethlehem, Pa., Feb. 20.—At the proving grounds of the Bethlehem Iron company yesterday an armor-plate was tested, resulting in the acceptance of seven hundred tons of harveyized turrets for the battleships Indiana and Massachusetts. Commodore Sampson, of the navy, pronounced the test the best he ever witnessed. The plate resisted a 500-pound projectile with a velocity of 1,940 feet per second fired from a 10-inch gun.

"Over-Production" the Cause.

Pittsburg, Feb. 20.—Eighty coal operators having large interests in the coal production of the Pittsburg district assembled in this city yesterday. The opening session was spent in speech making and developed a practical unanimity of sentiment that overproduction was the principal cause of all their difficulties.

London, Feb. 20.—An agent for Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt bought yesterday at an auction sale of jewelry in this city, a pearl necklace, consisting of thirty-nine pearls, with a diamond clasp weighing 621 grains. The price paid was £2,900.

A GHASTLY DISEASE.

Different Doctors Give It Different Names.

The Result Always the Same.—Speedy Death.—Until Recently, Considered Hopeless.—Now, New Methods. Salvation.

Nothing is more alarming than diseases of an ulcerous nature. A continual gnawing away of life-generating tissue, until a vital spot is reached, an artery is severed, or from sheer weakness death ensues.

Especially in Gastritis—ulcers of the stomach—is terrible suffering experienced. The symptoms, though not at first alarming (seemingly a slight attack of indigestion), gradually become worse, so that no nourishment can be retained on the stomach, and unless the troublecausing ulcer produces death by perforation, the patient

Dies of Starvation.

In Consumption, where the ulcers attack the lungs, the termination is very similar, as it is, in fact, in any of the wasting diseases to which are given various names, according to the organs affected.

By the methods of physicians of to-day thousands of lives are being saved in cases that a few years ago were considered hopeless. The first step now taken to effect a cure is to make new blood and tissue, give the patient strength, and keep him "on the gain" by administering Bovinine.

Bovinine is not a medicine, but a greatly concentrated extract of the most vital elements of lean raw beef. The life-maintaining qualities of this wonderful preparation are simply marvellous. Dr. A. M. Cook, of New Castle, Pa., states that he maintained life in his wife, while suffering from gastric ulcers, for three weeks without giving her anything through the mouth, injecting Bovinine instead.

With such results as this, it is not to be wondered at that Bovinine is indorsed by physicians everywhere, and has become recognized as the greatest factor in saving life, hastening recovery from sickness, and warding off disease, ever given to man.

ASK THEM Why?

Ask the men who are making imitations of COTTOLENE, the new vegetable shortening, why they give up lard and try to trade on the merits of COTTOLENE? Perhaps you can guess why.

ASK HIM Why?

Ask the grocer who attempts substitution, why he tries to sell an imitation when people call for that pure, palatable and popular vegetable shortening, COTTOLENE? Perhaps you can guess.

ASK YOURSELF Why?

Why should not YOU use COTTOLENE, instead of lard or any other compound, for all cooking purposes? It has the highest possible endorsement; from Physicians as to healthfulness; from Cooking Experts as to superiority; from housekeepers as to economy. Use COTTOLENE and stick to it.

DEFENDED CLEVELAND

Mr. Vilas Says the President Did His Best.

To Buy Gold by the Issue of Bonds the Only Way Out of the Financial Difficulty—Nearing the End of the Fifty-third Congress—Measures Under Consideration.

Washington, Feb. 20.—Including today there remains ten working days for the 53d congress to dispose of the business before it, and almost all this time will be required to pass the general appropriation bills. But two of these bills have received the president's approval—the military academy and the army.

The diplomatic and consular, District of Columbia, pension, post-office, and fortifications bills have passed both houses and are in the hands of conference committees. The agricultural appropriation bill has also passed both houses and will probably be sent to conference to-day. The Indian appropriation bill and the sundry civil bill have passed the house and are on the senate calendar, while the executive, legislative and judicial bill has been disposed of by the house and is receiving the consideration of the senate appropriation committee. The naval appropriation bill is now before the house, with the probability that it will receive final action there to-day. The last of the general appropriation bills—the general deficiency—has not yet been reported to the house.

The senate has yet to act on five of these bills, which will give an average of a little over two days to each bill. Notwithstanding the limited time there is very slight reason to believe that any of them will fail for this cause as they are as far advanced as usual at this period of short sessions.

Congress Declined To Act.

Senator Vilas (dem., Wis.) made a long, able and eloquent speech in the senate yesterday in defense of the president of the United States and his secretary of the treasury in the matter of the sale of sixty-two millions of 4 per cent. bonds for gold. The speech was made on the bill before the senate for the coinage of silver, but had no reference whatever to that bill. Mr. Vilas showed that the president had endeavored to get congress to act upon the financial difficulties in which the treasury had found itself by the drainage of gold; and that as congress had declined to act, he had to avail himself of the power which the existing laws gave him, and to buy gold by the issue of bonds. The price obtained for the bonds, Mr. Vilas contended, was the highest that could be obtained under the circumstances; or in other words, 3¾ per cent. was the lowest rate of interest at which the bonds would be taken by the great banking houses which had been applied to.

In Gold Coin Only.

Three and five-eighths per cent. had been offered in all the great money centres and had been refused; and all because the bonds did not provide specifically for repayment in gold coin.

"The people of the United States," Mr. Vilas declared, in concluding his speech, "love their honor, as they prize their liberty; and their sober judgment never has tolerated and never will tolerate the national reproach of the least equivocation in dealing with its creditors. That gentleman never lived, however high-bred, honorable and chivalrous, whose sense of honor was keener, higher, or more sensitive than the public opinion of the free men of America."

Mr. Vilas spoke for nearly four hours, and commanded close attention all through his speech. When he took his seat Mr. Squire (rep., Wash.) sent to the clerk's desk and had read the act of June 25, 1878, expressly declaring that all United States bonds payable in coin should be paid in gold or silver coin at the option of the government.

That act, he said, was a full and complete answer to the entire argument of the senator from Wisconsin.

A conference report on the bill as to the time when income tax returns are to be made was presented and explained by Mr. Vest and agreed to.

Nobody Believed in It.

The debate on the silver bill was continued by Mr. Platt (rep., Conn.), who said that he should not enter into the "controversy over the wounded body of our national credit." He should not inquire who was responsible for the wounds inflicted on the national credit. He only desired to make some remarks on the pending bill. He regarded it as an indefensible measure, and did not believe that it met the approval of any senator who earnestly desired the use of silver in the currency of the country. Nobody believed in it. It was not a practical measure.

Mr. Platt yielded, at 6:15 p. m., to a motion by Mr. Aldrich (rep., R. I.) to adjourn. The motion was defeated—Yeas 15; nays 32.

Mr. Frye (rep., Me.) asked Mr. Jones whether, in view of the vote just taken—showing that there was barely a quorum present—he intended to try and keep senators in session all night.

Mr. Jones said that he would be glad to have a vote on the bill, and hoped to have a vote on it to-day.

A BRUTE IN HUMAN FORM.

Disturbed in His Slumbers, in a Rage, He Shoots at Three Women.

Shamokin, Pa., Feb. 20.—In a fit of rage yesterday because his rest was disturbed, John Lucas shot and seriously wounded Mr. Mary Zarambo and attempted to shoot Mrs. Michael Kalin and Mrs. Annie Bartaskie. Lucas boarded with Mrs. Kalin and a party of men who were discussing the probable outcome of yesterday's election kept him awake most of the night. When he came down stairs in the morning he complained to Mrs. Kalin about it and told her that he wished the house to be kept quiet that he might obtain some rest.

Later Mrs. Zarambo and Mrs. Bartaskie called on Mrs. Kalin and the three women started talking in the dining room where Lucas was. He suddenly jumped up in a rage, and drawing a revolver cried out that he was going to kill Mrs. Kalin. The woman dropped on her knees and started to crawl under the table. Mrs Zarambo started to follow her, when Lucas fired and the bullet struck the woman in the left breast, inflicting a bad wound.

Mrs. Bartaskie also took refuge under the table and Lucas fired two more shots at the three crouching women, neither of which took effect and he then ran from the house. Later in the day he was arrested. He claimed that he was so angry that he did not know what he was doing at the time he did the shooting.

NO 12-HOUR DAY FOR THEM.

Five Hundred Mill Operatives Strike Against an Unjust Demand.

Galveston, Tex., Feb. 20.—The Galveston cotton mill operatives, nearly 500 strong, went out on strike yesterday on account of a request from the management of the mills to work an extra hour each day which would place their working time at twelve hours per day. This, the operatives declared, was too long for the women and children to work and they concluded to strike.

The extra hour was asked for by the management on account of the mills being shut down three days last week during the severe cold weather. The operatives were requested to work the extra hour daily for one week only to make up the time lost last week. The operatives claim, that if they worked the extra hour asked they would be expected to hereafter work a twelve hour day. This they refuse to do, hence the strike.

IT WILL BE A TUG-OF-WAR.

Electrical Contractors Will Not Recede from Their Agreement.

New York, Feb. 20.—A meeting of the Electrical Contractors' association was held yesterday at which a proposition of the strikers, which stated, in substance, that the wiremen were willing to return to work at once if the eight-hour working day were conceded on and after April 1, the other questions to be left for arbitration afterward, was submitted.

Discussion of the proposition, which lasted some time, resulted in the bosses adopting a resolution not to recede from the position taken by them on Monday. The offer then made to the men conceded the eight-hour day after May 15.

FREIGHT TRAIN DITCHED.

The Conductor Lay Under the Wreck Nearly Ten Hours.

Dayton, O., Feb. 20.—A bad freight wreck occurred on the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Indiana railroad at Lebanon Junction last night. Seven cars were thrown into a ditch and burned. Conductor Charles Hurless of Dayton went with the wreckage into the ditch. He lay pinioned and partly submerged in water for nearly ten hours. While the work of rescue was in progress the wreck caught fire and the flames were burning fiercely about the imprisoned conductor at the moment of his rescue.

A Stiletto in Her Breast.

New York, Feb. 20.—Carlo Calomica, an Italian hod carrier, who lives on the third floor of a miserable tenement house at 307 East 104th street, stabbed his wife Filomena five times in the breast and side with a stiletto last night, inflicting wounds from which she may not recover. Calomica had been on a debauch for a week or more and finding all his money gone demanded some from his wife. She refused to give him any of her savings, a violent quarrel ensued and this was followed by the stabbing. Calomica made his escape and up to a late hour had not been arrested

Jealousy in This Home.

Haddonfield, N. J., Feb. 20.—In a fit of jealously William H. Still shot and dangerously wounded his wife Lavinia at their home here. He fired four shots, one taking effect in the head and one in the arm. The shooting occurred in the wife's bedroom in the presence of their children. Still then went to the house of Harry Gray, but Gray had been warned and could not be found. It is alleged that Gray and the woman had been intimate. Still escaped.

Eighty-two Cases of Smallpox.

St. Louis, Feb. 20.—At noon yesterday there were seventy-two cases of smallpox reported at quarantine. Ten new cases were reported last evening and it is thought this number will be greatly increased when full returns are received. Notwithstanding the health authorities are making great efforts to combat the spread of the disease, it is feared that it will become epidemic.

For Life Behind the Bars.

Oroville, Cal., Feb. 20.—Thomas Durant, the highwayman who robbed the stage near here Saturday, was captured and sentenced to life imprisonment yesterday.

THE JAPANESE FLEET

Adding to Her Mercantile Marine Service.

China Awakens to the Frauds Perpetrated upon Her—Foreign Journalists Clutch at Straws—General von Hanneken Now a Drill Sergeant—A Body Guard of 6,500 Men.

Tokio, Feb. 20.—Since the outbreak of the war Japan has added to her mercantile marine thirty-two steamers, their total tonnage (burden) being 31,554 tons. It is a fleet in itself, and it means that several new tradal routes will be opened when the restoration of peace puts an end to the military transport service now occupying so many vessels. The new steamers vary in size from 542 tons to exactly ten times that figure. Their average size, as will be seen, is 2,548 tons. Japan has not been obliged to pay big prices for these vessels. She has acquired them at reasonable figures.

Army Contracts in Japan.

Japan is gradually ascending the gamut of experience familiar to European nations in these times of commercial smartness. Her contractors are taking advantage of the opportunity offered by large orders implemented under circumstances precluding accurate inspection. The troops have found that bales supposed to be distended with rice reached their destination in a very limp condition; that jars of soy seemed to have lost a moiety of their contents en route, and that cases of canned meat contained a liberal packing of stones. It does not appear that such frauds have been on a large scale, but the vernacular press is loud in its denunciations, and the military store officials themselves are charged with winking at the dishonesty. Per Contha, a story is told of an official to whom the representative of a syndicate of merchants tendered a sum of 300 yen by way of bespeaking favorable consideration for tenders about to be presented. The official informed his subordinates of the incident, and then, when the merchants themselves waited on him to present their tenders, he threw the bundle of notes out of the window, pretending to be disgusted at the paltriness of the sum.

China's Latest Awakening.

Struggling to manufacture bricks of progressive promise out of the dust of Chinese conservatism, it has for years been the habit of foreign journalists in the east to clutch at every straw likely to facilitate their painful labor. Captain von Hanneken has proved to be a straw of unusual dimensions. A man possessing military experience, high courage, and a splendid physique, he had long been in the service of China when the war broke out. He had organized her forces, planned her fortresses—Port Arthur conspicuously—and superintended her squadrons. At the outset he seemed likely to become the hero of the situation. Jumping into the sea from the sinking Kowshing, he saved his life by stout swimming, and in the great naval battle of September 17 he played a fine part. It seemed as though a second Chinese Gordon was about to step upon the stage. Then came a circumstantial story that Hanneken—now promoted to the rank of general—had been commissioned to procure an unlimited number of German officers to serve as vertebras for the Chinese armies; that he was authorized to raise and organize forces independently of all control except that of the throne, and that the emperor had summoned him to Pekin, in order to receive from his lips a true statement of the belligerent situation, his majesty openly confessing inability to trust the accounts of Chinese generals and officials. All these stories produced a profound impression. At last there seemed to be sound reason to conclude that China's eyes were opening, and that the true nature of occidental civilization was beginning to be appreciated by her. Journalistic articles of the most sanguine character were penned, and the dawn of a new era was editorially announced. But when Port Arthur fell, and when it was seen that General von Hanneken had not found leisure or inclination to personally direct the defense of the fortifications planned by himself and supposed to be invulnerable, people began to wonder, and the latest news has augmented their surprise. For it now appears that General von Hanneken's great mission has dwindled to the functions of a drill sergeant. Assisted by sixty-four foreign officers he is engaged drilling a picked body of 6,500 Chinese officers and men at Tien-Tsin, the ablest of his pupils being intended for service with various corps in the fighting line, but the ultimate purpose of the 6,500 being to furnish a body-guard for the Viceroy Li himself. It is not China, then, but the Viceroy Li that General von Hanneken is to save, and as for the great awakening, well, it is postponed.

Method of Recovering a Fortress.

China's ostrich-like faculty of self-deception compels admiration by its magnitude. Chinchow, in the Liaotung peninsula, fell into Japanese possession in the beginning of November. Yet the Chinese government steadily persists in the farce of appointing officer after officer to be commandant of the place. Six weeks ago, a certain Manchu was named brigadier-general of Chinchow, but as the recapture of the town from the Japanese would have been an essential preliminary to entering upon office, and as the Manchu didn't quite see his way to that, he set himself to discover in his own body ailments incapacitating him for the honor. Malady upon malady was piteously described in memorial after memorial, till at last the emperor, exasperated by this sequence of sufferings, degraded the invalid and handed him over to the board of punishments for treatment. Another luckless wight, named To Sheng-a—the terminal of whose name is interjectionally suited to the occasion—has now been appointed to the same post, and will probably find his way to the board of punishments instead of to Chinchow.

is a virtuous vice. The world is better for it. It makes men ambitious—and it makes women careful of their personal appearance. It doesn't take much money to keep well-dressed now-a-days. To Get Swords and Belts.

The regular meeting of John Hand Camp, No. 28, S. of V., was held last evening. The attendance was large, and the session interesting.

Arrangements were made to secure swords and belts for the officers, and First Sergeant H. J. Martin will report at the next meeting.

The matter of incorporating the camp was brought up and the members voted to become so. Steps have already been taken in the matter and the articles were signed today.

Arms are expected by the next meeting at which time it is expected there will be two or three new members mustered.

Victor Lorton was installed principal musician, having been appointed two weeks ago by the captain.

VILLAGE OF HAMILTON BURNED.

Damage Estimated at $4,00,000.

Utica, N. Y., Feb. 20.—The business portion of the village of Hamilton, the seat of the Colgate University, was almost entirely destroyed by fire last night.

About thirty places of business have been burned, and the fire was raging at midnight. The fire started at 9 in the Woodruff Block. From there it spread west, taking the undertaking establishment of Ramlands & Beab, then crossed the street, destroying Tripp's Opera House. Fifteen stores were consumed on Utica street.

It is thought that the loss will aggregate $400,000.

The Tragedy of Sin.

The subject to be discussed tonight in Grace Church is one of very great interest. Dr. Barrett will speak of sin and its consequences. This will naturally introduce the subject of future punishment and hell, and will bring up the question, "How can a benevolent and loving God, damn men?"

Large congregations are attending the mission. The singing is done by a large mixed choir and is very hearty. Last night the sermon was on the incarnation. Christ was described as the mind of God incarnated or revealed, just as a painting is an incarnation of the artist's soul, or the temple of the architect's mind, or as a poem incarnates the thoughts and feelings of the poet.

The entirely unique and divine character of Jesus was proved by a number of different arguments. The main argument was Christ's self-consciousness, His consciousness that He was the "Word" or revealer of God. He said "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father". Service tonight at 8. All welcome.

Wonderful Realism.

Every atom of scenery used in the production of "She Couldn't Marry Three," is specially built for the play. There are over three tons of it; it is worth going miles to see. One of the most notable scenes in the play is a picture of the Cornish Coast, with practical revolving light house and moonlight on the ocean; also the view of Carboy's Abbey with crumbling walls and clinging ivy, a scene so beautiful as to baffle description. In the last act of the play is shown an exact representation of Dingley Tunnel, one of the most stupendous and natural railroad scenes ever produced.

Every one of these novel effects is guaranteed by Manager Hassenforder, and will be seen here in the production of "She Couldn't Marry Three."

Going To Trenton.

Captain W. C. Dobbins, and Delegates H. S. Thatcher and H. C. McVoy from John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, will go to Trenton tonight to attend the Annual Division Encampment.

First Sergeant H. J. Martin and Second Lieutenant C. F. Stephens will go tomorrow morning.

There will be a camp fire this evening in Bayard Post Hall, the place of meeting, at which time Commander-in-chief Bundy of Cincinnati and staff will be present, also Division Commander G. W. Pollitt and staff.

The encampment promises to be very interesting.

$100 Reward $100.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

NO OFFICE FOR HIRAM BROWN.

There Were Some Necessary Preliminaries Not Expected.

He was a polite negro, with a large eye expressive of a natural flow of language, and a face as black as a raven's wing. He wanted to see Congressman John Allen, of Mississippi, and sent in his card at the west lobby door. In due course of time the member came out. He cast a piercing look at the sender of the card, who approached him with an obsequious bow, holding his hat in his hand.

"Sah," said the colored man, with a bland smile, "I is one yah constituents. Brown is my name—Hiram Brown, sah."

"Ah," said the Congressman, bowing stiffly, "what can I do for you?"

"Well, sah," said the darkey, "I wants to git a Government position, sah, if yah will kindly lend me yah valyable absistance, and I come all de way to Washington to see yah about it, sah."

"Oh, indeed. Under the civil service or what?"

"I doan't kyah, sah, whether it's under the sahvice or not, just so I get a good and reliable appointment, sah; where I can support myself wid becomin' dignity."

"Do you know anything about physiology, meteorology, conchology, or biology? Can you go back to the paleozoic age and demonstrate in technical terminology the anthropology, fauna or zoology of that epoch? Can you dissect the pterodactyl or the ichthyosaurus or prepare a scientific repast of one of the pachyderms of the glacial period? Can you reconstruct for the edification of a profound professor of buggology the bibacious saurians that were seen by early navigators in the dim dawn of the brazen age?"

The darkey stepped two paces to the rear and stared.

"I say, can you do these things off hand on cross examination, without drawing a breath or stopping to think?" continued Allen. "If not, go back to your district and pray for the return of another era of Democratic sovereignty, with a President pledged to the repeal of the civil service act."

Hiram had been listening with open mouthed astonishment, and a look that settled into an expression of deep awe. The sweat broke upon his ebony countenance. He slowly pulled a red bandanna from his coattail pocket and wiped his reeking brow as the Congressman paused.

"I—I guess, sah," he stammered, with an embarrassed smile creeping back into his face, "I guess, sah, dem queshuns is specially intended foh young cullud pussons dat hat got dar edycashun in a college. I was bawn too soon."

And he walked away with a profound salaam, showing his respect for superior learning, while Allen resumed his Congressional labor with a stern look of duty.—Chicago Record.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,

Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. E. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

TODAY IN HISTORY.

Short Stories of Heroism from Real Life.

Fought Like Tigers.

Feb. 20 is the anniversary of the battle of Olustee (1864), the severest engagement of the war on the soil of Florida. General Truman Seymour landed about 7,000 men at Jacksonville to bolster up a loyal uprising with bayonets. General Finnegan, the Confederate commander, gathered forces to the number of 5,500 near Lake City to oppose the Union march inland. The lines came to sword's point about 3 p.m. in an open pine forest. Seymour's artillery began a rapid fire to confuse the enemy. Then his whole line of three brigades advanced wedgelike to the attack. A white regiment in the lead broke on tasting the enemy's steady fire. A colored regiment ordered to replace it also broke. Then the brigade of W. B. Barton moved up at double quick, the Forty-eighth, Forty-seventh and One Hundred and Fifteenth New York, abreast, charging the enemy's center. General Barton had been colonel of the Forty-eighth, a regiment known as Perry's Saints. Finding the Union batteries affected by the infantry panic, he halted the line in front of them and for more than two hours held the ranks steadfast under a double cross and direct fire from the enemy's guns and rifles. In this terrible struggle the Confederates exhausted their ammunition first, and unable to return the Union fire began to steal away to search for cartridges. But Finnegan's staff officers, couriers and orderlies had formed a mounted brigade to ply between the ammunition train and the field, bringing up supplies, and in order to hold the men where they were young A. H. Colquitt, son and aid to the general commanding the center, rode along the front of his father's troops, swinging a battleflag and appealing to the men to stand. His gallantry challenged the admiration of his enemies. Barton's men also emptied their boxes, but retired to refill them and went in again. Contemporary accounts declared that the New York "brigade fought like tigers." When the Confederates made the last rush to give their baffled foe the coup de grace, the New Yorkers parried the blow, giving their comrades time to withdraw. The colonels of the three regiments fell, and over 800 rank and file were killed and wounded.

GENERAL BARTON.

A Triangular Fight at Sea.

Feb. 20, 1815, was the date of one of "Old Ironsides'" most noted battles. She had just escaped from the port of Boston, where a British squadron had kept her under blockade over eight months, and was "spoiling" for action. While sailing from the Azores to Madeira about noon on the 20th she sighted two vessels—the corvet Cyane, of 22 guns, and the sloop Levant, of 20. They were ten miles apart at first, the Levant in the wake, but seeing the Constitution in chase the latter made haste to join her consort. Captain Charles Stewart was new to the deck of the gallant old ship, but ship and commander were well matched. Crowding on all sail until the royal main mast snapped off under the load, Stewart gave chase. Owing to the accident to the mast, he did not come up to the Britons until evening, and then the two had united. The Constitution ranged alongside the Cyane and fired a broadside into her at 200 yards. The Briton of course replied, but the Constitution forged ahead after the Levant. It was give and take with these two until they were completely buried in smoke, and this gave the Cyane a chance to crawl up under the Constitution's quarter. Stewart instantly tackled the new enemy, giving the Levant a parting broadside. Skillfully avoiding a rake from the Cyane, he backed until he brought her abeam, then silenced her with a tremendous cannonade. The Levant meanwhile bore down to help her consort. Seeing this, Stewart filled out, and running for her gave her two stern rakes before she could wear to get into position. Wearing himself, he maneuvered under cover of the smoke until he brought his ship astern of the Cyane. Raking her as he had her consort, he compelled her to strike and hastened after the Levant, which had hauled off to repair, but was returning to the combat. The two met on opposite tacks and exchanged broadsides. A few volleys were enough for the Briton, and she tried to escape, but the Constitution kept at her heels and brought her to with her bow guns.

Methodist Women Arrange a Delightful Bazar.

Pretty decorations, charming costumes and bright faces all contributed to make the bazar and supper in Vincent Chapel last evening a success. The walls and gallery were artistically draped in American flags, and each table was a perfect harmony of color.

The chocolate table was the first to the left on entering, and there in one of the smaller classrooms the pale light from the candelabra shone on a most artistic arrangement of china and silver. Pale green and white were the prevailing colors in the decorations. Here dainty cups of chocolate were served to the many customers by Mrs J R Joy, Miss Harriet French, Mrs. James Hallock and Miss Minnie French.

The next table in order was the fancy table on which were a variety of dainty articles large and small, the uses of many of which are only known to the gentler sex. Mrs C C Cokefair was chairman of the committee in charge of this table. She was assisted by Mrs Geo D Rogers, Mrs Geo B Cornwell, Mrs O L Jenkins, Mrs Samuel Clark and Mrs Hervey Doane.

Stationery was for sale at the next table and attracted many to buy by its artistic arrangements. The numerous customers at this table were waited upon by Mrs J N McNaughton, Miss Ida Angleman, Miss M Cory, Miss Gertrude Trenham, Miss Stackhouse, Miss Fulmer and Miss J. Schafer.

At the right of the entrance was the lemonade booth where draughts of that cooling beverage were passed out to the crowd of thirsty young people who surrounded it. This booth was under the direction of Miss Mattie Humble, the Misses Langer, Miss Fanny Chandler and Miss Etta Raybert.

In the centre of the room was the candy booth, prettily draped in the National colors, while dishes of choice home-made candies tempted the palates of the passersby. The good things attracted many, but the charming faces inside the booth made the nnmber much greater and induced many to invest their change in the goodly display of the candies. Miss Louise Pangborn was the efficient chairman of the committee in charge and her assistants were Misses Elsie Horne, Barnes, Madge Barnes, Sadie Douglass, Elizabeth Cornwell, Florence Smith, Smith, Chandler and Mrs. Charles Lyman.

In the smaller class rooms at the back and side, tables were arranged and here was served the supper. Quite a number enjoyed the good things provided, and later in the evening the tables were again crowded with the lovers of the delicacies.

Mrs. L. M. French was in charge of this department and very successful were the results of her labors. She was ably assisted by Mrs D E Davis, Mrs I W Pangborn, Mrs Homan, Mrs G Q Packer, Mrs C H Rugg, Mrs J C Peck, Miss Sharp, Mrs N Y Hull, Mrs N W Pike, Mrs S Baker, Mrs Bond, and Miss Laura Mulford. The waitresses were Miss May Mulford, Miss Alice Jenkins, Miss Eva Jenkins, Miss Anna Stafford, Miss Edna French, Miss Lillian Thorn and Miss Cora Shepherd.

The committee, under whose charge the sale was conducted, consisted of Mrs. L. M. French, chairman, Mrs. C. C. Cokefair, and Mrs. O. L Jenkins.

They certainly deserve a great deal of credit for the successful manner in which everything was arranged, not one mistake or accident spoiling the evening.

Robert Douglass collected tickets at the door.

During the evening there were piano solos by Miss Maude French, Mrs. Charles Lyman, and Miss Louise Pangborn.

Although there was a fair attendance last evening, it is hoped that it will be greatly increased tonight; there will be several selections rendered by Conde's orchestra, and a number of other special features.

—The Bank's New Move.

The officials of the First National Bank are contemplating removing temporarily to the building now occupied by the postoffice, during the remodeling of their own building. A ten-days refusal has been secured from A. Vanderbeek, who has charge of the renting, with the privilege of leasing it for one year. If the deal is consummated the whole lower floor will be remodeled.

Aftermath of the Blizzard.

A number of Street Commissioner Meeker's men were engaged yesterday and this morning in removing the snow from the gutters along Park avenue, in order to afford better drainage of water from the steeet.

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. CRANKS IN CONGRESS.

LEGISLATORS WHOSE FAME HAS BEEN THEIR PECULIARITIES.

In the House, Sibley, Johnson, Clark, English and Pence Claim Distinction. Some Freaks in the Senate Which Are of Little Use Except as Such.

Congressional cranks have of course varied with the development of Congressional history and the growth of the nation generally. Just as the people of the country have increased and have taken on various sociological distinctions, so have their representatives in Congress reflected these differences.

The names of Holman, Bland, Blair, Hatch, Stewart, Peffer, Watson and Simpson easily recall long chapters of unusual legislative history. Mr. Holman, with his ever present economy and the glaring inconsistency with which he exercises it, has furnished theme for many a ludicrous story. Of almost equal standing, so far as years go, is Mr. Bland's persistent and unconquerable allegiance to the "dollar of the daddies," freshly sworn upon every conceivable occasion. Ex-Senator and now Representative Blair, of New Hampshire, has probably an incomparable history when one looks for extreme and impossible attempts at legislation. His climax bill, which has for its object the decoursing of the Mississippi river and an attempt to make it run up hill, has probably never been equalled in wild congressional schemes.

Another example of a man with a hobby ridden into ridicule is Representative Hatch, of Missouri, with his anti-option advocacy. The original advent in Congress of the Populists created much food for freakish descriptions. Tom Watson, of Georgia, and Jerry Simpson, of Kansas, in the first flush of their notoriety, were probably more talked of and were made the objects of more curiosity than any congressman of recent years. But with Watson now at home and Simpson settled into such serious representation that he is commonly regarded as one of the soundest legislators on the floor, there is little left to be told of notable Populists in the House.

In the Senate there is another Bland, only he has additional crank attraction. This is Senator Stewart, of Nevada, who talks of nothing but silver, and who talks forever; who has no idea aside from it by day, and has gold bug nightmare when he dreams by night.

Probably the only other senatorial crank whose fame extends beyond the Fifty-third Congress is Senator Peffer, of Kansas. He is undoubtedly the best example of the species in either house. His crazy activity never ceases. It seems to be the result of the utmost sincerity, and in nowise kin to the demagoguey which is the moving spirit in so many notorious Capitol histories.

Mr. Sibley, of Pennsylvania, is a prototype of the most recent crank development in Congress. He is of the millionaire species. Heretofore crazy lawmakers have been for the most part men who never make a dollar, but who were convinced that they were able to be national financiers. Now there comes upon the scene men like the Pennsylvanian, who are rich beyond necessity, and make a show of assaulting all money and capital in the interest of the masses.

Mr. Sibley's nearest brother in Uncle Sam's musuem on Capitpl Hill is Representative Johnson, of Ohio. Mr. Johnson attracts attention to all he does. He is a little more than five feet tall and seems nearly three feet broad. In summer he adorns his expansive figure in spotless white flannels with white shoes. Not content with thus seeming an animated flour sack, he adds to his interesting accomplishments by riding a bicycle. He makes a better speech than his colleague in crankdom, and fills it with epigrams and such radical advocacies that he is sure of attention from both sides of the House.

The next best development in the Fifty-third Congress has been Champ Clark, of Missouri. Mr. Clark has not as much money as either Sibley or Johnson, but has more brains. His has been a varied career. He has been a school teacher, farm hand, country store clerk, country newspaper editor, country lawyer, city attorney, prosecuting attorney, college president, State legislator, Presidential elector and member of Congress. Always known at home as the Pike county genius, he first burst into national notoriety at a Fourth of July meeting in 1893. Here he made one of those wonderful speeches of his which Johnson and Sibley both imitate but cannot equal, and which always attract a full house of amused listeners.

Colonel Breckinridge daily bears himself with the most jaunty innocence, without even a semblance of injury, seeming wholly unconscious of anything unusual in the situation, and without a wrinkle in his face or a tremble in his voice or a halting in his step to betray his recent experience.

Representative English, of New Jersey, as not unknown before he became a ember of the Fifty-third body of national legislators. But recent events have tended to place him in the front list of those representatives who become famous for other things than legislative ability and political leadership. Chief of these has been the wonderful popularity achieved by the novel "Trilby," and the old song "Ben Bolt." It was known before that Mr. English wrote the song, but the song itself had been almost forgotten. Since then it has been sung in every household and its author celebrated in columns and columns of newspaper matter.

Upon the very first day of speechmaking in the special session, a smooth faced young man, with a shrill, high voice, an apt tongue and noble eloquence, addressed the House in opposition to the Repeal bill, and in favor of free silver. He distinctly made a sensation. The inquiry was made on every hand as to who he was and from whence he came. He proved to be Lafe Pence, a Populist, from Colorado, whose election was the result of the general political disaffection in Colorado, which followed the national convention of 1893. Pence soon became the speaking leader of the House Populists. In fact, he spoke too often and did as so many young members have done, failed to fulfill general expectation. Small, wiry, as sharp of feature as of voice, he seems a very boy, although he is nearly forty years old. He is intensely active, after the manner of the hustling West, and is said to be, above all things, a money maker.

No Doubt.

EDUCATION UP TO DATE.

We teach the children Danish,
Trigonometry and Spanish;
Fill their heads with old-time notions,
And the secrets of the oceans;
And the cuneiform inscriptions,
From the land of the Egyptians;
Learn the date of every battle;
Know the habits of the cattle;
Know the date of every crowning;
Read the poetry of Browning;
Make them show a preference
For each musty branch of science;
Tell the acreage of Sweden,
And the serpent's wiles at Eden;
And the other things we teach 'em
Make a mountain so immense
That we have not a moment left
To teach them Common Sense.

NAPOLEON ON HORSEBACK.

A Professional View of the Great Corsican as a Rider.

It was one of Napoleon's aphorisms that the most suitable palace for a French monarch was his tent; his most proper throne a war horse. And so it has come about that in the Napoleonic legend the famous "white horse" seems as necessary as the three-cornered hat and gray coat of "Marengo" to complete the picturesque little figure of the great emperor.

The white horse is familiar enough to all who have seen Meissonier's pictures, and has evidently been painted by the great artist with as much solicitude of detail and affectionate care as are employed in depicting its imperial master himself. The type of charger, then, that so often reappears is that of a three-quarter bred, light, but muscular animal, white or gray in color, with a considerable dash of Arab blood, as seen in the long neck, high crest and easy, springy gait. The horse, though spirited, is remarkably docile, and has entirely put aside the mere vanities of a showy and restive parade charger. Like its owner, it gives the impression of calm power and reserved force. This placid temperament was not the effect of any superior command in the horsemanship of Napoleon—for he had neither a good seat nor good hands—but simply by the result of the most careful previous preparation of the horses designed for his use. They were drilled to stand immobile by the hour, in the midst of the most fearful tumult, noise and excitement—for it would not have been easy for Napoleon to survey the battleground through his field glasses on the back of a champing, pawing and caracoling animal—and yet the horse must have a lively step in walking and a swift gallop on the moment of need. In the glimpses one obtains of Napoleon during the progress of a battle he seems either to be immobile or statuesque, or galloping recklessly at headlong pace.

With respect to his seat in the saddle it is worth while to consider the matter in detail. Napoleon himself used to take pleasure in describing the astonishment of the Mamelukes, after the battle of the Pyramids, when they beheld that this bold and irresistible conqueror was a little man, who rode like a butcher. Yet, to begin with, some reservation must be made as to the popular notion of Napoleon's exiguity of figure. At the time of the Egyptian campaign, and also, of course, at Lodi, where he gained the title of "Le Petit Caporal," he was slight and extremely thin; but considering that on his deathbed his physician found his measurement to be 5 feet 6 1-2 inches, he could hardly be very deficient in stature. In the prime of life he must have been appreciably taller, and, with his square shoulders, broad chest, and commanding bearing, looked, no doubt, extremely well on horseback. This is the more easy to believe when it is known that the shortness of his figure was due entirely to the lack of proportion of his lower limbs. His torso was that of a fairly tall man.

The Chinese do everything backward; they exactly reverse the usual order of civilization.

Note first that the Chinese compass points to the south instead of the north.

Advice to My Boy.

"What's that you say, my boy? The teacher says you are as sharp as a needle.

Well, probably she meant to compliment you, my boy—I have no doubt she did—but remember that needles go into things with their eyes closed. You don't want to be like that.

Now, there's the pin. The pin has a head, you will notice, which prevents it going in too far. Be like the pin, my boy. —Rockland Tribune.

Barbara Frietchie Would Rejoice.

The Colonel Henry Kyd Douglas, who is rumored to be engaged to Mrs. Nellie Grant Sartoris, is the Confederate soldier who took such umbrage at Whittier's "Barbara Frietchie" ballad. Barbara's adjuration to his fellow soldiers, "Spare your country's flag," seems to have stung this gallant but mistaken man with a bit of remorse. It would do Barbara Frietchie's soul good to know that he was going to marry General Grant's daughter. —Boston Transcript.

He Couldn't, Really.

Sam—Let me have a twenty for a week, can't you, old fellow?

Robert—Why don't you raise it on that diamond ring?

Sam—Well, you see, it was presented to me by my dead wife, and I wouldn't like to give it up.

Robert—Same here; my money was presented to me by my dead father, and I don't like to give it up, either.

THE CAUSE OF STRIKES.

The Insatiable Greed of Capital Which Resorts to Unjust Methods.

Supreme Court Justice William J. Gaynor, who discovered John Y. McKane and drove him to Sing Sing, has written a letter to the Board of Arbitration giving his idea of what caused the Brooklyn strike.

It was an answer to a request made by the State board, and it will be presented to the Legislature along with the report of the board. In the course of the letter the judge says that the cause of the srike lies in a state of disquiet and moral protest, not confined to the employees of the company, which was caused by recent speculative uses and manipulations which the companies have been subjected to by certain individuals who have come into control of them. He then discusses the Brooklyn City Railroad company. Until three years ago, he says, it had $2,000,000 in stocks and $3,000,000 in bonds and paid big dividends. Then its bonded indebtedness was increased to $6,000,000, and its capital stock to $12,000,000.

"It is true," says the judge, "that a change was made from horses to electricity at this time. Whether the cost was equal to the actual increase is a question for railroad builders."

The two steps after this, the judge says, are what accuse the public conscience. Those in control of the company leased it for 999 years to the Brooklyn Heights company, which they got control of. By the terms of the lease, the Heights company agreed to pay the interest on $6,000,000 in bonds and $10,000,000 in stock. It was to keep all the overplus.

"Thus this little company was made the absorber of all the earnings of the Brooklyn City company over and above what would have to be taken to pay the interest and dividends, but this did not satisfy those who had gone that far."

The judge tells next how the Long Island Traction company was organized in West Virginia, with a capital of $30,000,000. "I need hardly say this huge paper company had not a day's work or a dollar back of it. It did not own a steel rail, a stick of wood, or anything in the world. All that there was of it was on paper. It was not a railroad company, but a business, its very name being a falsehood. It was brought up to Brooklyn, and those who created it, and also owned and controlled the little Brooklyn Heights company, turned over to it the certificates of stock ($300,000) of the latter company, and thus, connected by these two links and the Brooklyn City company, this West Virginia company, with its paper capital of $30,000,000, became the absorber, through the little Brooklyn Heights company, of all the earnings of the Brooklyn City company over the interest on bonds and the 10 per cent. on stock."

The object of this, the judge goes on to say, was to absorb a surplus out of the Brooklyn City company large enough to pay a dividend on the $30,000,000 of paper stock of the West Virginia company, thereby to make that stock worth par and enrich the holders thereof out of the industry of others. To do this it was necessary to cut down expenses to the lowest point. The history of the Atlantic Avenue company, he says, is the same.

"Thus, with this just apprehension on the part of the employees, and the impulse on the other hand to cut every expense down, it was natural that even a small dispute should become a serious rupture. Nothing else could be reasonably expected from such feverish and unhealthy conditions."

Next the judge says that all the transactions were lawful; but he asks is the law always right in what it permits, and he answers that if it were so we would never need a change. A little later he says that the transactions are not singular to Brooklyn, and that in place of being checked by laws they are often fostered by laws.

"If this condition were to continue," he says, "what the end would be no one who has studied over causes and effects in history can fail to perceive with clear vision. The prime object of government is to promote distributive justice and thereby make the governed stable and content, and no government which does not do this may, in the nature of things, long endure."

The judge concludes by saying that the immediate dispute which led to the strike didn't deserve serious attention, and under healthy conditions the dispute should not have lasted a single hour, if it arose at all. "Until the cause is removed," he said, "it is idle to try to prevent the effects."

Keep the Church Open.

Bishop Vincent, in speak recently upon "The Church as a Social Institution," is reported to have said: "Our young people pass along our streets at night and behold the theaters, saloons, and many shops ablaze with light. They do not pause at the doors of our churches. And why? Because they are closed, cold and dreary looking. I tell you it is a great mistake. Let our churches be opened three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. Let there be no vacations. Then our young people will go to the churches, and not to other places."

Watches as Compasses.

The following useful bit of informatio is probably new to many:

All watches are compasses. In explanation: Point the hour hand to the sun, and the south is just half way between the hour and the figure XII on the watch. For instance, suppose that it is 4 o'clock. Point the hand indicating 4 to the sun, and II on the watch is exactly south. Suppose that it is 8 o'clock, point the hand indicating 8 to the sun, and the figure X on the watch is due south.

War Correspondents' Pledges.

It will be seen from the conditions all the newspaper correspondents have to sign before being allowed to accompany the Japanese army, published by the "Overland China Mail," that the war correspondent's life in the East is not a happy one. The correspondent must especially pay attention in writing the correspondences to the following: To limit the correspondences about the movements of the troops to things past and not to mention the matter concerning the future. Never to mention the place and time of sending out the letters. To give careful attention not to mention clearly the strength of the troops or the names of regiments, etc., of our army, in order to conceal our strength and the distribution of troops, etc.—London Globe.

FORTUNE IN A SONG.

A SUCCESSFUL AUTHOR WHO DON'T KNOW ONE NOTE FROM ANOTHER.

Three Million Copies of "After the Ball" Have Been Sold. Words and Music Written in an Hour When the Author Was in a State of Physical Collapse.

Mr. Charles K. Harris is a man who has earned popularity by writing a famous song. As the author of "After the Ball" he has made himself both famous and rich. And yet he is not a musician, doesn't know one note from another, and turns out entirely by ear the airs that later are sung up and down this broad land, and are printed by hundreds of thousands.

Mr. Harris was an obscure banjo teacher in Milwaukee. He had written several ballads, but none of them "caught on" until one morning in the spring of 1893 he awoke to find himself famous. Orders for "After the Ball" came from leading dealers in 5,000 lots, and he began to enjoy an income of over $1,000 a day.

His first songs were sold to publishers, but he decided to become his own publisher, and one of his songs, written before "After the Ball," and entitled "Kiss and Let's Make Up," netted him $8,000. Mr. Harris is about 30 years of age. He lives in Milwaukee in a sixteen-room house, built by him a year ago. He is married.

When asked by a correspondent about his method of composition, he replied: "There are weeks at a time when I do not touch a piano or think of composing. I play by ear only, and do not know a single note. My arranger, Mr. Joseph Clander, who is, in my estimation, one of the best arrangers in the country today, is the leader of the orchestra at Davidson's Theater. Whenever I have a song to take down I send for him. I play it off by ear to him, and he jots it down. Then he plays it over in the right key, and if there are any mistakes I correct them.

"I do not write vulgar songs. My songs are found in every home in the United States which has a piano or a parlor organ. I write for the people and my subjects are taken from life. I receive hundreds of letters daily from all classes of people, from bootblacks to society belles, who desire me to put music to their poems. I have tried it several times, but have always found it an utter impossibility.

"I write both words and music at the same time, and if you will pick up any of my songs you will find that the words and music harmonize closely. In composing a song a man must have musical ability, and must also be something of a poet."

"Will you tell how you came to write 'After the Ball?'"

"I attended a ball in Chicago given by one of the prominent clubs there, and stood talking to a handsome business man. I noticed that his eyes constantly followed a certain young lady in the ballroom. I found out subsequently that they had been engaged, but had parted through some lovers' quarrel. While he was dancing with other girls she would anxiously watch him. I knew by the expression of their faces that their hearts were aching.

"On my return home I was in my office completely tired out when a member of the Wheelmen's club came and asked me to compose a song for an entertainment to be given by the club. I told him I was too tired after the ball, but if he would leave me alone I could perhaps compose something for him in time for the entertainment. The words 'after the ball' kept ringing in my ears, and I could not rest. I sat down at the piano, and at that moment I had the entire idea, music, subject and all. In an hour the song was finished."—

LACE COLLARS AND ECONOMY.

One of Them Will Make a Simple Wardrobe Seem Elaborate.

Lace collars are no longer regarded as luxuries—they are considered economical investments. One lace collar, if ingeniously treated, is capable of varying the effect of half a dozen different waists.

Every woman knows that if the bodice of her gown appears like new her entire costume is stamped as such. Therefore, great is the value of a lace collar. It must be a large collar of some heavy lace like Russian thread, and should fall well over the corsage and form epaulettes over the sleeves.

When it is purchased it should be worn untrimmed over a dark waist and will give a stylish effect to the whole costume. On its next appearance it may be joined to a gay little stock of chiffon or velvet; again it may appear lined with any of the new shades of silk. This will give a charming touch of color to a black bodice. It may also be made effective by turning it with ribbons, as shown in the illustration, having the loops stand up high on the shoulders and the longest ends reaching below the waist line. These ribbons should appear to be fastened to the collar by small bunches of flowers. Imagine a cream white lace collar trimmed with heliotrope ribbons in this manner and fastened with dainty clusters of forget-me-nots. This collar crowned with a forget-me-not blue chiffon stock would be an addition to any costume.

After a lace collar has been treated in these various ways as a last resort it may have the design outlined in jets, gold threads or tiny colored beads. Then again it will appear like new and fulfill its economical mission.

It is the cynical Boston Transcript that says of a certain woman that she carries her age well because she has been doing it for a long time.

FORTUNES WON AND LOST.

Speculators Who Have Tried Their Luck in Wall Street.

Wall street is generally set down as a place where money is to be made easily and in large amounts. As a matter of fact, comparatively few men have made money there. Speculative ventures long continued are apt to show a loss. It may be that a profitable "turn" or two will be made in the stock market, but it is the exception rather than the rule that the account, at least of an "outsider," is closed with a gain for him.

To the name of the stock exchange broker attaches not a little glamor, and not without reason. He is supposed to be fairly rolling in wealth, and it is fair to say that the average broker really has his share of this world's goods. It is not, however, from speculation that he derives his income, but from commissions on orders which he executes for others—to a large extent, speaking in a general way, from the people who "pay the fiddler's" in the street.

A "turn in the market" is either a purchase and a subsequent sale, which is a deal on the "long side;" or a sale and a subsequent purchase to "cover," which is a deal on the "short side." If the transaction is in one hundred shares, the commission which the speculator has to pay the broker is $12.50 "each way," or $25 altogether. Whether the adventurer in stocks is successful or not, the broker is, of course, sure of his $25. That much is to be taken from the profit or added to the loss of the speculator.

There are men, undeniable, who have made great fortunes in speculation. Foremost of these at the present day is Addison Cammack, the "bear" leader. The short side, on which the bears operate, is supposed to be the most difficult one, and, indeed, it is. Mr. Cammack is a man of remarkable judgment and acumen.

James R. Keene is another example of speculative ability, yet he "went broke" six or eight years ago. His loss figured up the enormous sum of $13,000,000, and left him heavily in debt. He did not despair, but set to work to recoup his fortune. He has paid all his obligations and is once more worth, perhaps, $1,000,000. His forte seems to be in engineering "deals" in special stocks rather than in "playing" the market as a whole. Mr. Cammack, whose fortune is estimated at $10,000,000, "followed the market;" that is, he descries the natural tendency of values and risks his money accordingly. Naturally he makes mistakes at times, but he is quick to discern them and to correct them.

A figure in the street, both prominent and picturesque, is Deacon S. V. White, a pillar of Plymouth church, who has had had his ups and downs on an extensive scale. He has failed three or four times, but he is a man of indomitable will, and when he meets with a rebuff he promptly starts in again to replenish his bank account. It was only three or four years ago that he lost $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 in corn. His confreres in the street considered it an error for him to disgress from speculations in stocks, and so, apparently, it was. The Deacon quickly redirected his attention to stocks, and in cordage, sugar, whisky, Chicago gas and St. Paul, before many months rolled around, he had made enough to settle in full with every creditor. Nevertheless, misfortune again overtook him, and he was compelled to suspend payment within two years. He has since been slowly recovering his financial position and is again an extensive operator.

There are many men in the street who have not been so fortunate as Mr. Keene and Mr. White, but who cling to the speculative center on the theory that where you lose your money is the best place to look for it.

Samuel Mills, who was formerly one of the biggest brokers of the street, but encountered adversity, has made a manly struggle to get on his feet again, but the fates have been against him. He acted for Jay Gould when the latter was the ruling power in the street. The commissions he received from Mr. Gould were enormous. They amounted to hundreds of thousands of dollars annually. A difficulty arose between Mr. Gould and Mr. Mills which resulted in the severance of their relations.

Mr. Mills undertook deals in the market on his own hook, and it is said, whether true or not, that Mr. Gould used his tremendous power to defeat them. Be that as it may, Mr. Mills lost all he had, and was compelled to surrender his membership in the stock exchange. He is now a man of middle age, and it may be that it is not too late for him to come once more to the front in the street.

The Cheerful Idiot.

"Do you know," said the Cheerful Idiot "that it is the easiest thing in the world to tell whether a man is going out on a journey or returning by the way he carries his valise?"

"I never thought of that," said the youngest boarder. "What is the difference?"

The Cheerful Idiot settled himself a little firmer in his chair and gloated a moment before answering.

"It is just this way," he went on. "When a man is going away he carries his valise toward the railroad station, and when he is coming back he carries it in the other direction."—Indianapolis Journal.

A Mean Trick.

Patrick was one of those witty sons of the Celtic isle whose amusing sayings had entertained many transatlantic travelers.

One day, when the steamer was about leaving port, Patrick received the order to haul in a long cable that dragged astern. Patrick jumped to the task cheerfully enough, and hauled away contentedly. But the excessive length of the cable taxed his patience.

"I wonder what's become of the end of this ould cable, anyhow?" And finally, growing more impatient, he growled out: "Faith, it's no use hauling away at the baste uv a cable. Some divil's cut the end off uv it."—Harper's Magazine.

SOME OF THESE DAYS.

Some of these days all the skies will be brighter,
Some of these days all the burdens be lighter,
Hearts will be happier, souls will be whiter,
Some of these days.

Some of these days, in the deserts upspringing,
Fountains shall flash while the joybells are ringing,
And the world, with its sweetest of birds, shall go singing,
Some of these days.

Some of these days! Let us bear with our sorrow,
Faith in the future—its light we may borrow,
There will be joy in the golden to-morrow—
Some of these days.

CHAPTER IV.

Angela led the way along the passage and down the steep, narrow kitchen stair.

Already a considerable number of the revellers were refreshing themselves at the well-supplied buffet in the kitchen, and a little further on a successfully-imitated cavern's mouth yawned, showing a dim interior and a solemn, gray-bearded necromancer studying a huge volume.

"I am half afraid of him," exclaimed Angela.

"So am I!" said Forrester. "Are two cowards equal to one 'brave?'"

"No; I am sure they cannot be."

Here they entered the cavern, and the sage closed his book.

"Ask him," whispered Angela, giving him a little push.

"Let down the curtains, young man," said the graybeard, in a deep voice, "if you do not wish the secrets of your future to be heard by all!"

As Forrester obeyed the sage turned up a gas jet close to him, and let a strong light fall on his visitors, which the curtain, drawn across the entrance, hid from outsiders.

"You seek to know what coming years hide in their depths?"

"We do!" returned Forrester, with becoming solemnity.

"How will you have it?" asked the sage as if he were a bank clerk cashing a check. "By the hand or cards, or the magic crystal."

"By the hand," returned Angela, drawing off her right glove.

"I need both hands," said the old man, and proceeded to bend back the pretty white fingers of first one hand then the other, peering through his huge spectacles at the palm, muttering to himself.

"You have a project in your mind," he said aloud; "it engrosses you. Ha, it will not succeed! nevertheless, you'll have a fortunate life. It is not defeat so much as change, change of views, wishes, circumstances—you are much beloved, you have had a peaceful monotonous life—greater brilliancy awaits you, but there will be a moment of doubt—of danger—of—" he paused. "Here you must cross the seer's hand with silver, funds appropriated to charitable purposes," he continued in a totally changed voice.

"By all means," cried Forrester, putting a shilling into his outstretched hand. "I quite understand that a silver salve must clear the sight."

"You're right," returned the sage dryly.

"Pray continue your revelations, this lady is trembling for your words," said Forrester.

"Well then, a critical moment will come, when much will depend on your having the courage of your opinions, stick to your own ideas—and—and secure happiness."

"Now, sir," he continued. "How will you have it?"

"Cards! They have generally been on my side," said Forrester.

The seer rummaged in quite a mundane fashion in a drawer and produced a pack, or part of one, which he shuffled, and desired the inquirer to cut nine times. Then he spread them out in the ordinary fashion, shaking his head as he did so.

"Do you object to this lady hearing my revelations?"

"By no means! Pray sit down, Miss Cavallo. You will be tired." And Forrester hunted round till he unearthed a three-legged stool.

"You are in the flush of success, young man!" began the prophet. "It will not last. A severe reverse awaits you. You have an enemy—a cruel enemy!"

"Pray give me his name and address, that I may administer a cup of cold poison to him," said Forrester, smiling.

"This flippancy ill becomes an inquirer," said the seer, with a frown. "A great and sudden change is coming—nay, is close at hand! Let me see. This is strange. You are absolutely in touch with your foe. Can it be that so fair and gentle a creature could work evil to anyone? But the cards cannot lie! Avoid your present companion; close your eyes; avert your head; shut your ears to her voice. There, I can say no more, save this: Hold fast to honor and probity, and peace will bless your latter days!" He gathered up the cards, and bent his head in token of dismissal.

"Good evening," said Forrester, and drawing back the curtain he offered his arm to Miss Cavallo. "By Jove, I have caught it!" he exclaimed as they went into the refreshment room. "I begin to think I am the pluckiest fellow going to trust myself with so dangerous an enemy. As you are strong I hope you will be merciful. Pray what desperate deed are you contemplating?"

"I hope you do not think me capable of making a bad return for your friendliness," she replied with some seriousness, while the color rose in her cheek.

"Our prophetic friend at the end of the passage would say that however virtuous our intentions we are compelled to carry out our destiny," and Forrester continued to chaff and laugh about his fear of so formidable a foe, feeling more strongly attracted than ever by the slight embarrassment with which his companion parried his remarks, for it seemed to render her more vulnerable than usual.

The pounding on the floor overhead and the sounds of dance music showed that a livelier style of diversion was proceeding up stairs. "Nothing short of three consecutive waltzes can assure me of my safety," said Forrester, taking her plate. "Have some more jelly or something and then let us join the revels above."

"I think two will be enough!" She was beginning, when Mrs. Bartlett sailed up majestically. "Are you going to dance, Angela?" she asked.

"Yes! We are just going to the salon!"

"Very well, there is more room just now. Most of the people are down here." With a smile and a nod, she walked away.

"Angela!" repeated Forrester. "What a charming name! I suppose I need not fear an angel!"

"Remember, it was an angel barred the path to Paradise!" she returned, smiling.

"Yes, but an angel with a flaming sword! and you are incapable of handling such a weapon! Come, let us waltz while there's breathing space."

Forrester was an excellent partner, and Angela found that she had never before enjoyed a dance so much. Certainly her experiences were few—some school fetes and a rare "soiree dansante" now and then at the house of some school friend. There was a degree of frank familiarity in Forrester's manner which in no way diminished its respectfulness, yet which put her at her ease and won a certain amount of confidence. In the hour or two which ensued Forrester suggested many sight-seeing plans, and secured more than one rendezvous, subject to the approval of Mrs. Bartlett.

"I NEED BOTH HANDS," SAID THE OLD MAN.

It was a fine, soft night when Forrester strolled into Maida Vale to look for a hansom. He felt in a blissful state of harmony with himself and the world in general. He was deeply smitten with the sweet, sedate Angela, and yielded to the delicious intoxicating passion unresistingly. There he was free to indulge his fancies; where could he find a more charming companion to share his fortune and do credit to his house? True he knew little of her surroundings or belongings, but such a girl could not have been brought up save by refined and respectable people. That was enough for him. What a delightful occupation to teach her to love him. And she would want some teaching, perhaps a good deal! Still love lay sleeping in her eyes, and what a charming companion she would be, no empty chatterbox; speaking only when she had something to say, and then with a certain freshness and originality; a steady observant little woman who would help to keep him straight, and he was perfectly free to make all these perfections his own or to try to win them. What a splendid thing life was, to be sure, when a fellow had money. How fervently he hoped that old Selwyn was comfortably in Heaven as a reward for his admirable conduct in dying intestate.

Forrester's intimacy with Angela went on at a rapidly increasing ratio after this evening. They met frequently with and without the presence of Mrs. Bartlett, and to his joy Angela seemed ready enough to trust herself with him unchaperoned. He gradually gathered the facts of her simple life. Her mother was English, her father Italian and a courier. She was an only child, and having a good voice it had been carefully cultivated at great cost, her father considering this outlay an investment. She was in London to seek an engagement for concert singing and appeared much cast down by the great difficulty of finding one. She spoke with warm gratitude and affection of her parents and the sacrifices they had made for her, and regretted her mother's absence occasioned by a bad attack of gout from which her father was suffering, which detained his wife in Paris.

It had been a lovely warm May day and Forrester had presented himself almost immediately after breakfast driving a high phaeton with a fine pair of horses—a new purchase—for, in spite of his friendly lawyer's warnings, he could not keep his hand out of his pocket.

"It is such a delightful morning," he exclaimed as soon as he had shaken hands with Angela, that it's a sin not to take advantage of it! So I want you and Mrs. Bartlett to come down with me to Hampton court. You will never find a better day for it. The palace is not open on Fridays. So we will not have the usual crowd."

"It would be charming," exclaimed Angela. "I will go and ask Mrs. Bartlett, but I am afraid she cannot come."

"But that need not prevent you going? You don't mind coming without her?"

"No—I don't suppose I need mind!" and she went away, returning with her good-natured hostess, who deeply regretted that an important engagement at home obliged her to refuse.

In another quarter of an hour Forrester had the joy of driving off tete-a-tete with the quiet little girl who had bewitched him.

What a delightful expedition it was. A day to be remembered, a memory to throw its refreshing light over the more prosaic life. They wandered through the beautiful gardens, through the courts and cloisters of the old palace, along the river under the shade of the trees in the park. Angela was immensely pleased and interested; rather to Forrester's surprise, she knew a good deal more of the history of the place than he did, and when he told her so, she only said that music and reading had been her only occupations. Then they had a dainty luncheon at the Grayhound and drove back to Alma terrace in the cool of the evening.

Mrs. Bartlett was out when they reached home, so Forrester desired his groom to take the phaeton and horses back to the stable and came indoors to make his adieux.

A letter lay on the drawing-room addressed to Miss Cavallo, which she opened at once. Forrester watched her as she read it and saw that the contents distressed her. She slowly replaced it in its envelope, and raising her eyes, which looked suspiciously moist, exclaimed: "It is a great disappointment!"

"What is?" he asked.

"I fancied I was nearly sure of an engagement to sing at the Crystal Palace concerts, and now I find that I have lost the chance! I did hope for some success, to repay my dear father for all the sacrifices he has made! He had set his heart on my coming out in London."

"Why take it to heart!" cried Forrester, profoundly touched by the depression of her tone, and the expressive gesture with which the hand holding her letter fell to her side. "You are a woman formed for the refinements, the shelter of home, rather than the ruggedness of public life. Put the whole thing out of your head. There must be many men who would be proud and happy to give themselves and all they have to your service."

Angela laughed, her eyes sparkling, though the tears still bedewed them. "I am afraid that is rather a wild flight of fancy," she said in an amused tone. "Men are not so ready to take unnecessary burdens on themselves, and they are right."

"I don't think so, if they are equal to it; at any rate I know one who would desire nothing better than to lift all care and trouble from you, and make your life one long holiday." Forrester had got the bit between his teeth, for his heart had been tugging at the reins all day, and he could keep silent no longer, and goaded by her look of half-frightened astonishment rushed on.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

Appropriate Celebration by The Daily Press.

GEORGE Washington refused a crown and sceptre. Nevertheless he was Washington the First. "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." Washington stands unique in American history and his memory is an inspiration to the loftiest patriotism and purity. The annual recurrence of his birthday and the observances with which it is attended have an educational effect not only on the youth but on the mature citizens of our land. The study of history is always interesting and instructive; investigations of the career and character of Washington are especially profitable. Such investigations have been pursued with zeal and intelligence by The Daily Press.

The result is a collection in this issue of six columns of Washingtonia which will be perused with interest by readers of every class. There are many instructive sidelights on the character of Washington, the man, and entertaining pictures of the time in which he lived. Perhaps most valuable of all is the Washington chronology, which records in succinct style the vicissitudes and achievements of his life, from the cradle to the grave. The page is finely illustrated.

Union's Senator's Bill Next Monday.

Senator Voorhees has once more amended his elective judiciary bill so as to make it very similar to its original form, and the Senate adopted the amendment. The grouping of counties together in order to allow more munificent salaries for the judges in the smaller courts, though objected to by those counties, has been decided by the leaders to be the best scheme, and the bill will be pushed on that basis. The bill now allows salaries of $7,500 for the judges in Essex and Hudson, $5 500 in Passaic, $5,000 in Camden, $4,500 in Mercer, $4 000 each in Monmouth, Union, Bergen, Burlington, Morris and Middlesex; Atlantic and Ocean are made into one district, and the judge's salary at $3,000; Gloucester and Salem, $4 000; Cumberland and Cape May, $4,000; Hunterdon and Somerset, $4,000; Sussex and Warren, $4,000.

This bill and the bill abolishing all fees and compensation now paid to the judges of the Orphans' Courts were made a special order for next Monday night.

Senator Ross of Cape May objected to the amendments, and said the board of freeholders of his county had voted that they would be willing to pay a salary of $1,500 in order to have a judge of their own.

THE SAUSAGE CASE.

Jacob Geigher Gets $200 for the Loss of Two Fingers in Endress's Market.

The suit of Jacob Geigher against Frederick Endress before Justice Newcorn yesterday afternoon for $200 damages for the loss of two fingers in a sausage cutting machine, resulted in a verdict by the jury for the plaintiff for the full amount.

From the evidence adduced during the trial it was shown that the plaintiff had been in this country only a short time and was unable to speak English. That he was unacquainted with the methods of running a sausage machine, which is somewhat of a dangerous machine to work about. He commenced work December 22 and the accident occurred January 3, confining him in the hospital till Feburary 3.

The circumstances which surrounded and caused the accident, proved that Endress had given him instructions as to the work that ultimately caused the loss of two fingers.

The jurors were as follows: William H Rogers, Charles Gleantzer, Walter Leland, Charles Rice, Charles Johnson, Daniel Schenck, John VanFleet, James Alpaugh, Edward Wolf, Daniel Taynor, John Ammon, William Pangborn.

The plaintiff was represented by Harry C. Runyon, and the defendant by George W. DeMeza.

"Why? Says Gladys" is the odd title of a novelette by the distinguished English author, David Christie Murray, that heads the collection of attractive productions in the March number of "Tales from Town Topics." It is a beautifully written story of love and matrimonial infelicity, presented in dialogue form, and the author treats his theme with such gayety and eloquence that one cannot fail to be interested and amused. Gladys is a lovely American girl who marries a Reformed English rake, and, as it turns out, the rake proves to be the steadfast and true element of the partnership, whereas Gladys, in an absurd spell of emotionalism, brings disaster into her home. Mr. Murray is at his best in recounting the misadventures of this strangely assorted pair, and produces a very good philosophical arguments on the matrimony question as well as a captivating piece of romantic literature. The volume containing the novelette is crowded as usual with the bright array of stories, sketches, poems and colloquies culled from the back pages of Town Topics. A LADY OF FASHION is said to have a rope of diamonds—holes bored through them so that she can put 'em on a string like beads. This is a very poor way in which to treat gems. Yet purely from the romantic point of view,

"THE HOLLOW RUBY"

may possess brilliant and prismatic beauties such as are found in the story of that title which Julian Hawthorne has written and which is to be published in The Daily Press, beginning Saturday, Feb. 23.

It is, of course, a tale of Eastern life and is full of startling incident and humor. Hawthorne has surpassed himself in this novel story, and it has been fully and fittingly illustrated.

Like all the serials published in these columns, it is brand-new and copyrighted.

Splendid Body Development.

Since the gymnasium opened in the new Y. M. C. A. Building five weeks ago Physical Director MacPhie has examined 125 young men and 51 boys. Each examination takes twenty minutes. There is an average of 50 men on the floor every night in the early part of the week, and an average of 40 boys Tuesday afternoon and Saturday morning. As an example of the body development which the exercise affords is the case of a young man who has gained seven pounds with a month's training.

George Washington.

History informs us that you stood on that historical spot—Washington Rock—to witness the landing of the British troops off Staten Island. It would have been a surprise indeed to have informed you, as the ladies of Grace M. E. Church are now informing their many friends, that they purpose giving a tea Friday, Feb. 22, and would be pleased to have all their friends call and assist in adding another success to this already popular chapel. Tea will be served from 6 to 9.

The experience of Geo. A. Apgar, of German Valley, N. J., is well worth remembering. He was troubled with chronic diarrhoea and doctored for five months and was treated by four different doctors without benefit. He then began using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, of which one small bottle effected a complete cure. It is for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. ELIZABETH VICTORIOUS.

Tied for First Place by Beating the Park Club Bowlers.

The Park Clubhouse alley was the scene last night of an interesting, although not a particularly close bowling game between the club team and the Elizabeths. It was full of interest because of its being the last of the regular series between these two clubs of the Amateur Bowling Association, but from start to finish the men from Elizabeth outplayed their opponents. The best feature of the game was Davis of Elizabeth scoring 224 on the last frame.

The club team were badly handicapped by Dr. Thiers smashing a finger between two balls in the early part of the game. By winning this game Elizabeth ties the Oritani Field Club of Hackensack for first place in the league games.

ROBINS AS SNOW BIRDS.

The Harbingers of Spring Winter North When They Are Well Fed There.

A number of robins remained all Winter in and about Percy Ohl's farm. Grain and bread crumbs are scattered about, and shooting is prohibited. Mr. Ohl says that while it is the nature of the robin to go South during the Winter it is not on account of their inability to stand the cold. When the thermometer was nine degrees below zero, these socalled harbingers of Spring were particularly merry, picking food thrown upon the snow.

At the Rancocas game preserve, which was the most extensive private enterprise of this kind in the country, and of which Mr. Ohl had the entire supervision, many other birds which usually leave us when the cold weather sets in, remained quite willingly as long as food was plenty and in sight.

A PLAINFIELD GENIUS.

VanEps an Adept at Making Intricate Mechanism.

J. VanEps of Park avenue is entertaining his customers and friends nowadays with a vocal variety entertainment, which is sent forth from an Edison phonograph, and the best part of it is that all is local talent. Every day someone who has a delectable piece of "show business" does the talk act into the phonograph funnel, with the result that is soon after repeated to admiring friends. Mr. VanEps has now in course of construction a phonograph, every piece of which is of his own making, and when finished will be fully as perfect as those manufactured by the Wizard himself.

Generous Mr. Marsh.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—I am not entitled to the credit which you gave me yesterday of securing the Schoonmaker Collection for the Public Library. The suit between Mr. Schoonmaker and the estate of Job Male and the Library was settled out of court. The credit for bringing about that friendly settlement belongs to Charles A. Reed, the heirs of Job Male and the Directors of the Public Library. What I subsequently did in frustrating the attempts of certain of the next of kin of the half-blood to prevent the collection from being turned over to the Library, was too small a service to obscure the real credit due to others. Very respectfully,

CRAIG A. MARSH.

Only a Few Days More.

It will be necessary for hackmen, draymen and peddlers to make application at the Monday night meeting of the Common Council for their annual permits, as the time limit for such applications expires March 1. There is still a number who have not complied with the law in this particular.

FELT MORE AT HOME.

A Small Attendance Gives Increased Profit at the Y. M. C. A. Meeting.

Last night was an "off night" at the Y M. C. A. meeting conducted by Frank B. Hoagland, the usual attendants going to the various prayer meetings in their respective churches. However, it was an "off night" only in numbers, for more interest, enthusiasm and profit were extracted than at any of the previous nights. There were just enough present to make all feel at home and free to speak at the impulse, and then it was that a number of experiences were related that set non-believers considering as to taking the first step quicker than visiting a dozen other meetings where long faces and solemn manner predominated. Somewhat out of the ordinary testimonials were related when two white-haired men arose and stated the number of years that they had been trying to live Christian lives—one for 60 years and the other 62 years. And they had found the last year easier than the first.

THREW UP THE JOB.

Plainfield Contractors Found East Orange Work Unprofitable.

[From The Newark Advertiser.]

McGuire & McKnight, a firm of contractors from Plainfield, notified the East Orange Township Committee last night that they had given up their contract for the construction of the South Arlington avenue storm-water drain. They claimed that the supervisor over the work had interfered with them in requiring a number of things done not called for in the plans and specifications.

A resolution was passed instructing the contractors to proceed with their work at once and saying that if they did not begin again within ten days the Township Committee would consider their contract forfeited. The clerk was then instructed to notify the American Surety Company that the Township Committee would proceed against them for the amount of their bond. Committeeman Lang stated that the contractors had removed all their material from the excavation on South Arlington avenue, and that the trench was unguarded. The Sewer Committee was authorized to take action to protect the property adjoining the drain.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTEBOOK.

There will be no school tomorrow and in consequence the Kappa Delta Phi and High School Lyceum will hold their next meeting a week from Friday.

The P. H. S. A. A. will hold a meeting next Wednesday afternoon, when the question of uniting with the schools in Plainfield to contest against the other schools of the State will be discussed.

Mr. Travell is reported to be slightly better.

Superintendent Maxson is in Trenton.

Somerset's Senator's Insurance Bill.

Opposition was developed in the Senate yesterday morning to Senator Thompson's bill permitting the information of insurance companies on the Lloyds system. The bill passed the Senate without much opposition on Tuesday, but Senator Kuhl moved a reconsideration yesterday for purposes of amendment. He said there was no security provided for the insured and no individual specified against whom process could be served. Irresponsible persons could form a company.

The motion to reconsider was defeated, but Senator Thompson finally consented to it and subsequently offered amendments allowing the Commissioner of Banking and Insurance to decide whether the company formed is a responsible one, and who is to be the person against whom process may be served.

A Law to Be Enforced.

The Firemen's Relief Association intend enforcing the law this year in reference to the two per cent. collection on premiums of local insurance agents, which are used for the relief of indigent firemen. Only two or three agents in Plainfield have failed to comply with this ordinance in years past.

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. THE OLD BUGBEAR.

Taxation Was a Tribulation to Our New Jersey Ancestors As Much as It Is to Their Descendants.

A portion of a copy of "The Political Intelligencer and New Jersey Advertizer" published in Elizabethtown February 8, 1786, was recently unearthed in this city.

From it The Press learns that the same amount of political trouble existed then, particularly with our New Jersey Legislature, as now.

An article condemning the taxation of land and predicting trusts, is worthy of consideration, and probably it is not too late to profit by its advice. While condemning the land taxes, it favors imposts on transportation companies, expresses, etc., and says:

"Can there be fairer or a more productive subject for taxation than stages, ferries and taverns, (those more particularly which are enroute of, and generally used by, foreigners and persons traveling through the State)? * * * * * These imposts apparently trifling as they are would produce a yearly revenue to the State that would be astonishing to all, and would at least diminish that ruinous and suicidal policy of any government in taxing the land and homes occupied by their owners. Rented lands and houses should be subject to taxation. Let also the produce of our lands, but a government should assist its people for its own protection in maintaining their homes. But what is the present conduct of the Legislature, if for the sake of seeking a particular specie of paper currency, or paying the interest upon the debts occurred by the war, new taxes are called, they lay them without hesitation upon the lands, and if the contingent expenses of the government increase, lands pay all. Lands are their ways and lands are their means, nor will they take the trouble of casting about for expedients to lighten the burden which is laid upon them.

"How long my countrymen will you sit by and tamely suffer these impositions? Measures like these if persisted in will bring on a commotion and hurry you into revolution. If the taxation of lands is so continued, who say in 150 years will be the possessors of these properties? It will, my countrymen, be either the Government itself or some wealthy foreign corporation, and our children's children instead of inheriting our farms, and working with an interest in the agricultural presents, will be but tenants or laborers; and if so impoverished and forced to work for a salary, what will become of our spirit of independence? This promotion and premium to combine, and foreign capital will follow the same course of events and our mercantile business will be likewise controlled by a monopoly, and make it impossible for a man of small means to do an independent business. If ambitious to be drygoods men or grocers, they can, but they must work for the combine, and be to them their slaves. * * * * The foundation of this prediction is based on the taxation of our homes, and while in favor of paying our just debts, by taxation if necessary, our home and farms, as the nation's safeguard both in time of war and peace should be exempt.

"It is no more outrageous of the pirates seizing upon your person and demanding a ransom for your release than the government leveling a tax upon your homes and selling them or putting you in jail if not paid. We know there are times when the payments of these taxes cannot be met, and for a government to demand the same or force its occupants to leave, to be made paupers, is, as I say, a suicidal policy."

An Entertaining Address.

In the lecture room of the First Presbyterian Church last night Adjutant Edith Marshall, who is the head of the auxiliary department of the Salvation Army, spoke to a good-sized audience on the rescue and slum work of the army. She is an entertaining talker and had an entertaining subject, so that all were well paid in attending the event.

Ensign McKensie, who is in charge of a corps on Fifth avenue in New York, also spoke of her work among the aristocracy.

At the close of the addresses a number of new members were secured for the auxiliary, which now brings the total Plainfield membership close to 100.

Crescent Club Membership Increased.

A meeting of the Board of Governors of the Crescent Bicycle Club was held last night, and the following members were elected: Patrick Kiely, Herbert Schutt, E. B. Mundy and Walter L. Price. Besides the transaction of some routine business, plans for the coming season were generally discussed.

They're Real Good Over the Brook.

Thus far this month not a single arrest has been made in the borough, the only inmates of the station house being an occasional itinerant. Chief Marshal Pangborn told a Press reporter that this was almost an unprecedented record.

—Two well-known commuters will speak at the young men's meeting conducted by F. B. Hoagland in the Y. M. C. A. Hall this evening at 8. The Park sisters, cornetists, will be present.

HUNTED WITH STEAM POWER.

Gas Got No More Game Than with Dog and Gun.

While his train for Philadelphia neared Pemberton, a few days ago, Engineer Charles Houston noticed a number of crows had settled on the rails, while on either side the snow was higher than the cab window of the engine, which is over 12 feet from the ground. In the cab was also the veteran conductor Billy Clark, who, like Charley, enjoys anything in the way of sport, and when it was noticed the crows had to raise 12 to 15 feet to get away from the approaching engine Charley let her go at a 60-mile an hour gait. This was decidedly too rapid a move for the crows, but to chase crows with a locomotive was at least a novelty, and to chase them through this cut for several hundred yards was quite exciting as the crows' only alternative was to go straight ahead. The engine passed through and under them, but none was killed, as those that were hit, owing to the momentum of the birds being in the same direction, were only knocked without injury to one side.

So these time-honored sportsmen got no more game hunting with steam power than they did last Fall with dog and gun. But 'twas lots o' fun.

On March 6 we shall begin publication of a detective story by Nym Crinkle, entitled

"EIGHT MINUTES TO THREE".

A. C. Wheeler, who uses this pseudonym, is one of the best known journalists in the United States. He has been for many years the dramatic critic of the New York World, and is today one of the most brilliant writers on the American press. It is to his inimitable sketches o New York life that the Sunday World owes a considerable part of its popularity. Mr. Wheeler has written many successful stories, of which the best known is perhaps "The Great Laran Rebellion".

"Eight Minutes of Three" is in every way a remarkable piece of fiction, and deserves to rank with some of the weird tales of Poe. It will run five days, and will be followed by a short story of New England life by Mary E. Wilkins.

This story, like all the Daily Press serials, is brand-new, and copyrighted to Daily Press use.

$200 From the Fair.

The supper and bazar in the Vincent Chapel was continued last evening, and proved more successful than the night before, though the attendance was not as large as deserved. An excellent musical programme was arranged, and thoroughly enjoyed by all those who were present. Conde's young men's orchestra started the evening's entertainment with several selections, rendered in the customary excellent manner. A vocal solo by Robert Douglass followed, after which William McKillop rendered a violin solo in a very artistic manner. He was accompanied by Walter Reynolds.

A vocal solo by William Holmes was the next number on the programme, and it was enjoyed as are all of Mr. Holmes's songs. Miss Lillian A. Force accompanied him.

Another selection was given by the orchestra, and Miss Force played a piano solo and responded to an encore.

A recitation by Miss Etta Raybert and another number by the orchestra ended the progrogramme.

The proceeds from the two nights is estimated at about $200. The exact figures will be announced later.

Mr. Titsworth to Move.

Alexander Titsworth will shortly remove his tobacco, candy and newspaper business from his present location on North avenue opposite the station, to the store property formerly occupied by Gilbride & Lodge, near Park avenue, on the same thoroughfare. He contemplates establishing a lunch-counter.

—The Daily Press will not be published Washington's Birthday.

—The Y. M. C. A. Building will be open all day tomorrow, and Mr. Hoagland and the Park sisters will be in the large hall in the evening as usual.

—The Junior Endeavorers of the Congregational Church will not hold their meeting on Friday as announced, as that is a holiday.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

IN MEMORY OF THE DEAD

Lamenting Loved Ones Who Were Lost at Sea.

Beautiful Address at the Gloucester Memorial Meeting by the Rev. A. S. Gumbert, of Boston—Man's Obligation to His Fellow Man—The World in Sorrow—A Call for Aid.

Gloucester, Mass., Feb. 22.—The Rev. A. S. Gumbert in his speech at the Gloucester memorial meeting said in part:

To-day as we look over the broad expanse of the waters and strive to conjure up the sad scenes that call us together this evening, mingled with the mighty roar and music of the ocean's orchestration, we hear the sorrowing misere of the sailor's death song.

As the obligato in music is the one independent voice or sound we hear above all the others, so to-night we hear only the obligato of the fisherman's last despairing cry before he sank into that cemetery of the countless dead, the secrets of which will never be known until in the last great day the earth and the sea shall give up their dead.

No heavenly messenger has brought us their last message; the winds refuse to tell it, and the water keeps their secret; but we can guess it. We are men of like passions with those who have been lost. If we had been in their place we know what thoughts would have filled our minds, what prayers would have ascended to almighty God, for the loved ones that must suffer—for father, mother, sister, wife and children; and to-night we shall translate the dying fisherman's obligato as our obligation, an obligation which we assume in the name of Him who was and is the fisherman's friend, and who said: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."

Crying for Loved Ones.

As we sit together for a little while, let me call your attention to these voices of the sea:

First—A voice of brotherhood. Who were these brave men who gave their lives while toiling for the necessities of life? They were your brothers and mine. Let no man call himself a Christian, aye, let no man call himself a man who, in this present obligation fails to recognize the application to himself of this principle of brotherhood.

All through your bereaved city there are mothers and wives and sweethearts and children who stretch out their arms over the sea in vain for their loved ones who will come back no more; and we must do all we can, in the name of God and man, to wipe away their tears, to sweeten their bitter cup, to ease their burdens and to comfort their troubled hearts; and as we give of our love and of our means to accomplish this, we also lift up our hearts in prayer that He shall help who in olden times stood in the bow of the Galilean fisher-boat and, stretching His hand over the troubled waters, spake those magic words of power: "Peace; be still! and a great calm followed," so that the troubled waters sank into rest and lay as calm and peaceful as a sleeping babe.

God's Sympathy.

Second—There is a voice of sympathy. True sympathy is Christ-like. If there was one trait of character that stood out more prominently than any other in the life of our blessed Lord, it was His wonderful sympathy.

There are scores of sorrowing ones in whose name we have gathered together to-night who will never greet their loved ones again until, by the love of God, they meet in that better land where there shall be no more sea; and some of them—God bless them!—will have a hard time of it between now and then. There will be heavy weather, darkening skies, head winds, merciless waves, and, with it all, tired bodies and weak hands. In God's name, in the name of our common humanity, let us put larger gifts into the treasury of the relief association than ever before. God pity any man who can find an excuse for not giving to the utmost of his ability in this present emergency.

Jesus as Captain.

Third—There is a voice of God. It is hard for us to believe that God was in the disasters which have brought bereavement to so many hearts, but that is only because our vision is so circumscribed. If there were no telescopes, we should say there were no stars save those which present themselves to human vision; if there were no microscopes we should say there is nothing in the flower save that which the naked eye can see. Yes, God was there, and He who holdeth the waters in the palm of His hand was not unmindful of what happened. Not a sparrow falleth to the ground without our Heavenly Father's notice, and the least of those who perished in the waters was of more importance than many sparrows.

I ask you to-night, will you take Jesus Christ on board as your captain? I cannot promise you that if you will do this there will be no storms, no trials, but I can promise you that if you will take Jesus Christ on board, he will bring you in safety through every storm into the haven of extreme rest.

Gerry's Whipping Post Bill

Albany, Feb. 21.—The senate judiciary committee will to-day report favorably Senator O'Connor's Gerry whipping post bill, amended so that corporal punishment may be inflicted on persons assaulting a female or child of either sex under the age of 16 years. Wife-beaters, whom Mr. Gerry was anxious to reach as well, are exempted from the provisions of the bill.

Employes Dissatisfied.

Providence, R. I., Feb. 21.—Thirty-five weavers in the employ of the Geneva Worsted company went out on strike yesterday against an order requiring them to run two fancy looms each at increased wages. The weavers objected to this plan for the reason that it would reduce the working force, and that the additional pay was not commensurate with the extra labor

GENTRY'S STATEMENT.

Had Been Drinking To Excess, Making Him a Total Wreck.

Philadelphia, Feb. 21.—Gentry in his statement regarding the murder of Miss Yorke says:

"I was insanely jealous. I had known Madge Drysdale since August, 1893. We became friendly and were engaged to be married, and she wore my ring on her finger. She also bought me a ring which she paid over $100 for. I was to have met her in New York on Sunday. Her letters had turned cold and I had wired her a number of times to let me know the cause of the sudden change, which was natural, my thinking as much of her as I did. Her telegram read: '12:03, I leave here at 10.' I had journeyed all night from Boston, and was very sleepy when I got to New York and did not get there until 12:43. I arrived there and did not see anything of her in the 12:43 boat. I couldn't do anything, was a complete wreck, and went to her father's house and asked if he had heard anything of her coming to him. He said no; I had better go down again; there were some more trains and I might meet her. I went down again, and not seeing her bought a round-trip ticket and took a train for Philadelphia. In the meantime I had been drinking on being disappointed. On arriving in Philadelphia I went to Irving house, and then to Miss Dietrich's, and heard she was next door. Went into Zeiss'; met Mr. Zeiss and asked where was Miss Yorke's room. I had a pistol in my pocket which I had borrowed from a man named Hackett in our company. I said in my mind I may have to shoot some Romeo in the foot. I fully expected to find a man in her room, a little blonde fellow.

"I went up stairs and walked into the room, and when I saw her, was very much delighted. I said: "Well darling, I have come.' I had lived on beef and clam broth for a week previous. I was completely upset. I said, 'Are you glad to see me?' She seemed to be awfully disappointed at my appearance. She said, 'Oh, why, what are you doing here?' I said, 'darling, won't you kiss me?' She said 'I will not' (as I remember). I said, 'You won't?' She replied 'No.' These seemed to be her last words, and the result followed. I was insanely jealous. I had no intention of shooting her when I left Boston. But I was so enraged, for I loved the woman."

COMMENT ON CHARITIES.

The Good Samaritan Should Give to the Poor Direct.

New York, Feb. 21.—"Charity Balls," now seem to be the order of the day. The sufferings of the poor in the dreadful storms that have swept so fiercely over the country, have been beyond the power of words to describe. Men, women and children, half-clad and hungry, have been frozen in schools. Ears, arms and feet, have been cut away by the stabbing cold, and the "charitable societies" have for the most part looked on and said, "How sad."

The failure of organized charity to deal with destitution has been complete. Yet great granite buildings well heated and imposingly furnished, have stood empty, while the homeless froze outside on the street in this "free country." It is a practicable impossibility to relieve distress through the medium of these organizations, since a deluge of red tape is necessary to pass the portals.

People who wish to give to the poor should give directly, not second hand, thus saving the ornamental "expenses" of "charitable" societies. Such societies seem to do but little good, besides eating up revenues that should go to the destitute people.

BEATEN INTO INSENSIBILITY.

Masked Burglars Attempt To Rob an Old Man.

Springfield, O., Feb. 21.—Last night about midnight two masked men visited the log house in which William Thomas lives alone, a few miles from this city. Thomas is old and eccentric and has lived in the house for the past forty years, though he has accumulated a fortune in that time.

Thomas screamed lustily for help when the burglars burst in upon him and he was beaten into insensibility with a stone. An old chest was broken into without finding any booty, and then the robbers became alarmed and fled. Thomas revived and again called for help. E. Paynter and Carp Titus went to his assistance.

SUING FOR BACK SALARY.

Reporters Employed on the Co-operative Plan.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 21.—J. J. Farrell has begun suit in the second district court to recover $42 back salary said to be due from Thomas E. Barr, proprietor of the defunct Newark Times.

When the paper was started a second time, after proving a failure as a morning sheet, the men were employed on the plan that they were to receive half of their salary in cash and the rest in stock. Farrell claims that he received half of his salary and half stock, but he now wants the money represented by the stock.

An Orator Dead.

Washington, Feb. 21.—Frederick Douglass, the colored orator, died here at 7 o'clock last night, in his 78th year. He has been for over fifty years in the foremost rank as an orator. He was born a slave, worked in after years at the ship-carpenters trade for the benefit of his owner. He escaped from slavery in 1835, entered upon a lecturing tour through Europe, which gave him a world-wide prominence.

What Will He Do with Her?

Southampton, Feb. 21. — Howard Gould will sail for America on the steamship New York next Saturday. The United Press correspondent made many inquiries here as to the report that the yacht Vigilant would be taken back to America at once, and was informed that no instructions whatever as to her future movements had been received.

Twenty-five Years for His Crime.

Boston, Feb. 21.—Yesterday in the superior court before Judge Lilley, a jury found John J. Mooney guilty of breaking and entering the store of Charles B. Hunting, on the night of Jan. 15, and also for being an habitual criminal. He will receive a mandatory sentence of twenty-five years in state prison.

WIRE MEN RESOLUTE

The Strike Extending in the Building Trades.

Six Thousand Men Stopped from Work by the Board of Walking Delegates To Aid the Electricians. Contractors To Employ Non-Union Men After Monday.

New York, Feb. 21.—Matters took on a lively aspect yesterday in connection with the strike of the Brotherhood of Electrical workers.

While the board of delegates were holding a prolonged and exciting session in 59th street the Electrical Contractors' association in 23d street were tuning things up for a lively tussle in the building trades.

First blood was drawn Tuesday evening by the contractors' rejection of Local No. 3's compromise allowing the eight-hour day to go into effect April 1.

Delegates Retaliate.

The board of delegates, who have shouldered the Electrical workers' trouble, came to time in the second round by calling out all the men employed on the Presbyterian building, at Fifth avenue and 20th street, and the Tract society's building, at Spruce and Nassau. This was done at 1 o'clock yesterday.

The telephone in the office of the Builders' club, where the contractors meet, brought news of this action to them while in session.

They had just figured up that the largest builders would loose about $2,500 by granting the men's demands, while the rest would lose a hundred or two dollars apiece by it when they heard of the two strikes being called.

In a twinkling they had another gun wheeled into position and fired off the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Brotherhood of Electrical workers be officially notified to-night that on and after Monday, Feb. 25, the members of this association will begin to fill places of the wire men now on strike failing to report for duty. That in addition to this notice the resolution shall be advertised in the press of this city.

Another Surprise.

The ink was scarcely dry before the board of walking delegates had planned another surprise by ordering a strike on two more large buildings—the American Surety, at Pine and Broadway, and St. Luke's hospital, 116th street and Western boulevard—to go into effect to-day.

Then the board of delegates felt that they were even and could indulge in a quiet smile at the action of the contractors.

These strikes include all the men in the building trades engaged on the buildings mentioned, and are ordered because of the action of the contractors in refusing the demand of the Electrical workers.

The leaders of the brotherhood men state that they have little to fear as to the outcome of the struggle.

On All Buildings.

In the last "misunderstanding" with the bosses they had not much support from the board of delegates, who have greatly increased in power of late, and will fight to the utmost for them, calling strikes on every building in town if it found necessary to do so.

There will be a special meeting of the board of delegates late this afternoon.

Nearly 6,000 strikers were last night added to the Electrical workers who quit Monday. They are members of the building trades unions, and they were ordered out in sympathy by the board of walking delegates at a meeting held at 139 East 59th street.

STOLE $10,000 IN GOLD BULLION.

A Trio Under Arrest, One of Whom Is a Dishonest Employe.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 21.—Three persons named John Schick, Faedel Bishop and Herman Crushager were arraigned in the police court here yesterday charged with stealing $178.35 worth of gold bullion from the Balbach Smelting & Refining works, but it is said that the thefts will amount to $10,000 in all. The men pleaded not guilty and were held for trial. Some months ago the men in charge at Balbach's began missing quantities of bullion and placed the matter in the hands of detectives. Suspicion pointed strongly to Bishop, who was employed in the works. After watching for some time the detectives discovered that Bishop secreted the gold and silver in his shoes and clothing. In this way, it is said, he got the stuff out of the works and turned it over to Schick and Crushager, who, the police declare, melted the stuff and sold it to various concerns. About $1,500 worth has been recovered.

Iron and Steel Industry.

New York, Feb. 21.—The Iron Age will say to-day: "In spite of the continued low price of iron and steel products, a more hopeful feeling is spreading among eastern manufacturers. This is due principally to the fact that costs have been steadily crowded down until now makers feel that they are partly safe in their own territory. This applies to pig iron as well as to steel. In the latter the basic open-hearth furnace has become the salvation of the eastern maker. Pig iron for this purpose is being delivered at a low price, while cheap melting scrap has been available in quantity in their territory. On the whole the market is steady."

ONE OF YOUR WANTS.

In Considering Your Needs Do Not Forget This.

IF YOU DO YOU WILL MAKE A SERIOU MISTAKE AT THIS SEASON.

Something of Deep and Peculiar Interest Just Now.

There are many needs during the Spring months, but none more necessary or urgent than the use of a Spring medicine. The blood requires it, and the nerves, liver, kidneys and bowels must have it if you desire to keep strong and vigorous, and maintain your good health. Those who are weak, tired and nervous must take it, and those who do not feel just right should do so or serious ill health may follow.

Mrs. C. L. French, of Hardwick, Vt., can tell you of her own experience just what to do.

"Three years ago," she says, "I was completely prostrated from nervous trouble. I could not do anything I was confined to my bed much of the time, and was unable to attend to my business for three months. I had trouble with my stomach, my food distressing me constantly.

"I could not sleep for my whole nervous system was prostrated. My trouble was brought on by overwork and loss of sleep. After taking many remedies without avail, I commenced to uss Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and found instant benefit from its use.

"I continued it until now, when I can say that I am as well as I ever was. I certainly think this is the best medicine I ever knew of. I consider it a great thing to say, that from so severe a case as mine, to be restored to perfect health in so short a time is something quite unusual.

"I heartily recommend Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy to all, and wish every poor suffering person might use it."

It is impossible to express the good which this wonderful medicine is doing for suffering humanity. It strengthens the nerves, invigorates the blood, regulates the action of the stomach, liver, bowels and kidneys, and cures disease Try it in your own case, and see how rapidly it gives you back your health and strength. It is the best of all Spring medicines.

Why waste time in trying uncertain and untried remedies. when here is a physician's prescription, a discovery made by the greatest living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene of 35 West 14th street, New York city. If you take this medicine you can consider yourself under Dr. Greene's direct professional care, and you can consult him, or write to him about your case, freely and without charge. This is a guarantee that this remedy will cure, possessed by no other medicine in the world.

CHILD SICKLY.

Strength Is Not Enough For Proper Growth.

The Young Body Fails to Get Well Nourished.

Needs Richer Bond and Tissue Forming Food.

Body Cannot Grow Without Pure, Sturdy Blood

Unequalled Value of Paine's Celery Compound.

From birth till past the age of 30 there is growth; some of the bones do not completely knit till 35.

All this time in addition there is a steady waste of the tissues that must be repaired. The demand upon the vitality and upon the powers of assimilation is thus enormous during these years. Without plenty of rich, nourishing blood, growth must be defective and tardy. But when it courses through all the arteries in a full, vigorous stream, growth goes on steadily and perfectly.

What countless numbers of frail youngsters physicians see whose pitiably thin wrists and bloodless faces cry out for better nourishment. All this does not escape the vigilant insight of parents. In thousands of homes it is well known that the boys and girls are somehow badly nourished.

The weak stomachs and organs of assimilation cannot exact the food for growing nerves and brain in sufficient quantities from the ordinary diet. A special nerve diet is what they need. Paine's celery compound is Prof. Edward E. Phelps' great preparation for nourishing these little frames and making them grow into strong, active men and women. Dr. Phelps, upon whom colleges conferred their highest honors for his invaluable investigations in medicine, knew from ripe experience the exact needs of these little sufferers.

A chorus of gratitude has gone up all over the country, from mothers of children once weakly and pale, without promise of ever growing into robust men and women, who have outgrown weakness and a lack of vitality by the use of Paines celery compound, taken with the regularity that physicians adhere to when prescribing this wonderful nerve and blood restorative.

It is valuable in all wasting diseases, in cleansing the blood of rheumatism, neuralgia, scrofula and supplying new and healthy vital fluid—its value can neither be weighed nor measured.

As the great modern nerve and brain strengthener and restorer Paine's celery compound, is pronounced invaluable by all progressive physicians. Give this grand invigorator a fair trial, and be convinced.

TO INCREASE THE NAVY

Battle Ships and Torpedo Boats in Demand.

Ship Yards on the Mississippi Entitled to a Share of the Work—The Price of Armor Plate Considered. Will Cleveland Call an Extra Session—The Time Getting Short.

Washington, Feb. 21.—So far as the house is concerned, the navy will be further increased by the construction of three battle ships and nine torpedo boats. At the close of four days' deliberation on the bill making appropriations for the navy and naval establishment for the year ending June 30, 1896, the house passed the measure practically as it was reported by the committee after having refused by a vote of 199 to 67 to recommit the bill, upon motion by Mr. Sayers (dem., Tex.), with instructions to strike out the provision for the battle ships. An amendment offered by Mr. Sayers was agreed to providing that the secretary of the navy should not contract to pay a higher price for armor plate or gun steel than paid for the same articles by private parties or foreign governments. It was also provided on motion by Mr. Dolliver (rep., Ia.), that two of the nine torpedo boats should be constructed on the Mississippi river. Efforts by Mr. Cannon (rep., Ill.) to make the bill carry an appropriation of $20,000,000 or of $5,000,000 towards defraying the cost of the battle ships were unavailing. In this connection a letter was read from Secretary Herbert stating that if the construction of the battle ships was authorized in the pending bill here would be expended in the year ending June 30, 1896, on that account only $513,200.

Want Their Share.

When the item for the increase of the navy was reached Mr. Dolliver moved that two of the nine torpedo boats shall be constructed on the Mississippi river. He said that the ship yards of the Mississippi valley were able to do the work and were entitled to share in the profits of the shipbuilding industry. Responding to a suggestion by Mr. Sayers, Mr. Dolliver said the boats must be built at prices satisfactory to the secretary of the navy. The building of two or three naval ships on the Pacific coast had resulted in a great development of the ship building industry in that section of the country and if the encouragement he proposed, said Mr. Dolliver, were extended to the Mississippi valley the interest would be greatly stimulated there to the prosperity of the people thereof. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. Sayers moved to strike out the authorization for the three battle ships On this motion, Mr. Money (dem., Miss.), referring to the statements made by Mr. Simpson (pop., Kan.) in his speech the other day, said Mr. Simpson was "literally gorged with misinformation." He said that no battle ships had been sunk at the battle of Yalu and Mr. Simpson denied having made that statement.

"Scamp or Scoundrel."

Mr. Henderson (rep., Ia.) said he wanted to protest against the sentiment expressed in some quarters regarding the American navy. "It would satisfy some people best," he said, "if every man in that branch of the service bore on his back a tag reading: 'This man is a scamp or a scoundrel.' The gentleman from Kansas (Mr. Simpson) says the republicans might naturally be expected to vote for the proposed increase of the navy, because they are in favor of a strong centralized government. I don't know whether the gentleman is on the verge of secession or not. He knows. But I want to say that I am for a strong centralized government of which each state and every citizen shall be a royal and interested party; a government that shall be able to protect every citizen from the outside to the centre, wherever he may be."

Tired of the Cry.

Mr. Sayers, in an earnest speech, said he was tired of hearing men denounced as unpatriotic because they would not agree to the proposed large expenditure. He denied that men were unpatriotic because they stood on the floor and said that the expenses of the government should be kept within its receipts in time of peace; because they refused to sanction contracts between the government and its citizens by which it was compelled to pay more than the same citizens contracted to furnish the same article for to foreign governments, (referring to the reported contract by which the Bethlehem Iron & Steel company was to furnish armor plate to the Russian government); and because they insisted that the congress which authorized great contracts should also appropriate money necessary to carry out those contracts.

A Provoking Discussion.

Senator Chandler (rep., N. H.) had well nigh a monopoly of the attention of the senate yesterday, in so far, at least, as political controversy was concerned. He made two speeches, one on the silver question and the other on the likelihood and desirability of an extra session in April or May next. In the first speech he took an advanced position in favor of bi-metallism, and stated his belief that the adoption of the single gold standard had helped to produce the financial troubles. The time was approaching, he said, when it would be necessary for the republican party to present some affirmative measures of bi-metallism; otherwise the American voters would decide between gold mono-metallism as the one alternative, and silver mono-metallism as the other.

Knights of Pythias Convene

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 21.—The twenty-eighth annual meeting of the New Jersey Grand lodge of the Knights of Pythias convened here yesterday and will remain in session until this afternoon. The attendance was good and Grand Chancellor George T. Cranmer presided. George E. Pierson, grand keeper of records and seals reported the total membership in this state to be 12,622. The total amount paid for relief during the year was $60,530.51. The total number of lodges in the state is 141.

THE MINERS AGAINST HIM.

Check Found for a Large Sum Indorsed by McBride.

Columbus, O., Feb. 21.—The charges of bribery made by Mark Wild, president of the Columbus Trades assembly and state organizer of the American Railway union against John McBride, president of the American Federation of Labor, were not satisfactorily disposed of by the recent miners convention which exonerated McBride, and now those who believed McBride guilty will take advantage of existing circumstances to sift the matter to the bottom. Already some very damaging evidence against McBride has developed and this investigation bodes no good for him.

Next Monday night Mr. Wild will tender his resignation as president of the local trades assembly pending a full investigation of the McBride charges, and a committee will be appointed to go to the bottom of the affair. As nearly all the unions connected with the trades assembly belong to national organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor great importance attaches to this investigation. It is of national importance in the labor world, and will settle the fate of either Wild or McBride.

At one of the banks of this city has been found a check for a large sum of money made by a prominent coal operator and indorsed by John McBride. It was paid about the time of the settlement of the miners big strike last summer and an effort is to be made to have McBride account for the money. That the Ohio miners believe McBride guilty and mean to stand by Wild is evidenced by the fact that the latter is daily receiving scores of letters from labor leaders throughout the country commending him for the stand he took in the McBride affair. He has been invited to visit the Hocking Valley and address the miners at New Straitsville, Nelsonville, Shawnee, Jacksonville and Trimble. The writers say that the alleged vindication of McBride by the convention has failed to vindicate him among the miners of the valley and they promise Mr. Wild an ovation if he accepts their invitation to address them.

IN A PECK OF TROUBLE.

Couple Arrested in Newark Charged with Many Crimes.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 21.—Mrs. Fannie Castle and Robert Morton, of New York, called yesterday at the Third precinct station house, where both told Lieutenant Prout of marital difficulties.

Mrs. Castle has been searching for her husband, Gabriel Castle, while Morton has been looking for his wife, who had with her his little son. He said he wanted the boy back, but cared little about his wife. His wife, it seems, left him four years ago, and soon after his home was entered during his absence and his son abducted. Mrs. Castle said that some years ago she had her husband arrested for non-support, in addition to which he was guilty of desertion. He could not get a bondsman as surety for alimony, so he was kept in jail for a time.

Finally his wife secured his release on his promise to provide for his family. For two weeks he kept his promise, and then deserted his family. Some time ago he came to this city. Mrs. Castle located him here, where he had been living with a woman whom Mrs. Castle learns was the missing Mrs. Morton, and located the woman's husband in New York. By agreement Morton and Mrs. Castle came here together yesterday. A complaint by Mrs. Castle against both her husband and Mrs. Morton was taken and a warrant issued. Two officers then went to the house in Ferry street and arrested Mrs. Morton. Castle was sick in bed. Mrs. Morton was brought to the station house and an officer remained to watch Castle. Mrs. Morton, it is alleged, is also wanted by a New York furniture firm, while the Fifth Avenue Stage company, as well as his wife, wants Castle. Mrs. Morton is reputed to be the mother of nine children, her son already mentioned, being with her. Castle has been employed here on the Bowery street trolley line. Mrs. Morton was held in $500 bail for examination Saturday. The New York police had been instructed to arrest her for kidnappng.

WANTED FOR EMBEZZLEMENT.

Lejeune Not a Successful Drummer. Thousands Missing.

Providence, R. I., Feb. 21.—The police are looking for Louis P. Lejeune for alleged embezzlement of several thousand dollars from the firm of Waldron, Wightman & Co. Lejeune for five years was employed by the firm but in June last was discharged. Since he has been acting as Chicago representative of several jewelry firms but as a drummer was not a success. When the yearly accounts were made up recently the alleged shortage was discovered. The whereabouts of the much-wanted man is not known.

All Coal Mines Busy.

Columbus, O., Feb. 22.—A special from Selinville, O., says that every coal mine in that important vicinity is in full operation for the first time in ten years. These mines have a capacity of more than a hundred cars per day and they furnish employment for about 600 men, most of whom were sorely in need of some means of earning a livelihood. Indications also point to an early resumption of work at the plant of the Selinville Furnace company, which has been idle for the last six months.

A High Toned Prisoner.

Chester, Pa., Feb. 21.—John F. Gilmore, the Williamsport bank clerk, who was arrested yesterday for forgery and attempts to fraud, was brought to this city and given a hearing on the charge of attempting to obtain money by false pretenses from the Delaware County Trust company. He was put under $1,000 bail and committed in default. Gilmore begged the officers to let him go to a hotel, as he did not want to sleep in a cell, but his pleadings were in vain.

They Advance the Price of Oil.

Columbus, O., Feb. 21.—The Buckeye Pipe Line company, the purchasing department of the Standard Oil company, advanced the price of oil at Lima, O., yesterday 2½ cents per barrel making the price for the North Lima product 62½ cents and South Lima 57½ cents per barrel. It is predicted that it will reach $1 by April 1.

WOMEN'S CONVENTION

What Modern Education Is Doing for Our Girls.

Still Great Need of Improvement. Good Women Said To Be the Salvation of the Human Race—Mrs. Gates Advocates Equal Suffrage and Equal Privileges to All.

Washington, Feb. 21.—One of Brigham Young's daughters, Mrs. Susa Young Gates, of Provo City, Utah, read a racy and highly suggestive paper on the question: "What is Modern Education Doing for American Girls?"

She said in part: Fifty, one hundred, yea one thousand years ago, no thought save that of dependence ever entered into the ideal life of woman. The clinging vine was the accepted standard of womanliness. The ideal of our girl to-day is the exact opposite. From utter dependence she has emerged to a too complete independence. Girl bachelors are as plentiful as male bachelors. The fin de siecle girl is loath to give up her cozy rooms in the luxurious flat, her tiny cottage home, shared no doubt by a companion of her own sex and of similar tastes, to take upon herself the heavy burdens of housework and home management.

Will Not Be Mothers.

She is positively determined that she will not allow herself to become the mother of children. The reproach of old-maidenhood has so far receded into the past, and the selfish serving of selfish wants has so far spread from masculinity to femininity, that the cities are even more crowded with young women from city and country who refuse to marry than they are with young men who share with them these egotistic views.

What is the effect physcally of modern education upon our girls? Who that meets the pink-cheeked lassie upon her wheel, that visits the popular gymnasium, that shares with our summer girl her climbs and mountain junketings; who that gazes upon the sparkling eyes and rosy lips of the country girl, or her prudent city cousin who has utilized all the modern health-promoting methods, will deny that physically our once thin, pale and delicate girl is improving?

American Girls Extinct.

There is still great need of improvement. The physical status of woman to-day is so low that motherhood is almost, if not quite, an impracticability. Witness the flat-chested and poorly developed maid, be she rich or poor, country born or city bred, who tread the halls of our eastern schools and colleges. The occasional well-developed and round-limbed girl is sure to be only one generation removed from her mother's European home, or she has been reared on a western farm and has not had higher educational advantages or disadvantages.

Physicians are not slow to assert that the American girl, as a species, is almost extinct. What are the causes? Some state that the older eastern families have intermarried so extensively as to produce sterility. Others affirm that selfish parents freely avail themselves of known mechanical methods of prevention; while still others say that at that critical period in a girls life when all the vitality of her body should be occupied in establishing her proper bodily functions, she is at school with her brain hot, her feet cold and every nerve and blood-drop a tingle to perform the heavy mental tasks assigned her. All three have doubtless had their deleterious effects, and all have combined to produce a condition appalling to the American citizen.

The Nation's Salvation.

There are always in every condition of life a majority of good women. This is the salvation of the human race. In the case of our nation, these good women are tottering upon the crumbling precipice of old creeds and secretly longing to affiliate themselves with the more plastic theories of the modern religious world. The girl of to-day is uncertain what she will be, what she wants to be spiritually. She is not at all uncertain about her determination to grasp every opportunity which comes near her for physical and mental independence, nor is she uncertain as to her willingness to accept the counsel of her senior and avoid all possibility of maternal worry and care; she is even mildly willing to remain single and free to pursue her own selfish course, for it is the spirit of the age.

Nothing but an overpowering impulse of the divine passion can influence her to marry, and even then she will so catechise herself and her lover that it requires all her own peculiar tact to make him or even herself forget that she is giving much to receive little.

Exchange Occupations.

Why should not such an institute be so arranged that the girls and the boys shall attend together? Will not as many boys turn out excellent milliners as there will be girls who can administer medicine or plan a house? Why must we go on thinking that it is all right for women to do men's work, but it will never do for men to choose the occupations now monopolized by women?

And as such a revolution is pending, I prophesy that there will be as many mild-mannered men who will cling lovingly for support to the future architect or cabinet maker as there are now depending upon the wife's washing or following woman lecturers from pillar to post.

Some noble hearted women are freely devoting life, time, money and influence to converting other women's sons and husbands to the necessity of equal suffrage and equal privileges for the sexes. I am practically educating my boys to understand and share in the problems and wearisome cares of the household. I am not afraid that in their manhood they will fail to insist upon my sharing with them the responsibilities and honors of town, state and nation.

Vanity

is a virtuous vice. The world is better for it. It makes men ambitious—and it makes women careful of their personal appearance. It doesn't take much money to keep well-dressed now-a-days. Cleaning or dyeing makes it possible to use soiled or fadded garments. And there's where our ax comes in. We are in the Cleaning and Dyeing business. Our cleaner is ready, and our dyer has his fall shades mixed.

Ask for our little book—"Re-Freshing Thoughts." It tells about cleaning the men's clothing.

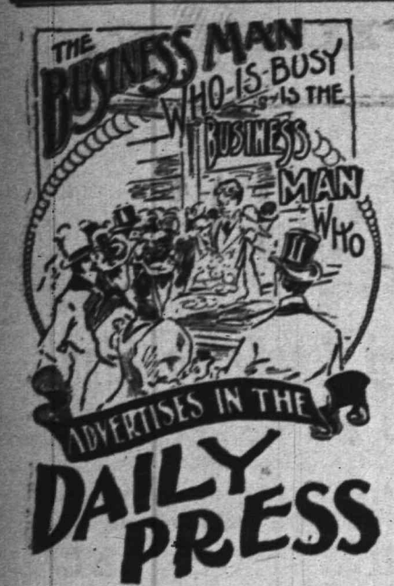
PLAINFIELD, N. J., FEB. 21, 1895



A Battle on the Border.

On Feb. 21, 1862, the Union and Confederate forces on the southwestern border met in combat at Valverde, N. M. The troops on both sides were chiefly local volunteers, although the Union ranks were led by regular officers, and many of the Confederate officers had served in the old army. The campaign opened with the advance of General Sibley up the Rio Grande from Texas with 2,000 men to seize or capture the Union posts on the river. He arrived opposite Fort Craig on the 21st. General E. S. R. Canby commanded at the fort. A part of the garrison, which numbered 4,000 men, crossed the river and drove the enemy from his chosen positions. At 3 o'clock the victory seemed to hang over the Union banners. In desperation Sibley sent two storming parties against the Union flanks. The stormers were on foot, armed with shotguns, squirrel rifles, revolvers and lances. On the Union right Hall's battery, supported by Kit Carson's Colorado volunteers and a battalion of regulars, drove back the stormers with fearful slaughter, but on the left there was another story to tell. Captain Alexander McRae's battery formed the chief element of strength on that flank. It was manned by regulars and defended until every horse and half the cannoneers had been shot down. Major S. A. Lockridge, an old army officer and former comrade of McRae's, led the charge. McRae stood by the last gun, surrounded by his fallen braves. Lockridge placed his palm upon the muzzle of the piece and demanded surrender. The two were not three feet apart. Looking each other in the face, both raised their revolvers and fired. Together they dropped dead in their tracks. The disaster to McRae turned the tide in favor of Sibley.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

"Must Be Fighting Done First."

Feb. 22 is the anniversary of Major Forsyth's gallant attempt to hold Ogdensburg (1813) against the British attacking the village in two columns, north and west. Forsyth defended the west approach on the point beyond the Oswegatchie. Behind an old mansion wall he formed his men, with a six pounder on the right and another in the center. The first volley, held until the enemy was close up, threw his line into confusion, and all the assailants ran out on the ice to escape the cannonade. In the village proper were three cannon at different points, manned by a few men. At daylight over 500 British marched in, overwhelming the first battery encountered before a shot was fired. At the next battery the elevating screw broke after a few shots, and the captain and his men crossed the river to join Forsyth. The third and last piece held out until overpowered, and the British column paraded on the ice in front of Forsyth. Summoned to surrender under pain of having his band put to the sword, the gallant American replied, "There must be more fighting done first." A few shots from the guns sent the enemy to cover among the houses. While marksmen kept up a fire on the American gunners the main body of British advanced over the ice to storm the position. The gun captains had both been shot down, besides some 20 men, and with the odds of eight to one against him Forsyth sounded retreat, declaring that if 300 soldiers would rally to his flag the lost ground should be retaken and more with it, or he would die in the attempt.

A False Diagnosis.

La grippe is confounded by many persons with a severe attack of catarrh, which in some respects resembles the former. These individuals suffer severely with pain about the forehead, eyes and ears, with soreness in throat and stoppage of the nasal passages and in fact, are incapacitated for work of any kind for days at a time. These are catarrhal sufferers. Ely's Cream Balm has been used with the best results in such cases. The remedy will give instant relief.

A Timid Merchant Marine.

Is the American merchant flag being swept from the seas by the British lion? During the year 1894 not a bushel of grain was carried across the Atlantic in a steamer or sailing vessel under the United States flag. Of the millions of bushels of cereals grown in the United States, but 600 bushels of peas were exported last year under the American flag, and even that consignment was carried in an English built steamer which had been granted an American register—the American liner New York. That particular shipment of 600 bushels comprised the small surplus which could not be stowed away in the already overstocked hold of an English craft. The American ship took the leavings.

from taking medicine. They don't like its taste. But they are eager to take what they like—Scott's Emulsion, for instance. Children almost always like Scott's Emulsion.

And it does them good.

Scott's Emulsion is the easiest, most palatable form of Cod-liver Oil, with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda added to nourish the bones and tone up the nervous system. The way children gain flesh and strength on Scott's Emulsion is surprising even to physicians.

All delicate children need it.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,

Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. E. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

A Woman Hang

Around the neck of her husband and begged and implored him to go immediately and reserve seats for the pretty and young soubrette, Lillian Kennedy, in "She Couldn't Marry Three." Few actresses at her age are endowed with such transcendent talent; in the whole range of the drama she shines resplendent, exciting tears or laughter at will, and with an ease and absence of effort that disarms criticism.

She sings a ballad or comic song, dances a graceful skirt dance or break down, and all she does is imbued with a spirit of an innate artist, a thorough musician; endowed with youth and uncommon beauty she seems destined at no distant day to reach the very pinnacle of dramatic eminence.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

WASHINGTON.

O fatherland, so great and free!
The prize that valiant heroes won,
The joyful harp we tune to thee
Commemorates thy noblest son.
To him we give our thoughts today,
A thankful, childish, patriot band;
We twine the laurel and the bay
And crown him father of our land.

Oh, not like proud Ambition's son
That soared to fame in ancient Rome,
Not like the Mars who battles won
And found Helena for a home.
No chains were forged thy name to raise
Above the legal lords of earth,
No groaning captives sang thy praise
Or flattered crimes to deeds of worth.

Sleep on in peace, O hallowed shade!
Sleep on, the father of the free!
The trees that guard the southern glade,
Their tender sobs are all for thee!
The oak that decks our northern vale
And boldly braves the drifting snows
Through summer calm or winter hail
Shall teach defiance to thy foes.
—M. V. Gormley.

"IN LIGHTER VEIN."

When Washington Felt Like It, He Could Unbend Like Other Folks.

Notwithstanding that it is now generally conceded that Washington was thoroughly human and not at all a man who had his emotions and passions under perfect control, as his earlier biographers would have it, he was not often wont to unbend himself in the presence of any one not of his immediate family. Once, however, when he dined with Chief Justice Ellsworth of Connecticut at the latter's residence in Windsor, he relaxed completely.

During his stay in the house he was taken into the nursery and introduced to the chief justice's twin boys, who were later to be known as Governor Ellsworth and Hon. Henry L. Ellsworth. These boys were taken up by the great man and each placed upon a knee. Then the personage sang to them this version of

WASHINGTON SINGING "THE DERBY RAM."

"THE DERBY RAM."

As I was going to Derby
Upon a market day
I spied the biggest ram, sir,
That ever was fed on hay.
Tow de row de row,
Tow de row de da!

He had four feet to walk, sir;
He had four feet to stand,
And every foot he had, sir,
Covered an acre of land.

The wool upon his back, sir,
It reached unto the sky,
And eagles built their nests there,
For I heard their young ones cry.

The wool upon his tail, sir,
I heard the weaver say,
Made three thousand yards of cloth, sir,
For he wove it all in a day.

There seems to be no sort of doubt about the authenticity of this anecdote, as it has been handed down in the Ellsworth family from generation to generation to the present representatives thereof.

WASHINGTON'S SCHOOLDAYS.

He Never Learned to Spell, but He Got a Solid Knowledge of Mathematics.

As a matter of fact little is known about George Washington's schooldays. His first teacher was named Hobby, and he was sexton as well as pedagogue of the Virginia parish in which the Washington family settled. Hobby was not a man of wide information or of deep culture. It is to be inferred that he knew how to write legibly and to teach the art skillfully, for the one pupil of his school who was destined to be illustrious wrote a clear plain hand. But, judging from the letters and other writings of the immortal George that are now extant, the teacher knew very little about orthography. At least he taught young George very little, for his spelling would drive a modern schoolmaster to drink. Possibly it was his pupil's inability or lack of desire to learn to spell that brought about the lack of cordiality that is said to have existed between them, though it is stated on excellent authority that in a very short time after entering Hobby's school the pupil knew as much if not more than the master.

WASHINGTON'S SIGNATURE AT THIRTEEN.

Washington, pere, died in 1743, when Washington, fils, was but 11 years old. He then went to live with his half brother Augustine and attended a school kept by a man named Williams. There he studied no language but the English, and, the story goes, devoted little attention to that, confining himself principally to mathematics. This stood him in good stead when he became a surveyor.

The future general and first president of this republic, at the time he went to school to Mr. Williams, was tall, active and muscular and was so generally considered quite capable of thrashing any one of his companions that no one ever had the temerity to pick a quarrel with him.

Crushed Again.

We celebrate today with glee
Great George's birth.
Although he could not tell a lie,
Yet most men can and do. That's why

THE FIRST ENGRAVING OF WASHINGTON.

Here is a reproduction, without color, of the first engraving ever made of George Washington. The only print known to be in existence at this time is in possession of Charles F. Gunther of Chicago, whose collection of relics of the Father of His Country ranks very high indeed. The original print is all in black, except for the blanket on the horse, which is colored red and yellow, and the rider's coat, which is blue, with yellow epaulets, and a red sash across the breast.

IF HE HAD DREAMED

THE PROPHETIC VISION THAT MIGHT HAVE VISITED WASHINGTON.

The Federation Was to Grow From an Insignificant Power In the Wilderness to One of the Most Powerful and Extensive Nations of the Earth.

Suppose George Washington had dreamed of the future greatness of the popular empire he was so instrumental in founding.

Suppose that when his heart was most cast down, when he and his little army of ragged continentals were freezing and starving through the short days and long nights of the winter at Valley Forge, he had lain down to sleep and been privileged to behold a prophetic vision. It would have been one of the most wonderful dreams that have ever visited mortal man. It would have given him new life, new heart, new strength. Not many of those who will peruse these lines have the slightest idea of the marvels that would have been unfolded to the Father of His Country in that vision even though they daily behold them.

All Americans know abstractly the progress of the republic has been unexampled in the history of the world and the race, but few have any comprehension of the glorious facts, which are really so notable that he who can contemplate them without an accession of patriotic feeling is a poor coot, a creature in whose veins there circulates a fluid more like rainwater than the strong and virile blood of healthy manhood.

When Washington was at Valley Forge, the people for whom he was fighting the battles that should weld the colonies into one of the chief nations of the earth occupied, and but sparsely, only a narrow strip of territory along the Atlantic coast. It was but partially subdued. There were no roads worth speaking of, nearly all manufactured products had to be brought from abroad, the institutions of learning were feeble and widely scattered, of culture there was great lack, and the beginnings of art and literature on this side of the Atlantic were yet to be made.

Now—now the United States is one of the dominant powers of the whole earth, and if there is serious lack in any direction of human progress whatever it is only because not quite time enough has yet elapsed since the first blow for American independence was struck. In all considerings of the growth and evolution of this land and nation it should be remembered that the nation is not yet quite 118 years old and that at its birth more than nine-tenths of its territory was a wilderness absolutely untrodden by the white man.

George Washington's dream at Valley Forge would have been of a nation of 70,000,000 souls, or more than 20 times as great as the population then, for in 1780 there were, according to the first federal census, but 3,070,000 inhabitants here. He would have been vastly amazed no doubt by the fact that in less than 120 years the residents of the United States were to bear the numerical proportion of 7 to 4 when compared with the population of the British isles. He would have marveled at the wonderful urban growth of the nation he was founding, and the fact that beside a round half dozen of the cities that were to be in the United States the London of that day was a small town would have seemed incredible.

He could not but have been amazed by the territorial growth of the country as revealed in his dream, for among other things he would have seen that all France could be put down within the area of the largest state of the Union of the future and leave sufficient vacant space from which to lay out a country as large as Turkey in Europe. Yet the figures of such a dream would have been more than true, for the area of Texas is 265,780 square miles, that of France 204,092 and that of Turkey in Europe but 61,200, so that even after taking France and Turkey from the Lone Star State's territory a strip of land 10 miles wide and 48 4-5 miles long would be left over.

Possibly that would have been the most startling of all the features of the dream to him, for France occupied no doubt a very prominent place in all his thoughts by reason of its friendly attitude to the new power this side the sea, but it would have been really of less import than the fact that the distance from the as yet unfounded capital of the new republic to the most remote state thereof was nearly a third as much again as the distance between London and St. Petersburg. And yet that again is true, and the traveler who should journey as far eastward from Paris—then, as now, the capital of France—as from Washington, the capital of the United States, to Tacoma, would pass through Rome, once the capital of the greatest empire of paganism, to Constantinople, the ancient capital of the Byzantine empire, on through Turkey, in Europe, into Persia and to Teheran, its capital, and still more startling comparisons of distances might be made if Alaska, the unorganized arctic possessions of the republic, were to be taken into consideration.

Washington's dream would have shown him, moreover, that in the years to come his country was to lead all others in the production of wheat; of silver; of all but one, the then undiscovered giant island, Australia, in the output of gold; was to be second to Great Britain only in the mining of coal, was to be exceeded in foreign commerce only by Great Britain and Germany, and was to possess a larger internal commerce and better facilities for internal communication than any other nation in the world. He would have seen, too, that his country was to be uniformly successful in whatever wars it became involved in with foreign powers, and that it was to be wrenched and torn by the most stupendous civil strife the world has ever beheld; that, principally owing to its existence and development, a new problem in the affairs of government—the labor question—was to arise and that the differences between kings and potentates were sometimes insignificant by the side of the contests between employers and employees.

In place of the few schools, the scattered writers, who treated almost exclusively of politics, and the almost nonexistent artist classes, he would have beheld vast universities equal in most respects to the most venerable old world institutions of learning and excelling them in some regards, a literary class larger in proportion to population than anywhere else on earth, especially if those in active journalism be included, and a great, enthusiastic and successful following of every so called artistic calling in the world.

Many things would have puzzled him immensely, no doubt. The problems of today, from their very magnitude, if from no other cause, would probably have seemed quite as difficult as those which confronted him at Valley Forge, perhaps more so. There would have been many apparent crudities. The telegraph, the railroad, the telephone, the phonograph, the trolley car, the new woman, the municipal boss, the mop headed football player, the pretty typewriter, the bicyclist of both sexes—all these would have amazed him not less perhaps than the polyglot speech of the vast population and the vastly different costumes and customs of the people.

WHEN WASHINGTON WANTED MONEY

During His Retirement at Mount Vernon the Sheriff Was Constantly Threatening.

Down to the date of his leaving the command of the continental troops and "retiring" to Mount Vernon the life of Washington had been one continual series of anxieties and conflicts, but these had been borne on behalf of the public and not himself or any of his friends or family. He was to find, however, that contests and struggle come to the private individual as well as to the man of affairs, and these smaller matters were to greatly try his soul, whereat perhaps many of the rest of us, who are sometimes unduly worried by small matters, may take courage to begin anew.

It may have been anticipated by Washington that after a military career with a triumphant termination he might find plantation life a little irksome, but he never complained of that. He did complain, and bitterly, however, of his lack of money. His complainings were not unnatural, seeing that not before since his fifteenth birthday had he been hard up, and that both he and his wife had begun life in the possession of what were in those days "ample fortunes." Washington's straitened circumstances at this time were not in any sense due to extravagance or to lack of attention to business. On the contrary, he appears to have been one of the most industrious, most methodical and most frugal planters going. Every morning he was up at 4 o'clock, and clad in the coarsest homespun he rode daily 18 or 20 miles over his plantation, inspecting the crops and the work that was being done on them. Mrs. Washington was as industrious as her husband, as indeed she had to be, looking after the household on a plantation of thousands of acres like Mount Vernon. There were, however, times that might have been spent in recreation or possibly rest, but we are told that neither repose nor pleasure was indulged in at these times. Instead she devoted herself to "knitting fine woolen hosiery" for herself, her family and its friends. One would at first imagine that the Father of His Country and his spouse lived the lives of a pair of money grubbers but for the further recorded fact that at least once a week "the horns rang out through the merry glades, ladies and gentlemen in scarlet coats and dresses followed the baying hounds, the gray fox doubled through the mazy woods, and Washington, with shouts and cheers, mounted on his fleetest horse, was always in at the death."

The administration of the estate and household at this time is reported to have been almost perfect. Visitors were charmed with universal order and simplicity, but the cruel fact remained that the man who had won the American Revolution could not pay his bills and was constantly being annoyed by the sheriffs, who threatened with a "distress," whatever that may have been. Washington tried hard to sell a part of his land in order that he might meet some of his more pressing obligations, but in vain. He had plenty of money, such as it was, awarded to him by congress, but it was nearly worthless through depreciation.

He wrote to his mother, then an old woman, and described his situation tersely, saying that he knew not "where to find a shilling." Finally in 1788 he had to borrow a few hundred pounds of a neighbor, to whom he wrote in apology for soliciting aid: "I have put off the sheriff of the county three times. If he comes again, I must suffer him to make distress."

Just when his personal affairs were at the lowest ebb he was again called by his country, but not to war. This time his services were needed at the constitutional convention, and the results of that gathering are well known. The constitution was adopted, Washington was made president, and the life of the federal government was begun.

Didn't Admire Washington's Taste.

Billy (who has been taken by his mother to see a woman 104 years old)—Ma says George Washington kissed old Mrs. Centuria when she was a baby.

Bobby—I always did think he was a fool ever since I heard about the hatchet and the cherry tree, and now I know it!

Washington's Dress and Manners.

Washington was neat and careful in his dress, but not the least inclined to foppishness. Whatever he made use of or wore he wished to be in good taste and the best of its kind. He was fond of children, considerate of the feelings of others, kind and liberal to servants, punctual to engagements, circumspect in his intercourse with people in general, painstaking and explicit in his business transactions. A memorandum in his journal of 1748 gives minute directions to his tailor, which begins as follows: "Have my coat made by the following directions, to be made a Frocke with Lapel Breast," etc. The memorandum is long and very specific in its directions.

HE HAD HIS FAULTS.

ONE OF THE GREATEST OF MEN, WASHINGTON WAS QUITE HUMAN.

The Tendency of Modern Historical Investigation Is Not to Lift Men Upon Cold and Snowy Pinnacles—His Strong Will, His Energy and His Perseverance.

[Copyright, 1895, by American Press Association.]

The tendency which promoted great leaders to the honors of the godhead did not altogether cease with the mythmaking period. Carlyle emphasizes hero worship as the salt which saves poor human nature from dry rot. In other words, it upholds concrete ideals as object lessons to fire the imagination, singing the chant:

On one clear harp of many tones
That men may rise on stepping stones
Of their dead selves to higher things.

It is more than an open question whether this instinct is not easily carried to excess vitiating its own purpose. The idealization of the hero, if it petrifies its object and lifts him above the blood warmth of the human atmosphere, makes the pattern man less virile and vital. Such until a recent period was the tone of historic discussion dealing with George Washington. Chief Justice Marshall, then Jared Sparks, then Washington Irving, who wrote the standard lives of our pater patriæ, followed this method of conception and planted a marble colossus high up on a pedestal in the freezing cold. It was an impeccable deity, before which humanity should bow down and burn perpetual incense, half stifling itself in the fumes.

The more recent tendencies of historic study, what we may term the realistic school, take Washington down from his arctic perch, and without lessening his genuine greatness make him vastly more lovable. He is presented to us in flesh and blood and not in stone. We find that he was a man of very human faults as well as of virtues; that he could give way to fits of fiery wrath and could swear terribly in such moods; that he was very sensitive alike to applause and criticism; that he was often hasty, even harsh, in his judgments, and that he loved dearly to have his own way and could enforce it with an imperious will.

Washington's lack of schooling was quite as complete as that of Abraham Lincoln. He never knew much about that magic wand, the pedagogue's birch. His learning was the fruit of attrition, contact with men and affairs, and he was plunged into a very whirlpool of it when scarcely more than a lad. He was only 23 when he saved the beaten remnant of Braddock's forces, and this was by no means his first trust of importance. With the bluest blood of the colonies running in his veins, he was naturally an aristocrat in the conventional as well as the nobler sense of the word. Noblesse oblige, to live up to the finest there was in him, was a law of life as natural as breathing. Probably none but an aristocrat, one forced by social position from mere boyhood into a great number of public responsibilities, would have had the chance to have so proved his sterling value. This stamp on the coin made him by general choice the picked man of men to lead the Americans in the field when the thundercloud of the Revolution burst. All the traditions of his family and training molded him into a conservative. By instinct and preference he was a royalist. But when he reluctantly felt himself lifted on the tide of public sentiment, swelling through all the colonies, he gave himself heart and soul to the work. It may be too nice a point of speculation, but one is tempted to believe that had Washington been one whit more of the demagogue, one whit less of the aristocrat, he would have failed to have welded that permanent adherence of men of blood, family and social prestige to the Revolutionary cause on which success so much depended.

Judged by all the laws of military probability the American Revolution should have been a failure. It was a house divided against itself. There were almost as many Tories as patriots. The enemy was the greatest power then existing by land and sea. Among the chief causes which finally assured the triumph of the colonies, the personal factor, the leadership of George Washington, was not the least important. As a military genius he does not rank among the first 10, scarcely perhaps among the world's second 20 great soldiers. Yet critics of the art of war, if they find few magnificent coups, can scarcely point to a mistake in his military plans. In the talents of the statesmen he was not great—scarcely even commonplace as orator and writer. He was essentially the man of affairs, not the man of words. It was his profound and imperturbable sagacity, a lighthouse shining serenely above the beat and roar of the waves, that made him a master of men. It was common sense raised to its superlative and become genius. Temperament and character entered into it equally with mind. The final product was one of those personalities so symmetrical and balanced as to stand isolated among the world's leaders. Perhaps nowhere else in history do we find a great man with whom the absolute touchstone of right and wrong was the golden test, one in whom the perception of right and wrong was so luminous and direct. All classes, plebeian and gentle, poor and rich, felt that here was a tower of safety, rock bottomed in integrity and strength,

Four square to every wind that blew.

So Washington has continued to the world's eye a type of the public servant whose patriotic devotion never bends from the straight line of what is essentially and eternally true. He was not a typical American, for Americanism has crystallized since his day. He was far more nearly an Englishman in taste and habit. But he is in no sense national or racial as a historic figure. He belongs to the whole world as much as Homer or Shakespeare.

G. T. FERRIS.

WASHINGTON CHRONOLOGY.

Born in Westmoreland county, Va., Feb. 22 (old style Feb. 11), 1732.

Made commander of the northern military district of Virginia by Lieutenant Governor Dinwiddie when but 19 years of age, in 1751.

Sent to warn the French away from their new forts in western Pennsylvania at the outbreak of the French and Indian war in 1753.

Made commander in chief of all the Virginia forces in 1755.

Commanded the advance guard of the expedition that captured Fort Duquesne in 1758, shortly after which he married Mrs. Custis.

Wrote concerning the "nonimportation resolution," which had just reached him, advising opposition to the policy of the ministry April 5, 1769.

Appointed as one of seven delegates by the Virginia convention to the continental congress in 1774. His national career may be said to have begun with this appointment. He had previously served as a member of the state legislature for several terms.

Commissioned commander in chief of the continental troops June 15, 1775, after the fight at Lexington and Concord. Reached Cambridge July 2, after the battle of Bunker Hill, which occurred June 17.

Jan. 2, 1776, Washington hoisted the Union flag, consisting of seven stripes, like in the flag of today, but with the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew in the field of blue in the corner.

After nearly a year of the most trying sort drove the British out of Boston, March 17, 1776. After this Washington went to New York, signed the Declaration of Independence, which was adopted July 4, and had the document read to his soldiers July 9, 1776.

Battle of Long Island Aug. 28. Evacuation of New York by Washington.

Crossed to New Jersey, was pursued across the state into Pennsylvania, recrossed the Delaware Christmas night, captured Trenton and 1,000 Hessian soldiers. Battle of Princeton, Washington victorious, Jan. 3, after which his headquarters were established at Morristown, N. J.

After various maneuvers, lasting through the spring and summer, and accepting the proffered aid of DeKalb,

HOUSE IN WHICH THE FAREWELL WAS WRITTEN.

Kosciusko, Pulaski, Steuben and Lafayette, Washington engaged Howe at Brandywine Creek, Sept. 11, 1777. Attacked British troops in Germantown Oct. 4, but was driven back, after which headquarters were established in Valley Forge.

Suffered great hardships with his men all that winter, was plotted against, but not abased, by his rivals for the place of commander in chief, fought the battle of Monmouth early June 28, 1778, and after a summer and autumn devoid of any great battles in which Washington took part went into winter quarters near Middlebrook, N. J.

Seventeen hundred and seventy-nine was marked by no special battles in which Washington was commander, and the same was true of 1780, but it was his firmness and everlasting watchfulness that forced inaction on the part of the British. The capture and execution of Andre and the flight of Arnold, the traitor, occurred in 1780, and both years there were notable successes on the part of the continental troops in the south and elsewhere.

Surrender of Yorktown and Gloucester, Va., by General Cornwallis to Washington, Oct. 19, 1781.

British evacuated New York Nov. 25, 1783. Washington as commander in chief bade farewell to his officers Dec. 4, and resigned his commission as commander in chief to congress Dec. 28, after which he returned to his home at Mount Vernon.

Sent by Virginia to the constitutional convention held in Philadelphia in May, 1787.

Elected first president of the United States by the unanimous vote of the electors in 1789, he was formally inaugurated in New York April 30, 1789. He was re-elected in 1792 and retired from the presidency in 1797.

Made commander in chief of the provincial army, raised in expectation of a war with France, in 1798.

Died, after a brief illness, Dec. 14, 1799.

Washington Sometimes Despondent.

It is the fashion to speak of all who have succeeded in writing their names high on history's page as though they never gave way to the temptation to be despondent. Yet if the facts could only be known it is the very men who have within themselves the ability to finally win the victory that are apt at times to become most deeply involved in the sloughs of despond. Washington himself was subject to periods of the most intense depression, as witness this passage from a letter to a friend, written at Valley Forge:

"The history of the war is a history of false hopes and temporary expedients. Would to God they were to end here."

In another letter he said after a most gloomy recital of the reasons he had for being low spirited:

"To me it will appear miraculous if our affairs can maintain themselves much longer in their present train."

But Washington possessed the power of recovering from these fits of the blues and of putting forth every effort, after they were over, as if they had never fallen to his lot, and therein lay the true secret of his final triumph and his imperishable glory.

CHAPTER V.

"Is it possible that you do not know, that you do not feel, I love you, Angela? That my most ardent desire is to call you my wife! to have you with me always, sweet one. I have longed to tell you so a dozen times, but I was afraid of speaking too soon!"

He paused abruptly and stood looking at her anxiously. Angela had turned very white, and did not speak for a moment.

"I am greatly surprised," she said, at last, meeting his gaze with grave, steady eyes. "I did think you liked me, and was pleased, for I like you; but that you would make up your mind to venture on marrying a girl you know so little—it is little more than a month since we met—a girl not even in your own rank of life—seems incredible! It is the wildest imprudence!"

"That is your fault!" exclaimed Forrester, bluntly. "It may be imprudent or what you like, but I am ready to run all risks, for I know you are the only woman I ever met who seemed to be indispensable to my happiness! Don't tell me you cannot care for me, or that you love any other fellow. Speak to me, and let me know how I stand!"

"I do not love anyone in the way you mean! Not even you"—the color rose slowly and softly in her cheek—"but I think you are kind and true. Still I dare not promise to marry you all at once! You must take time to think and so must I. You must go away and consult your friends."

"Not I!" he exclaimed. "I am a free man, and able I think to promise you most of the comforts and pleasures that money can give, but, to be perfectly frank, I am not quite sure. A relative is asserting a claim to a fortune I thought my own. However, my legal adviser thinks there is but small cause for alarm." Angela did not appear to heed this. She stood in deep thought looking down. Forrester ventured to take her hand.

"What is your decision, then?" he asked.

"Oh! let us both take time to think," she said, in an unsteady voice, while her hand closed nervously unconsciously on his. "Do not come to see me for—oh! for some time. Go away among your own kind of people. See other women. Make sure that you really need me, and I will think of you. I do not want to love you. I dread being unhappy. It would annihilate me."

"And when may I return?" asked Forrester, kissing the hand he held, thrilled by her admission that she feared to love him.

"Oh! I cannot say. A fortnight; three weeks. How long do you think?"

"Twenty-four hours," he replied, laughing. "No! I accept the test. I will go out of town for a fortnight. At the end of my banishment I will come up to hear my sentence. Keep me in your mind, I beseech you, and think favorably of all I have said. I wish you could read my heart."

"I wish I could. I wish I understood my own," she said, softly, earnestly. "Good-by, Capt. Forrester."

"Good-by, Angela! I will not call you Miss Cavallo. I trust that you will be 'Angela' to me till death us do part. I should like to write you a letter you could show to—"

"No, no!" she interrupted, decidedly. "We must both be perfectly free, and a fortnight is too slight a test! You must be away a full month, indeed you must!" Forrester pleaded a little longer, but Angela was firm, so again kissing her hand, he reluctantly departed.

It was a bad time to leave town, as most of Forrester's friends were themselves in London, save a few votaries of fishing.

"It's an absurd freak this of yours," said Dixon to his friend and c'ient, as they sat together in the former's private room, the day after the foregoing interview.

"Oh! I am not a London man; I like a scamper in the country, and I'll have a look at that place on the borders. I see it is advertised again."

"Pray be cautious. Our opponents seem very cocksure from some items of information that have reached me. I am rather sorry I sent off that money to India."

"I'm not! Even if I am robbed of my inheritance my kinswoman can well afford a couple of thousand."

"That's rather an unprincipled speech, Forrester. I am afraid it will be some time before you are put out of suspense, for there is a heap of business just now in the probate court."

"It is all an infernal nuisance," cried Forrester, impatiently.

"Very natural you should think so, but 'time and the hour run through the darkest day.' It is well you took my advice and postponed sending in your papers."

"Oh, don't croak, Dixon! I believe it will all come right, so good-by, old chap. I will let you know my movements from time to time."

"Yes, do, and I'll keep you informed of the state of affairs here." They shook hands, and Forrester went on his way—if not rejoicing, at least not seriously disturbed.

The succeeding weeks left an impression of restless discontent on the gallant lancer's memory. He wandered to and fro, finding one place more intolerable than another. He tried his hand at fishing, and vowed old Johnson was right when he described it as a rod with a fly at one end and a fool at the other. He visited various shooting boxes advertised for sale, and arranged in his own mind how the most attractive of them should be refitted and decorated to receive his bride—if Angela would consent to be his—of which he felt less and less secure as time passed by. He began letters to her and tore them up, second thoughts suggesting that he must not disobey her injunctions; but the longer he was absent from her the more intensely he longed to see her again, and the more his heart and his thoughts dwelt upon every minutiae of their meeting and acquaintance. At last he began to revive, as his term of banishment was more than half over, and the companionship of an old friend, the ex-surgeon-major of his regiment, who had retired and settled himself in good sporting quarters to enjoy the sweets of a comfortable bachelor existence, helped him not a little to get through the days, and especially the evenings. From this retreat a letter from Dixon summoned him.

"I wish you would return at once. I have a letter from Henderson, the Selwyns' solicitor, who asks for an interview to-morrow. I fancy he has something important to communicate. you had therefore better be on the spot," wrote the lawyer, and Forrester jumping happily to the conclusion that his opponents had found their position untenable and wished to make terms of some kind, and rejoicing at any necessity for returning to London, packed his portmanteau and drove off across "moor and mountain" to catch the night mail train at the station nearest his friend's house, where he had been staying for the past week.

"You have bad news for me, Dixon!" was Forrester's exclamation as they shook hands next morning in the former's office, where he hurried after making his toilette and eating his breakfast with appetite unimpaired by the anxiety, which nevertheless had grown on him through the darkness and silence of his journey.

"Yes, real bad news, I am sorry to say," returned Dixon, gravely.

"Out with it, then," said Forrester, laying aside his hat and drawing a chair opposite his friend.

"The interview proposed by Miss Selwyn's solicitor was prompted by an unusually conciliatory spirit. It was to show me the overwhelming proofs they hold of her priority to yourself as heir to your late grand-uncle, and propose an amicable settlement of the affair, so saving law expenses."

"What the devil! Do you mean to tell me that I must give up the fortune and go back to the old battle with insufficient means, without making a fight?"

"I am afraid, my dear fellow, there is nothing else for it," and Dixon proceeded to lay the facts of the case before his client. It appeared that Miss Selwyn was legitimate. The certificate of her father's and mother's marriage in an obscure village church, as well as her own birth, a couple of years later, in a German town, were in her solicitor's hands.

George Selwyn, a man of weak character, had been overwhelmed with grief when his wife died, not long after the birth of their daughter, and gladly accepted the offer to adopt her made by the child's maternal aunt, who was housekeeper in a noble family, and well off for her station. From thence forward he seemed to forget that he was a father, and his sister-in-law, never quite believing in the legality of his marriage, and too glad to keep the motherless little girl as her own, lost sight of Selwyn until, about a year before his death, she received a packet addressed her in his handwriting and accompanied by a letter in which he directed that the packet should not be opened until the little Sarah was nineteen, or his brother John was dead. He had always cherished the hope of reconciliation with his wealthy, powerful brother, who would never have forgiven him a low marriage. But death took him from mundane hopes and schemes.

The news of John Selwyn's death did not reach his niece till a considerable time after the event. Then her aunt opened the packet and found the papers now in her solicitor's hands, nor did the fact that his intestacy transformed her adopted daughter into an heiress occur to her till suggested by a friend of her husband who also recommended her to a solicitor.

THE GERMAN BALL.

MUCH MERRY SPORT ON WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY EVE.

Members and Guests of the Gesang and Turn Verein Enjoy a Masquerade Dance and Supper.

The seventh annual masquerade ball of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein took place in their hall on Somerset street Thursday evening. The entire hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, between 300 and 400 being present. The grand march started precisely at 9:30, led by Chas. Meyer, who was followed by the rest of the committee arrayed in gorgeous costumes, made especially for the occasion.

On entering the hall it was a beautiful sight to see the merry masqueraders at their height of frolic, under the glaring gaslight. On the walls were sketches of numerous funny people. Some very fine costumes were worn by those present, noticeable among those being Miss Sadie Connors and Mrs. Charles McIntosh, who were undoubtedly leading belles of the evening. At 12 all unmasked, and a march was again played, and all went down stairs to partake of an excellent supper.

The women who looked after the interests of the inner man were Mrs. William Belter, Mrs. Geo. Feller. Mrs. Bechtel, Mrs. Andrew Schlick and Miss O. Kellar.

The committee, in costume, were photographed yesterday.

Nothing happened during the entire evening to mar the pleasures of the merry crowd. The ball was in every way a success. Good order was maintained all the evening, and the committee deserve credit for the manner in which the affair was handled.

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. LIVING PICTURES OF 1776.

A Martha Washington Tea Gives an Idea of Colonial Society.

Powdered hair and colonial costumes, together with a liberal display of the red, white and blue, gave the parlors of the First Presbyterian Church an air of patriotism last night, when the women of the Sunday-school served a Martha Washington tea, that was appropriate to the day.

The character of Martha, who was the presiding functionary of tea, was portrayed by Mrs. J. M. Bettman, and that of George by George O. Stevens.

At the head of the serving table Martha poured coffee and at the other end Mrs. Ladd poured tea, while flitting in and out among the seven other tables the following young women served the guests: Misses Blish, Ladd, Overton, Herring, VanWinkle, Vermeule, Petrie, Dayton, Glenn and Remsen.

The following were the committee who had general charge of the affair: Mesdames Bettman, Ladd, Dunn, Pope, Misses Blish, Remsen, Blair and Petrie.

The supper was given for the benefit of the carpet fund, and a handsome sum was realized for that purpose.

THE SECOND BAKING.

Bread Wagon Burned in North Plainfield's Leading Thoroughfare.

The curious sight of a wagon enveloped in flames was a spectacle that greeted the vision of pedestrians and residents of Somerset street near Warren Engine House at 8 yesterday morning. The vehicle belonged to Henry A. Voehl, baker. It was his best wagon, and had just returned from the early morning delivery, preparatory to starting on another route. Like all bakery wagons, it was a covered one, and on the inside was a lighted lantern which is used for illumination before daylight, and which had not yet been extinguished.

It is evident that the lantern exploded while the driver, Mr. Voehl, was in the bakery, for the attention of several bystanders was attracted by smoke and fire coming from the inside of the wagon. Before water could be obtained and the flames quenched the upper portion of the wagon, which was a new one, was destroyed, together with a small amount of bread, etc. The horse was prevented from running away, and taken from the shafts.

Danced in Memory of George.

To the tuneful music of Windnagle's orchestra 75 merry couples tripped in with fantastic steps the 163d birthday of George Washington in the T. A. B. Hall on East Fourth street Thursday night. The dance was given by the T. A. B. society, and the committee of arrangements was as follows: P. J. Reville, P. J. Mack, C. McCarthy, P. Cullen and M. O'Keefe.

The dancing commenced at 9:30, and during the intermission between 12 and 1 an entertainment was furnished by a colored quartette, which afforded a pleasant change to the programme. A number was present from Bound Brook.

The management of the floor was in charge of P. Reville and C. McCarthy.

GAY MINSTRELS' NIGHT

With Wild Delight to See the Show the People Flock.

FOR EVERYONE 'T WAS LOTS OF FUN

Except the "Tea at Four o'Clock"—Though Play Fell Flat, the Songs Were Fat, and All the Jokes Made Laughter Loud—But 'Tis Confessed That Some Liked Best the Rough and Tumble of the Crowd.

As the sands pour down in the hourglass, so poured the people into the Casino of the Union County Country Club Thursday night, when the Muhlenberg Hospital Benefit took place. You who have seen the mass of minute particles push at the tiny opening and pile up with amazing rapidity in the other bulb, can imagine how the crowd surged through the door of the cozy playhouse and took possession. Those of you who were there, need no description to remind you of the football rush in which you participated.

A big attendance had been expected, from the first mention of the project. Amateur performances by Plainfield society talent have never known failure, and the Hospital has a big place in the popular heart. All the members of the Woman's Auxiliary Board, and other prominent women in addition, were patronesses, the drug stores had tickets for sale, and the newspapers were advertising the affair liberally.

Lewis G. Timpson, who was hustling the business management of the show, saw how things were going, and advised that Music Hall be engaged because it was so much larger. That was vetoed, and he suggested that the Casino seats be reserved. The Board of Governors of the Hospital said no, that everyone must stand an equal chance of getting a good seat. So the sale of tickets went merrily on without reserve. There were 70 patronesses; and with that eagerness to sell all her allotment of tickets which characterizes the Plainfield patroness and makes her an invaluable adjunct to a social charity entertainment, each industriously performed her part, generally with calm disregard of Manager Timpson's frantic appeals to render him an accounting a few days before the performance. Many of the fair ticketsellers had not made returns up to the night of the entertainment, and 15 had n't been heard from up to last night, so no one knew how many seats had been disposed of. Provision was made for an extra crowd, by the placing of 75 more seats, the weather was doubtful, and the management trusted to Providence, and to the hard times that make amusement managers mournful, to keep the attendance within the capacity of the house.

But the dark skies and the rain and snow squalls gave place to beautiful starlight; the electric street lighting circuit of the Casino district broke down, giving to a promenade or a drive that additional attraction of a spice of adventure and romance which black night under a brilliant heaven always inspires; and the Country Club's home was a pretty blaze for the society butterflies to flutter to.

At 7 those wise in their generation began to gather. The fiat had gone forth that the doors would be opened exactly at 7:30, but previous experiences had taught some that there was a way to the Casino through the clubhouse. This precedent, however, appeared to have been abrogated, the order being that not one person should be admitted to the Casino till the 7:30 stroke; and so the earlycomers just had to accumulate, and struggle, and pound on the doors that were shut in front of them.

The ticket-takers peeped with alarm at the fast-gathering crowd, and went through a series of athletic drills and braced their backs with oak planks, preparatory to tackling the oncoming onslaught.

As a result of the indoor council of war, only one narrow door was thrown back when the time for opening came. Even through that the people poured almost too fast for the ticket-takers to handle. Many had tickets ready, and many cast dollar bills instead into the treasurers' hands, and all swept on into the hall and took possession. The ushers made a valiant stand, but in spite of their good looks and politeness they were supremely ignored. It was society's night, the Plainfield public's night, and society and the Plainfield public swarmed everywhere and swooped down upon the seats and forthwith occupied them all without the aid of conventional escorts.

Charles J. Fisk, the Puck of the Country Club, never broke his perennial smile as he said to Manager Timpson "If you want police to keep back the crowd and drive out all those who have n't bought tickets in advance, I 'll get you all the cops you need." One bluecoat was outside, a spectator, and Chief Engineer Doane of the Fire Department was at hand in his handsome uniform and handsome form, ready to bring on the apparatus if the friction of the rush generated a blaze.

There were two streams of people, converging at the door. One line had been formed on the piazza of the clubhouse, headed at the Casino entrance, and the second was massed on the Arlington avenue sidewalk and shoved its way up the steps. The chief ambition of each line was not to let the other get ahead faster than itself. So it was a lively time

Everybody was proud because nobody got mad, and the "characteristic good-nature of American crowds" was extolled as the most admirable of virtues. The elegant finery of feminine skirts was trampled, and the shapeliness of feminine gowns was crushed; headdress and toilettes on which hours had been spent, were tangled and battered into such uncomeliness as is well pictured in the sight of a discarded silk hat: what cared the wearers!—they were going to get there though it cost 'em their wardrobes, and they did n't often get a chance for that kind of fun At 7:50 the Casino was so full that an outsider who was crying "Hot tamales" said the windows bulged out into bows, and it was remarked that the big fat sandwiches of tickets and dollar bills in the hands of the men at the door had stretched their fingers into extension ladders. Every seat was full; every aisle was full; and there were more a-coming. Nobody fainted, and everybody smiled and felt good because no one had said a bad word.

The Casino looked well, as ever; the walls and arches and fireplace were still hung with green; and the animation, and the hum of voices, and the blaze of light, and the soft sweet music, were a rest after the general wrestling tournament. Rose's orchestra was playing, just as it plays in the Lyceum Theatre; the greatest show of the Plainfield season was about to begin; and everybody that knew one another was there to enjoy.

The vibrations of the stage curtains indicated that the performance was about to begin, when Mr. Fisk burst forth like a sunbeam and said:

"Through some fault of the management, the house has been largely oversold. We therefore announce that the entertainment will be repeated next Tuesday evening, and those who wish may retire and receive tickets for the second performance, or may get their money back, as they prefer." This was applauded, but not many went away. The house continued packed throughout. The actual attendance was 620. The seating capacity was 480. Eighty-five people paid at the door, and many latecomers were refused admission. Chief Engineer Doane prudently and firmly kept the aisles free from chairs.

A tinkle of the bell, a preliminary chord of music, and there came the gentle singing of "My Old Kentucky Home". The curtains were drawn apart, and the Plainfield amateur minstrels stood revealed in all their excellence. Blackface were they all, and wigged. The predominant costume was conventional evening dress, which Plainfield young men wear with such accustomed ease and grace. The end men wore white duck coats the fulness of whose skirts betokened that at some time they had done service as sails for Yankee cup-defenders; they were wonderful to behold in their matchless stiffness, and since they were laundered the price of starch must have jumped amazingly. Down the sides of the nether garments, also of white duck, ran gaudy broad red stripes; and red waistcoats peeped forth in glimpses above the collars of the tight-waisted coats whose mammoth wide-spreading skirts stood stiff, out like abbreviated and disarranged hoops. Jumbo chrysanthemums weighted each manly heart, and a tousled topknot stuck up from each crown like a medieval doorknob. The boutonnieres of the others were red and white pinks.

Two Georges were the Bonesee—George F. Schoonmaker and George O. Stevens; and the tambos were thumped and twirled by Howard W. Beebe and Clarence Cree. Mr. Cree was a foreign importation from Elizabeth, to remind Plainfield that she has n't all the brains and brightness of the earth; and all the others were home talent except Messrs. Taylor and Lehman, who had accommodatingly come from Lehigh University to fill the places of Fred G. Smith and C. W. Abbott, unfortunately kept home by illness.

Middleman Fred Walz had grouped about him besides these the following: Geo. B. Schoonmaker, Frank Cokefair, Robert Lewis, Arthur Freeman, Robert Clark, Will N. Runyon, Elmer E. Runyon, John Taylor, Jr., Fletcher D. Hallock, James H. Hallock, Elston French, B. Dalziell Schoonmaker, Nathaniel Miller, E. H. Janes, Frederick Denicke, and P. S. Castleman.

'Twas a bangup minstrel show; the jokes were clean, mostly new; the voices were good, and their songs tuneful; the instrumental music was fine; the local flings were witty without being unkind; there was a lively intermingling of humor and sentiment; the performers showed that it was possible for gentlemen to black up and give a minstrel show without a tiresome abundance of horseplay and without sinking their personality.

The opening overture was a medley of such airs as "There's a Little Spot in Ireland", "Do, Do, My Huckleberry Do", "Go to Sleep, My Baby", and the irresistible "Tommy Atkins", with incidental solos by Messrs. Cokefair, Cree and Stevens, and amusing antics by all the end men. Then, with many witticisms interspersed, the following programme was rendered:

Ballad—"Bedouin Love Song".
Arthur Freeman
Song—"If Barnum Were Alive".
George O. Stevens
Selection.....Banjo Club
Song—"Song of the Steeple".
Columbia College Quartette
A Few Remarks.....George Taggart
Song—"Standing on the Corner".
Clarence Cree
Ballad—"I Wonder".....Elmer E. Runyon
Plantation Medley.....Double Quartette
Xylophone Solo.....Fletcher D. Hallock
Topical Song.....Will N. Runyon
Finale.....Minstrel Troupe and Orchestra

The troupe was an aggregate of exceptional talent, and all won much praise and applause. The soloists all were encored, and all the jokes were laughed at. When there was sentiment, it was appreciated, even by the burlesquing Bonsee and Tambos, who wept crocodile tears. When there was fun—and it was always in evidence in some part of the stage—the buoyancy of hearts inspired forgetfulness of the weariness of standing in a crowd.

Some of the gags were wanderers recaptured—as that of the man who put business before pleasure and so appeared at the show instead of attending his mother-in-law's funeral, and who could find no complaint for her death—but even the backnumbers were given with a refreshing vim, and were spiced by the many new ones. A woman riding horseback up a hill was said to be like a big girl giving a little girl a little dog, because she gave a little gal a pup. Even this did n't cause a stampede for fresh air, but on the contrary the mirthful people cried like Oliver Twist for more.

George Hallock came in for a great ad in one of Stevens's gags. After Bones had wondered why Hallock as a temperance man did n't keep prohibition goods, he went on to explain that owing to the hard times all the goods in the store had taken a drop; that the first time he took one of Hallock's umbrellas out it got soaked; that when he put on a pair of Hallock's pants he found them full and after they had been worn out in the night dew they were the tightest pair he ever saw; that a coat he got of Hallock got on a terrible tear; and that one day when he went in the store he could n't find a collar that would stand up.

This, the audience heard, and shrieked with delight. Perhaps it was the way George told it. He was always funny, and a great hit. He was particularly good in his song, which Wade Whipple wrote especially for the occasion, and for which he was called out again and again. It ran:

IF BARNUM WERE ALIVE.

(AS SUNG BY GEORGE O. STEVENS.)

In traveling through the nation,
Alive to observation,
By day or night
Some novel sight
Will more than common note invite;
And when with application
To study them we strive,
We wonder where some folks would be—
If Barnum were alive.

CHORUS.

Ha, ha, ha! Ha, ha, ha!
There's some funny show,
Ha, ha, ha! Ha, ha, ha!
Everywhere we go.
And when such illustration
Assails our observation
We wonder where some folks would be—
If Barnum were alive.

Our city pas discerning
To trolley progress turning,
Will grant their prayer
If they will swear
To pave with gold the thoroughfare,
And give then of their earning
Per cent 'bout 25—
Now where as sharpers would they be,
If Barnum were alive! CHO—

Just note our Plainfield coppers—
As detectives they are whoppers—
So sleek and sly
When rogues they'd spy
A very shrewd disguise they try,
Brass buttons and blue toppers
To wear they do contrive—
Now where d'ye think these chaps would be,
If Barnum were alive! CHO—

There's Mr. Elmer Runyon—
He's neither corn nor bunion—
Beneath the hat
That covers pat [at,
The man who knows just where he's
Though bald as any onion,
Great thoughts within him strive—
You could not get him in a cage,
If Barnum were alive. CHO—

A health unto our Billy!
The chap who willy nilly
With song and jest
In genius drest
Will jar the buttons off your vest;
And up Fame's pathway hilly
At top he'll soon arrive,
And be the greatest show on earth—
Though Barnum were alive. CHO—

'Twould please me to continue
This song that seems to win you,
But there's no doubt
That I'm about
Of respiration quite played out;
And if my vocal sinew
To strain I'd further strive,
You'd shortly find that I would be,
Like Barnum—not alive. CHO—

Wade Whipple is the pen name for another Stevens, an uncle of George. The score as well as the verse was by him, except that W. E. MacClymont harmonized the chorus.

George Taggart was at his best, and his best can't be beat by any ordinary humorist. He came out in a Paderewski wig, checkered trousers that could be heard clear to Westfield, and a long linen duster that had been shredded into carpet rags. He explained his condition by saying he had been toying with Mr. McQuaide's dog. He said dawg, and looked hurt when some one told him to say dog. "That 's all right",—he replied—"I know that dog is right generally—but you have n't met this animal."

A New York friend of his—he continued—had spent Blizzard day with him, seeing the Plainfield country: they had viewed the City Park, and he being used to Central Perk confessed he had never seen anything like this; after enjoying the fountains and the statues they had taken a glimpse at Hotel Albino, and searched through the Public Library in an effort to find the public. They had inspected the residence of J. Parker Mason, famous for being the place where all the euchre prizes went; and they had skated on the New Brooklyn or New Market lake—he did n't know which, as he never could tell those two cities apart. Mr. Taggart concluded his running fire of witticisms with a realistic recitation of the New York Sun's great new poem "And the Young Man Sat and Waited". He was recalled, and gave a burlesque of Henry Irving, which was admirable and encored.

As if Elmer Runyon had not already been reminded of his Bill Nyeness, a fly was represented as taking possession of his cranium, and saying that as there was no heir apparent it had usurped the crown. Thomas Van Boskerck was reported to have named his horse "Oyster" because he made the saddle rock. Thus with jest and song merry and musical went the minstrel show. One of the chief hits of the night was the original song of Will Runyon, the genius and joker, who is always enthusiastically welcomed in public or private entertainment. He sang, with repeated recalls and amid uproarious applause, the following:

IF THE MAYOR WOULD ONLY GIVE HIS JOB TO ME.

(AS WRITTEN AND SUNG BY WM. N. RUNYON.)

I'll sing, dear friends, of several things that I would surely do—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me;
I'd reform the City Government and all the people too—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me:
I'd appoint J. Parker Mason to be Justice of the Peace,
And Charlie Fisk would get a job as Captain of Police;
With this great pair the greengoods men their victims could not fleece—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me.

CHORUS.

Oh, well, well, I really cannot tell
Of all the changes you would quickly see;
But you bet your hat we would all get fat—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me.

I'd build a fine new Court House and the dearest little Jail—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me:
I'd feed the inmates every day on buckwheat cakes and quail—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me;
I'd make Fred Andrews warden, and his ways so debonnaire
Would give the city prison such a real Hope Chapel air
That all the ministers in town would spend their Summers there—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me.
CHO—

A message to the City Fathers I would quickly send—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me;
And one reform much needed, I should strongly recommend—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me:
I would n't kick because they lay those sewer pipes so slow,
Nor if on Charlie Corwin's head more hair should start to grow,
But I would make that trolley run where someone wants to go—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me.
CHO—

The young men too who live in town, would quickly change their ways—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me;
I'd make a model set of them inside of thirty days—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me:
I'd capture Jimmy Leonard for my confidential clerk,
For Corporation Counsel I would nominate Bill Kirk,
And I'd have the Council pass a law to make Pete Matthews work—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me.
CHO—

The Courier-News and Daily Press would never scrap and fight—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me;
They would print nice things about each other every single night—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me:
I 'd mesmerize the Editors, and then there would be fun—
For out would come The Press and say "The Courier yanks the bun",
And the Courier-News in turn would call The Press "A Number 1"—
If the Mayor would only give his job to me,
CHO—

Now Mr. Gilbert, let me say, that you need never fear—
If you 'll only give your lovely job to me;
I 'll give you lots of work to do throughout the coming year—
If you 'll only give your lovely job to me;
I 'll hire the alleys downstairs, and I 'll set you there to bowl,
I 'll bring the town around each night to cheer you as you roll,
I 'll warrant you a steady line of pleasure, bless your soul!—
If you 'll only give your lovely job to me.

Mr. Freeman deserves praise, and won it, for his excellent singing of the difficult "Bedouin Love Song". "I've Been Working on the Levee" was a particularly appreciated melody by the double quartette, Messrs. Walz, G. B. Schoonmaker, Lewis, Clark, Runyon, Cokefair, Freeman, and W. N. Runyon. The Columbia College Quartette, Messrs. Miller, Denicke, Janes and Castleman, gave delightful music. The banjo club afforded full enjoyment through the deft fingers of

HOW THEY KEPT HIS DAY

They Sit Twelve Hours Discussing Many Measures.

Senate Employes Salaries Said To Be the Best in the Capitol—Breckinridge Criticises—Honors for the Mexican Government—May Hold Sessions on Sunday.

Washington, Feb. 23.—George Washington's birthday was celebrated by the house by sitting almost twelve hours with a recess from 5 to 8 o'clock last evening. It assembled at 11 a. m., under the order made yesterday, and adjourned at 10:30 p. m. The day day, and adjourned at 10:30. The day session was occupied mainly in the consideration of the deficiency bill for the year ending June 30, 1895, which was begun Thursday. There were matters which gave rise to extended debate. The first was the paragraph appropriating $140,000 to be paid by the attorney-general for expenses in enforcing the orders of United States courts for the protection of property in the hands of receivers during the railroad strikes of last summer. This was antagonized by Messrs. Livingston (dem., Ga.) and Boatner (dem., La.), and criticized by Mr. Breckinridge (dem., Ky.), in charge of the bill; and advocated by Messrs. Cannon (rep., Ill.); Henderson (rep., Ia.) and Sayers (dem., Tex.) An amendment was agreed to on motion by Mr. Baker (rep., N. H.) directing the attorney-general to report in detail to congress the disbursements under the appropriation, and in that form the item remained in the bill.

Cannot Get His Salary.

The other matter was a proposition to pay W. Jasper Blackburn salary as a representative from a Louisiana district, from March 4, 1867, to April 16, 1868. This led to a long discussion on a point of order, as to whether or not a vacancy existed in the district for that period, inasmuch as the state was not given representation in congress under the reconstruction acts until the latter date. The amendment was ruled out.

There was considerable discussion in the course of the session also regarding the policy of paving certain employes of the house for extra and special services over and above the salaries fixed. Mr. Cannon (rep., Ill.) took the ground that if it were necessary or desirable to make these offers in order to equalize the salaries of employes of the house, who, he said were the best paid men in government employ, except the employes of the senate, the house should take a day or two and rearrange the whole list.

The bill was not completed when the committee rose.

They Express Gratification.

Speaker Crisp announced the following members on the part of the house of the boards of visitors to the military and naval academies. To West Point—Messrs. Wheeler (dem., Ala.); Washington (dem., Tenn.) and Milliken (rep., Me.)

To Annapolis—Messrs. Sayers (dem., Tex.); Tate (dem., Ga.) and Hull (rep., Ia.)

The concurrent resolution passed by the senate yesterday, expressing the gratification of congress at the honors paid by the government of Mexico to the late Hon. Isaac P. Gray, minister to that country, was agreed to.

Before taking the recess at 5 o'clock, under the rule, the house passed the senate bill postponing, at the request of Great Britain, the enforcement of the international regulations of August, 1890, to prevent collisions at sea.

At 8 o'clock the house re-assembled for a session of two and a half hours to be devoted to the consideration of private pensions bills.

In the Senate.

The session of the senate was taken up almost exclusively with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and yet, when the senate adjourned at 5:35, that bill (after three days being devoted to it) was far from finished, and a proposition that the final vote should be taken on it before adjournment to-day requiring unanimous consent, was promptly negatived with an objection from Mr. Chandler (rep., N. H.)

A prior proposition that the vote should be taken at 3 p. m., to-day had been defeated by an objection from Mr. Pettigrew (rep., S. D.), who spoke of an attempt that was to be made at that hour to get up the railroad pooling bill and to sit it out—holding sessions this evening and Sunday. He gave notice that as soon as the Indian appropriation bill was disposed of legitimately, he would interpose delay in every way possible, and that the pooling bill would not become a law at this session of congress if he could prevent it; much less would it be considered on Sunday.

With business matters in this very unsatisfactory position and notwithstanding a warning from Mr. Call (dem., Fla.)—in charge of the Indian appropriation bill—that if that bill were not passed some of the great appropriation bills would fall, the senate quietly proceeded to the consideration of the executive business and at 5:35 adjourned.

Their Thrilling Ride.

Kent, O., Feb. 23.—John Willards, Harry Stratton, Samuel Parkerson and William Russell were the heroes of a thrilling ride on an ice boat on Lake Brady yesterday. The Russell boy constructed the boat and his companions helped him launch it. Sails were spread, the boys got aboard and away went the boat like a streak of lightning. The lake is about a mile long and it is estimated that the boat was just thirty seconds in reaching the other end where it ran into land and struck a tree. The machine was demolished and the boys were more or less injured.

Senators' Black Eyes.

Denver, Feb. 23.—A disgraceful row occurred in the state senate yesterday. Senator Mills in the course of debate called Senator Peace a liar. Mills then threw a paper weight at Peace and the senators clinched and fought viciously. The result was four black eyes and a lively flow of blood. The contestants were finally separated. The senate ordered an investigation of the fracas and adjourned.

HAVE NOTHING TO ARBITRATE.

Monday To Witness the Greatest Strike in New York.

New York, Feb. 23.—The executive board of the board of delegates of the building trades held a three-hour session yesterday afternoon. Afterwards, Delegate P. J. Anslow, of the stone cutters, said: "The executive board has approved the action already taken workers with all the resources at its and it will back up the Electrical command. The Electrical workers are skilled men, and yet they are the only men in the building trades who are at present compelled to work more than eight hours. Even laborers work but eight hours, while the wire workers have a nine-hour day. The building trades are a unit in their support. At present we are waiting to see what the Mason Builders' association, that is the master builders, will do. Although they have claimed heretofore to stand for principle of arbitration, in this matter they appear to be determined to back up the Electrical contractors, who have refused to arbitrate."

From further statements it appears that the real struggle now is with the builders, and it was said that the question as to whether the contractors were successful in hiring many non-union Electrical workers was really a minor matter.

Mr. Anslow, however, denied the report that this strike was really but a pretext designed to bring on a general trial of strength between the unions and the bosses. Both sides are well organized, and the bosses allege that if they yield in the matter of the Electrical workers, it will be followed by demands all along the line.

The report that the men had been ordered out on the new St. Luke's hospital buildings, and that they had refused to go, was denied in toto "the men are willing to go out at any time," said Mr. Anslow, "but the report that they had already been ordered out was a mistake."

HE WAS BOILED ALIVE.

Fell into a Vat of Boiling Water in a Tannery.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 23.—In Dwyer's lether factory, Newark, are several large vats filled with boiling water covering deposits of tan bark. Narrow boards wet and slippery with steam, are laid across the tops of the vats, and occasionally a workman is hardy enough to cross one of the vats by means of the board. Peter Fitzpatrick, of Newark, was making such an attempt yesterday when his foot slipped and he fell into the boiling water. He sank in up to his armpits, his feet touching the layer of bark. The vat's walls were slippery and its rim above his reach. He splashed about wildly in his awful bath, and when fellow wrkmen who had heard his shrieks, came to his aid, he was still conscious and screaming in agony. His body was literally boiled, skin falling off in large patches, disclosing the raw-boiled flesh. The pain was intense, and Fitzpatrick, still conscious, moaned continuously. It was difficult to handle him as at every touch his flesh, literally cooked, dropped off in large fragments. At length he was got into an ambulance and taken to the City hospital where he was swathed in cotton batting and soaked with soothing oils and salves. This morning he was at the point of death.

"DOES FARMING PAY?"

A Lively Interest Taken at the Farmer's Institute.

Richfield Springs, N. Y., Feb. 23.—The attendance at the Farmers' institute continues to be large. Much interest and discussion was aroused by the question box. Dr. N. Gettman delivered a very able paper on "Does Farming Pay?" in which he proclaimed that the farmer should stay at home and attend to his business and not be spending his time in hotels, at horse races, ball games and other sports, and that he should sell his product when it is ready for the market. He was followed by F. A. Ives on the subject "Some Cause of Failure in Farming." The subjects, "The Silo, How to Build and When to Make it a Success," "Practical Poultry Keeping" and "Small Fruits for the Farmer," were well handled by E. Vanalstine, and J. and F. A. Converse, and with them a very successful institute closes.

Captain Slevin Dead.

New York, Feb. 23.—Capt. Slevin was on duty yesterday and went to bed at midnight in the best of health. About 2 o'clock in the morning his wife was awakened by his restlessness. He complained of violent pains in his stomach but refused to allow his wife to call a physician. At 7 o'clock his condition was so alarming that Police Surgeon Cook was called. He found Capt. Slevin cold and pulseless. He was convinced that he was suffering from the perforation of an intestine and called two physicians in for consultation. They deemed the operation of laparotemy necessary but the captain was so low they decided that he could not survive it. He died shortly afterward. A wife and two children survive him.

Lost in the Flames.

Hot Springs, Ark., Feb. 23.—Fire broke out in the Ledgerwood bakery in this city yesterday. It is in the southern part of the city where boarding houses abound, and in an hour three women had been burned to death, six boarding houses, several store houses, and fifteen cottages, in all worth $100,000 had been swept away. The dead are: Mrs. Laura Scammon Mrs. Henry J. McLood, Augustine Stivetto (colored). Mr. and Mrs. G. H Brownson, of Macon, Mo.; Mrs. Peacock and others were injured, but none dangerously.

He Died of Fright.

St. Louis, Feb. 23.—Henry Quinn, colored, residing in this city was suffering from intermittent fever when a case of small pox was found near his home. The doctors of the health department called to examine him which convinced Quinn he had taken the disease. He became delirious and died last night of fright.

Lost in the Flames.

Princeton, Ill., Feb. 23.—The American house, a four story hotel of this city, was partially destroyed by fire early this morning. Four dining room girls were nearly suffocated and had a narrow escape for their lives. Their exit was made through a portion of the burning hotel.

DISCUSSION ON SILVER

A Banker and Congressman Review the Situation.

Mr. St. John Advocates the Redemption of United States Notes in Silver Dollars and Asks Will the Secretary Neglect His Opportunity—Mr. Springer's Reply.

Washington, Feb. 23.—The following interesting correspondence has been made public:

"Hon. William M. Springer, Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, Washington.

"My Dear Sir—When before your honorable committee in December I commended the redemption of United States notes in gold only, at that time, under the conditions then of extraordinary weakness of the treasury, I added that 'the United States was (earlier) able to redeem greenbacks and treasury notes in silver and laugh at such consequences as could have ensued.'

"Under the profound conviction that the present condition of the treasury reserve and liberal accumulations of idle money in New York and other money centres afford together a new opportunity to do so safely, I write to beg of you to urge the secretary of the treasury to exercise the option conferred on him by law and redeem the United States notes in standard silver dollars. The treasury reserve is now composed of about $105,000,000 gold and only about $15,000,000 of free silver.

"If the secretary will instruct the treasury and every assistant treasurer of the United States to meet demands for the redemption of United States notes in standard silver dollars only and to continue the instruction for a reasonable time, the achievement will be, in all details, and in every respect, a happy one; and no more interest-bearing public debt will need to be created. On the other hand, if the secretary of the treasury shall neglect this opportunity, the neglect may prove one more just ground for fault finding with his administration of our public finances.

"Very respectfully yours,
"William P. St. John.

"New York, Feb. 21, 1895."

Mr. Springer's Reply.

"Wm. P. St. John, Esq., President Mercantile National Bank, New York.

"My Dear Sir—Your letter of the 21st inst., is received. In answer thereto permit me to say: I am under the profound conviction that the present conditon of the treasury reserve and liberal accumulations of idle money in New York afford together a new opportunity for you to exercise the discretion conferred on you by law to pay all checks at the bank of which you are president in standard silver dollars.

"If you should pursue this course for a reasonable time the achievement will be in all details and in every respect a happy one. On the other hand, if you should neglect this opportunity, the neglect may prove one more just ground for fault finding with those financiers who preach one doctrine and practice another.

"I am very truly yours,
"William M. Springer.

"Washington, Feb. 22, 1895."

His Intentions Were Honest.

Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 23.—A letter from Louis F. Menage, the fugitive president of the Northwestern Guarantee Loan company in which $5,000,000 was sunk, is printed in an afternoon paper. Menage explains at length the real estate transactions of the concern to show how most of them would have been profitable if the panic had not come. He says his intentions were honest and that to have remained meant death or the insane asylum. He proposes to return and settle the affairs of the creditors saving much thereby if prosecution is dropped for five years.

He Is Slowly Sinking.

Troy, N. Y., Feb. 23.—Major General Joseph B. Carr, who was three times secretary of state and once a candidate for lieutenant-governor and who is a member of the Gettysburg battlefield commission, is slowly sinking at his home in this city. He has been confined to the house several weeks by hopeless illness, the result of a cancer which first manifested itself years ago in his mouth and for which several operations have been performed.

Populist Very Much Alive.

Kansas City, Mo., Feb. 23.—The national Reform association, in annual session decided to establish a new daily paper in this city, to be the national organ of populism. The paper will be under the editorial management of Paul J. Dixon, of the Missouri World, of Chillicothe, Mo., and the plate service and syndicate letters of the association under charge of S. W. Morgan, of Hardy, Ark., will also be issued from here.

They View His Remains.

Union City, Ind., Feb. 23.—The Gray funeral train arrived here yesterday at 11 o'clock. Large crowds met the train at intermediate stations. At Winchester the casket was opened and many people viewed the remains. The city is draped in black. The remains were taken to Cadwallader's opera house where services were held in the afternoon.

A "CUE" FOR THE PUBLIC.

Helen Barry, the Actress, Finds a Splendid Tonic in Paine's Celery Compound.

The play is done, the curtain drops,
Slow falling to the prompter's bell
A moment yet the actress stops and looks around to say farewell.
It is an irksome word and task,
And when she's laughed and said her say,
She shows as she removes her mask a face that's anything but gay.

Acting is not all gaiety, lights, and applause.

There is a deal of drudgery, vexation, and heartache that the people in the front of the house little imagine.

Mary Anderson used to advise young stage-struck girls to keep off the stage. The feverish excitement, the late hours, the drudgery of rehearsals, the unnatural stimulus from new audiences, rivalry and applause, make the life full of perils to health of mind and body. The careless theatre-going public have no notion of the strain on the nerves that is inseparable from a dramatic career.

But members of "the profession" know what it is, and they have, as a body, learned how best to keep their nervous systems strong and capable of doing the hard work demanded of them. That is why Paine's celery compound is so popular on the stage.

Helen Barry, the well-known actress, writes to a physician friend, from Tes Box Cottage, Bellfort:

"It is with great pleasure I write to tell you that I find Paine's celery compound a splendid tonic. I should like you to procure me a few more bottles."

Della Fox, when "run down" from overwork, by the advice of the wife of a U. S. Senator in Washington, tried Paine's celery compound. She says: "My spirits picked up, and at the end of two weeks the same old exuberant health with which nature blessed me had returned.

"I ate and slept as I had not done since I was a child, and I have never known since then an hour's inconvenience from nervous prostration.

"The medicine to which I owe so much is Paine's celery compound, and I have recommended it to all of my stage acquaintances who have overtaxed their brains by too close attention to study, and all have experienced the same happy results as myself."

Marie Tempest also, and a host more of the most eminent artists who appear before the public, have recently testified to the wonderful reinvigorating power of Paine's celery compound. Their testimony is noteworthy because no class of women work harder or are under greater nervous strain.

Women in every walk of life have reason to be grateful to Prof. Phelps of Dartmouth, who discovered Paine's celery compound. He understood the peculiar weakness of the sex. He knew that the backache, lassitude, headache, sleeplessness, and loss of appetite all mean that the supply of nervous force is low and inadequate to the demands upon it. The experience of thousands has taught the women of the country that only Paine's celery compound will give health to the nerves, and, through them, to the entire body.

CAN WORK WITH COMFORT.

This Has a Mighty Meaning for Millions.

HOW MANY PEOPLE WORK WITH EFFORT AND IN MISERY.

This is a Revelation to the Workers of Our Country.

"I can do my work with comfort."

What restful strength, what happiness, what power of enjoyment pervades the very words!

What a world of meaning they carry to our over-worked people, sinking under the weight of work and cares, who silently bear the thousand weaknesses, the pains, the aches, the lasting fatigue, the terrible exhaustion, the utter brain and body tire, with which their daily round of toil is done!

If only my head did not ache! If only my back was free from pain! If I only had the strength to do my work, and did not get so weak, so tired, so terribly exhausted!

These are distressful cries, heard on every hand from nerve-weakened, brain-fagged and bodily exhausted men, and from weak, tired, nervous and dragged-out women.

Like a trumpet-tongued incarnation of hope, therefore, come the words of Mrs. Chas. S. Morgan, of Littleton, N. H.

MR. CHAS. S. MORGAN.

"About one year ago I was in a very bad state of health, being completely worn out by indigestion

"I was subject to sick headaches once in about three or four days, and when they were upon me I was completely prostrated and confined to my bed. The coming so of often and so hard used up all my strength, and made me most discouraged.

"My physician said that I must have rest before I could get better, and my sick headache spells were coming pretty thick. I decided to try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, hearing so much about the wonderful cures, and am rejoiced that I did, for my troubles all left me, being so relieved from my sick headache, and indigestion and nervous debility, that I am now able to work comfortably, and enjoy general good health.

"We have all used in our family at least eighteen bottles, and have nothing but good to say of it. My mother was over-worked and was prostrated by caring for the sick. She has taken the medicine and been helped the most by it of anything she has used, and uses it when run down, with invariable good effects.

"My husband uses it for indigestion with the same good results.

"We can, and do most gladly recommend Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy for the good of others.

MRS. CHAS. S. MORGAN.

If you would do your work with comfort, if you would be free from aches and pains, and all weakness of nerves and weariness of bodies, use this grand giver of health and strength, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It will make you well and strong, give you vigor, vitality, energy, power, ambition and endurance. It is the best Spring tonic and restorative in the world, and now is the best time to take it.

Why waste time in trying uncertain and untried remedies, when here is a physician's prescription, a discovery made by the greatest living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th street, New York city. If you take this medicine you can consider yourself under Dr. Greene's direct professional care, and you can consult or write to him about your case, freely and without charge. This is a guarantee that his remedy will cure, possessed by no other medicine in the world.

HE IS NOT FORGOTTEN

General Celebration of Our Immortal George.

Archbishop Ireland Speaks in the Chicago Auditorium—Patriotic Addresses Delivered by Many Brilliant Men—General Suspension of Business Throughout the Country.

Chicago, Feb. 23.—Washington's birthday was celebrated by the citizens of this city on a more elaborate scale than its predecessors, excepting for the enforced absence of the military parade which has been part of the birthday celebrations for the last twenty years. The reason was that the legislature has failed to appropriate the money needed to equip the Chicago brigade of the national guard with great coats the old ones having been made unpresentable by the railroad strike duty. As in recent years the Union League club took the leading part in arranging the celebrations in the public schools, the patriotic exercises at the auditorium in the afternoon, when Archbishop Ireland was the orator and at the Union League club house at night. Oratory, patriotic speeches and feasting were joined at the latter event.

Religious Services.

At Grace Episcopal church there was a brilliant gathering of the clergy, members of the Loyal Legion and of the Illinois society, Sons of the American revolution. Bishops Hale of Cairo, McLaren of this city, and Seymour of Springfield, were those who took part in the special religious service. Bishop Seymour delivered the oration. Little business was transacted in the city.

Archbishop Ireland spoke at the auditorium exercises on "American Citizenship." Beginning his oration by paying a lofty tribute to the immortal first citizen, he continued: "The republic of America was a supreme act of confidence in man, a confession such as had never been heard before of human dignity and human ability. Its creation was the boldest act recorded in history."

A Valuable Lesson.

The archbishop said in reminding his audience of the responsibility of citizenship: "The American refusing to vote on election day merits disfranchisement or exile. The American boasting of his political indolence proclaims his shame. Thoughtful writers mark as the most pernicious foe of democracy the indifference towards the political life of the country practised by respectable, well-meaning and educated citizens. I am afraid some of us are not altogether free from the undemocratic feeling that we lose our self respect if on election day we mingle on equal terms with all social classes. Far from us be the feeling.

"When we mingle with men as citizens we mingle with noblemen. Among the misfortunes of America I mention the caucus and primary, by which a few are able to impose upon a whole party their own choice of candidates. A royal work of patriotism is to rid the country of them, or so transform them that their verdict shall in some manner be the verdict of the party, and not merely as it now is that of the expert wire-pullers and slate-makers. The political boss is the outgrowth of ignorant and vicious citizenship and his reign fosters the low element which makes it possible. Bribery at the polls is demoniac mockery of manhood. It is execrable to use the power of office to force citizens into making contributions either to purchase protection or to secure exemption from penalties. The people always stamp out such dreadful evils with relentless energy."

Old Glory Floated at the Battery.

New York, Feb. 23.—The most distinguishing feature of the public demonstrations was the usual ceremony of raising the American flag at the Battery. Christopher R. Forbes, the great-grandson of Sergeant Van Arsdale, who pulled down the British flag when the redcoats were leaving New York, performed the duty, as he does each year. The large flag belonging to the park department was raised on the tall pole near the Barge office just at daylight, and there arose a cheer for Old Glory which the cold could not chill.

Flags fluttered from nearly all public buildings and looking down Wall street from Broadway seemed like glancing down an arcade of bright-hued trees, so many were the big flags thrown from the office windows over the narrow street.

Our Immortal George.

The day was generally observed in our sister cities very patriotically. In the City of Churches all public buildings were closed but decorated with flags and bunting. In Philadelphia the principle event was the exercises at the Academy of Music under the auspices of the University of Pennsylvania. Boston had no unusual feature in the celebration of our father's birthday. At the capital, it was elaborately observed by military organizations, parades, speeches &c. At the Women's council, Mrs. Kate Sherwood, of Canton, O., said: "Washington's reverence for his mother was shown when he hastened to her side upon his election as first president of this republic. 'Go George', was her good-bye, 'till the destiny heaven has assigned you, you have your mothers' blessing, you will see me no more.' And with those words he laid his head on her breast and wept like a child."

Very Considerate.

St. Joseph, Mo., Feb. 23.—B. J. Milhouse, a stock raiser living near here, yesterday had his wife arrested on a charge of bigamy. He has since committed suicide, leaving a letter in which he declared that he took his own life in order that his wife might be free to live with the man whom she had married in violation of the law.

At the Last Moment.

Denison, Tex., Feb. 23.—Hunt, the murderer who was to have been hanged here yesterday escaped the gallows at the last moment, the governer having commuted his sentence to life imprisonment.

18,000 MINERS IN DISTRESS.

Future Prospects Look Very Discouraging for Them.

Columbus, O., Feb. 23.—The commission appointed at the instance of Gov. McKinley by the boards of trade and chambers of commerce of Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, and Toledo, to make an official investigation of the destitution of the miners in the Hocking Valley and Sunday Creek Valley, has discovered some startling facts.

In the localities so far visited the commission has discovered that each miner last year earned only from $75 to $125, largely because of the great national strike and that by working regularly they could have earned from $2 to $3 every day.

In reference to the nationality of the miners, it has been learned that in Nelsonville they are almost entirely American and English; in Shawnee the majority are Welsh; in Buckingham, they are largely German, and in Straitsville they are pretty evenly distributed among the English, Welsh, German and Irish.

It was also stated that of the 10,000 or 12,000 miners in the two valleys, fully one-third, representing, with their families, nearly 15,000 persons, are in greater or less distress.

With reference to future prospects, all the miners declare they are not encouraging. They are almost a unit in declaring that there are at least 50 per cent. too many miners in the two valleys for the amount of work that can be supplied, and many of them are making preparations to locate on farms or seek other employment.

The commission hope to get through with the investigation by to-day, when they expect to return to this city and make their report to the governor.

They have discovered that distress exists to a degree which demands more than ordinary attention.

A TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE.

Pilot Beebe Tells of the Rough Trip of the Benlarig.

New York, Feb. 23.—Pilot Franklin Beebe just arrived from Baltimore, is in a very wretched condition physically. His face and hands are badly frostbitten. Under his moustache is a long cut, still bleeding, having been cracked and blistered by the intense cold. His ears and nose bear evidence of the awful experience he has passed through. He says that sixteen men of the crew of the Benlarig were nearly all frostbitten; that half-a-dozen boys aboard, employed in various capacities, suffered from cold and exposure, and that for days only a few men were able to go on deck at all. "The sails were torn into ribbons," said Mr. Beebe, "and how the big craft weathered the gale is a mystery. All the fires were put out except that in one little stove in the cabin, and the twenty unfortunates were almost frozen to death, even while under decks. During the blizzard one of the starboard yawls was smashed into splinters and the same sea crushed the starboard bulwarks aft.

"All the yards were cock-pitted and thrashed about in the gale against the masts, the ropes and rigging, with the tattered sails, finally freezing solidly to the masts. The icy flying spray resembled a tossing iceberg. During the gale, Richard Connors, seaman, was thrown down by a big wave and his right leg was broken. Third Mate Spinler was so badly frostbitten that it was thought that he would not live, but he is now recovering."

In conclusion, Pilot Beebe said that he had never in his life seen such weather, and hoped that he would never again experience what he went through on the Benlarig.

WILL HE RESIGN?

Report Circulated That Strong Is Disgusted With His Office.

New York, Feb. 23.—The Tribune says to-day: "A report circulated about the hotels to the effect that Mayor Strong had found his office so little to his taste, and that attention to its duties had so affected his health that he had determined to resign, was much discussed yesterday by legislators and others. Although there was nothing on which to rest the resignation story, except the merest rumor, supplementing the fact of the mayor's illness, the gossips made the most of it.

Col. Strong's retirement would make President Jerolman mayor the remainder of the year, it was suggested, but without the power of removal held by Mayor Strong. Mr. Jerolman, as acting mayor, could fill vacancies as they occurred, but could create none, as Mayor Strong can do.

"Too Heavy a Task."

Washington, Feb. 23.—As a result of cable communication with his relatives in Moscow, the remains of Mr. Pierre Bogdanoff, first secretary of the Russian legation, were quietly interred in Rock Creek cemetery, this city. Mr. Bogdanoff, suffering intensely from neuralgia, shot himself in his bed chamber on Wednesday morning last, leaving a note saying that "to a long-time dead soul" he found the body "too heavy a task," therefore destroyed himself. What mystery, if any, lay behind this tragic taking off, is probably buried with him. The note which he left for relatives has been forwarded to them unopened.

His Life by a Thread.

Denver, Feb. 23.—Rev. Dr. John P. Coyle died last night at his home on Logan avenue. While preaching to his congregation last Sunday evening, he first became conscious of a severe heart trouble. For several days his life seemed to hang by a thread. During the week he rallied and last Wednesday was able to sit up. Strong hopes were entertained for his recovery, but last night he was seized with the third attack which proved the end. The funeral will be held to-morrow and his remains taken east for interment in the family plot at North Adams, Mass.

Sports Handicaped.

New York, Feb. 23.—A large number of club members and their friends went to the grounds of the Larchmont Gun club yesterday to witness a 100 bird match, thirty yards rise and fifty yards boundary, between J. K. Palmer and George Work. Mr. Palmer was the winner, killing eighty-nine birds and missing eleven. Mr. Work's score was eighty-six killed, fourteen missed. The scores would have been better, but the shooters were handicapped by a strong wind. After the match a number of handicapps were shot by the members of the club.

MADE DRUNK TO KILL

The Murderer Plied His Victims with Liquor.

Enticed from Home They Are Robbed of Papers and Money—Acts as Chief Mourner over the Young Men. With Tears He Sympathizes with the Bereaved Parents.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 23.—In the strange story which begins with the finding of the bodies of two unknown lads in Miller's hotel, Williamsburg, last Sunday morning, which followed with the identification of the corpses as those of Henry Knoop and John Siems, of Hoboken; which became a mystery when it was learned that the boys had money which could not be found and were accompanied to the place Saturday night by an older man, who disappeared next morning; which gradually developed a theory of crime so monstrous that it staggered belief; which next had to do with the arrest of a young German named Johann Christian Bohemann and the discovery of almost conclusive evidence against him, there were important developments yesterday—developments which strengthen the probability of the guilt of the man in prison, which more than suggest hypnotic influence in the relations which the murderer bore to his victims, and which, for want of a motive adequate to the crime, point to the conclusion of irresponsible madness, that would devise murder for murder's sake.

The Trio at Little Ferry.

It is now known that on Saturday, after Knoop and Siems left home that morning, they were drinking all day in company with Bohemann. Knoop had drawn $125, all his savings, from the bank. Siems had stolen $150 from his employers, the John H. Starin company. From 10 a. m., until after 7 p. m., that day, the three were at Little Ferry, which is about two and a half miles this side of Hackensack, N. J. The first information as to this came from George A. Coe, a farmer, who saw the young men together in a barroom and recalled the incident upon seeing their pictures in a newspaper. Coe went to Hoboken yesterday and thence to the Hudson county jail. The sixty-five prisoners there were drawn up in a line in the corridor. Coe walked the length of the line, passing Bohemann. Coe then came back slowly until he reached Bohemann. There he stopped, putting his hand on the man's shoulders.

"This is the one," he said.

The prisoner's face flushed faintly and one hand clinched when Coe first looked into his eyes, passing by. Then when Coe came back he flushed again, but only sneered and shrugged his shoulders by way of comment. His self-possession was remarkable. His counsel, Senator W. D. Daly, was present when the identification was made.

Coe Talked with Them.

"Bohemann, Knoop and Siems were at Musicus' hotel, Little Ferry, between 10 and 11 a. m.," says Coe. They were late at Collins' hotel, and about 4 p. m., I saw them at Tichmaher's hotel, sitting at a table near the bar, eating sandwiches and drinking. I talked to them some. The little fellow (Siems) told me they had walked from New York. They said they lived in Hoboken. One of them asked me which was the nearer way to Hoboken—to go to Jersey City and then on by trolley car,, or to New York and back by the Barclay street ferry. I said it was nearer to stop at Jersey City. Bohemann said the other way, to cross the river, was quicker. I don't know how they finally decided to go, as I left about 7 p. m., while they remained a few minutes later."

It will be remembered that Bohemann, Knoop and Siems were seen together in Washington street, Hoboken, between 10 and 11 o'clock Saturday night. It was nearly 2 o'clock Sunday morning when they entered the hotel in Williamsburg, the 16-year-old Siems and the 18-year-old Knoop going to one room and Bohemann to another. It was 8:30 o'clock Sunday morning when Bohemann went down, took a drink at the bar and passed out, saying to Clerk Fanning:

"Don't Disturb My Friends."

"Don't disturb my young friends. Let them sleep as long as they will."

It was past 3 o'clock when the chambermaid, Kate Byrnes, opened the door of room No. 1, to be almost knocked down by the stifling outflow of gas. The lads were dead.

Bohemann had gone quietly to his home, No. 327 Washington street, Hoboken. His landlady, Mrs. Florentia Lehbrink, told him that young Siems' father had been there inquiring for Johnny. Bohemann did not wait to hide the money and papers, of which he had robbed his young friends. With these still in his pockets he went to Siems' house and pretended to sympathize with the parents. Then when young Siems' body was brought home Bohemann was a chief mourner. He wept over the corpse and spent $5 for two bouquets. He went about with the detectives and helped them in a search for the murderer. He found time to hide $240 of the money and the tell-tale papers in his room.

When arrested Thursday morning he was not frightened. He laughed at the detective and grumbled over his arrest. When the money was taken from under his carpet, and papers belonging to Knoop and Siems were found in his chest he was unmoved. When he was identified by the Williamsburg clerk he calmly asserted that it was mistaken identity. On the way to prison he smoked a cigar and chatted lightly upon indifferent topics with his guard. In his cell he slept like a child, and waked up in better animal spirits than any other prisoner in the establishment. Yesterday he was less embarrassed by Coe's identification than an ordinary pastor of banker or merchant would be by being pointed out in an ordinary crowd.

Vanity

is a virtuous vice. The world is better for it. It makes men ambitious—and it makes women careful of their personal appearance. It doesn't take much money to keep well-dressed now-a-days. Cleaning or dyeing makes it possible to use soiled or faded garments. And there's where our ax comes in. We are in the Cleaning and Dyeing business. GAY MINSTRELS' NIGHT

Messrs. F. D. Hallock, J. H. Hallock, R. D. Schoonmaker, G. F. Schoonmaker, Taylor, and Lehman. Fletcher D. Hallock spread wonder and amazement by his xylophone solos, performed entirely by peculiar cluckings of his tongue in exact reproduction of the notes of the xylophone, the illusion being heightened and at the same time made amusing by the manipulation of a mallet on chunks of kindling wood strung together and held stretched by the funny end men. Elmer Runyon's sweet tenor voice charmed as ever, and nothing could be funnier than Mr. Cree's thoroughly coon song about "My Baby—my honey—my sweet one—my Zulu!"

The finale was a medley of melody.

A good-enough show for any town, the audience said of the minstrels; and there was more to come. This was a one-act farce-comedy, produced, after a short interval, by the following company of Plainfield amateurs:

Mrs. Effingham, a young widow, Mrs. J. Parker Mason
Mrs. Marabout, a volatile society woman, Mrs. L. W. Serrell, Jr.
Mrs. Coddington, a mamma with a daughter to bring out.....Mrs. Irving H. Brown
Arabella Coddington, a daughter with nothing to say.....Mrs. William L. Saunders
Arthur Rutledge, an innocent offender, Richard L. Colburn
Mr. Walton, a social cynic.....Fred W. Walz
Mr. Grayson, a tender and true young man, Henry L. Bogert
Bertie Appleby.....George Taggart
Gen. Sabretache, a thunder and Mars old man, James Stowell Anthony
Dr. Grantley, a professional button-holer, Irving H. Brown
Thomas, the butler.....William R. Cock

The story of the play has already been told in these columns, and will not bear telling too often, if it is to hold together. Mrs. Burton Harrison is fashionable and clever, and her little social comedies read well enough; but "Tea at Four o'Clock" wasn't worth the effort expended on it by such an earnest and talented cast. The staging was perfect, under the personal supervision of J. Parker Mason, the scene being the walled garden adjoining Mrs. Effingham's Lenox house. It was hard work for the actors to make themselves silly and insincere. Not much, therefore, could be done with any of the parts, though Mr. Anthony did by much energy throw considerable character into the bombastic Sabretache of the fierce mustaches. Mrs. Serrell had the role of a deceitful gadabout, with which she was by nature unsympathetic; her faint and recovery were a clever bit of acting, and gave a glimpse of the ability she would show in a better part.

Mrs. Mason was regal in a rich gown, queenly with the manners of a superb hostess, and altogether admirable in her womanly traits as revealed in her love for Rutledge; but it is not necessary for her to adopt the stage appearance of any of Mrs. Harrison's mild heroines to appear well gowned, cordially entertaining, and womanly. Mrs. Brown had the distasteful task of trying to bury her amiability in the part of an ambitious but ungracious and even vixenish parent. Mrs. Saunders has the ability and experience to give interest to even a trivial assignment, and was amusing with her schoolgirl awkwardness, her society fright, and her fiction about the duel.

Mr. Walz was refreshing because of his personal breeziness, and not through any merit of his role. Mr. Cook was seen to less advantage than in former plays, and thus one of Plainfield's best amateurs was buried. Mr. Brown was compelled by the author to make himself tiresome, and proved his faithfulness to histrionic art by doing so. Mr. Taggart must have been as unpleasant to himself in Mrs. Harrison's creation of a vacuous mentality as his stammering was to an audience already kept too long. Mr. Bogert was at least earnest and persevering. Mr. Colburn had little to do but look handsome and gracefully enfold Mrs. Effingham in his arms; but not every man could fulfil those requirements as successfully as he did.

For the sake of Mrs. Burton Harrison's pride it is to be hoped that her copy of this issue of The Daily Press will miscarry in the mails, for it is not likely to be conducive to her peace of mind or soothing to her nerves to learn that one of her plays fell flat after a minstrel show.

When it all was over, people said little about the "Tea", but they did say much about the mirth and music that preceded it. And most of all they talked about the jam.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognise her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly: they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,

Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

DRAMA AND OPERA.

GRAND OPERA GIVES PLACE TO EXCLUSIVE GERMAN OPERA.

Mansfield Serves Notice on Nashville that He Won't Play There Any More. Langtry and Potter Come Back With Lustreless Plumes. The New York Programme.

There is one characteristic about distinguished theatrical immigrants to this country which has attracted the attention of veteran theatergoers in New York, and that is the extraordinary repertory which the English players present in the course of a short season in this city. Complaints of American actors about the financial success of such players as Henry Irving, Beerbohm Tree and the Kendals are very bitter, and as a rule it is held that there is something unpatriotic in patronizing English players so lavishly, and treating our own comedians and character actors with indifference. It has been pointed out time and again that the sort of people who visit the theater when alien actors are playing are entirely different from the ordinary attendants when native actors hold the boards. Gray heads are numerous in all the audiences to which Mr. Irving, Mr. Tree and the Kendals play. The fact is that the repertory of these actors appeals to playgoers who have had years of experience. The drama is almost a passion with thousands of people in New York, and it is no unusual thing for one man to book seats for every change of play of one of the visiting companies. With the exception of Mr. Mansfield, American actors do not seem to have energy or resources enough to present a series of dramas with completeness in the course of two or three weeks' time. Mr. Goodwin, for instance, plays one drama all the year around, and so do Mr. Drew, Mr. Sothern, Mr. Crane and other stars of their magnitude. Most of them would start back aghast at the idea of setting forth six or eight plays in the course of a month's engagement in any one city.

Mrs. Langtry and Mrs. Potter will both appear in New York before long, but the excitement which once attended their coming is entirely a thing of the past. When these two well known women first appeared with their theatrical companies in this city together there was some attempt at rivalry and a great amount of gossip about them. Mrs. Langtry's movements were followed as though she was a royal personage, and society and the world at large was aghast at Mrs. Potter's move in going upon the professional stage. But since that time these things are accepted as a matter of course. Both ladies now play in little one night towns to small receipts, and their talk is not of the Prince of Wales or society, but of the amount of money which they expect to play to during the rest of the week. It is all done on a commercial basis. Mrs. Potter, like Mrs. Langtry, shows traces of the lapse of years and the hardships of continual traveling and acting.

When the curtain goes up at the Metropolitan on the 25th inst. it will disclose the ship that is bearing Isolde to Cornwall, this being the first time in many years that Wagner's famous love drama has been given here. The work has been fittingly selected by Mr. Walter Damrosch to inaugurate the season of German opera to be given here under his direction. The works to be performed this season consist of "Die Walkure," "Siegfried," "Goetterdaemmerung," "Lohengrin," "Tristan und Isolde," "Tannhaeuser" and "Die Meistersinger."

Preparations are well advanced at some of the theaters for the early displacement of the current plays. A set of new scenery is being painted at the Fifth Avenue for "His Wife's Father," the new comedy which William H. Crane is to produce there. Mr. Crane and his company are rehearsing this piece while finishing a Southern tour. In the meantime, Fanny Davenport is on the Fifth Avenue stage with "Gismonda." At Hoyt's "A Milk White Flag" is holding its place for the short period, at the end of which "The Foundling" is to come in. "The Fatal Card" will soon give way at Palmer's to Mrs. Langtry, who will bring out two or three pieces newly adapted from French and German sources. "The District Attorney" will remain at the American to the end of a fifth week. "The Old Homestead" is going on at the Star, "Humanity" at the Fourteenth Street, "Mme. Sans Gene" at the Broadway, and "Rob Roy" at the Herald Square. It is a bustling week at Abbey's, where Beerbohm Tree appears.

Agnes Booth will appear in next season's production of "The Sporting Duchess." William Lackaye is to go a-starring in "Two of Him," a new piece by William C. Hudson. Charles H. Hoyt is said to contemplate a comic opera. Cissie Loftus will return to the London music halls in April. Irene Perry, who retired from the stage upon marrying Albert Weber, is acting again in Boston. Richard Mansfield wrote to a Nashville journal that he would never act in that city again, because he had been adversely criticised there. Sarah Bernhardt's next role will be in "Tragolbalbus," a new work by a son-in-law of Victor Hugo. Mme. Janauschek is going on a Shakespearen lecture tour. Clara Morris, who has not acted this season, will resume next winter. The Smith-DeKoven opera for Lillian Russell will have Napoleon for one of its characters. Maggie Mitchell has let Gladys Wallace have "Fachon" to use next season. The Kendals have tried in Boston, without success, an English piece called "A Leader of Men."

Alone on the Prairie.

The day was in that transitory state when twilight lingers in the lap of day and darkness struggles for the ascendency. The sun hung in a great red ball of lurid flame betwixt heaven and earth; there was a feeling of profound quiet which seemed to settle on all things animate and inanimate. The birds, the insects, the very trees and sprouting plants were for the moment hushed as if in expectancy of some unforseen, some inexplicable something which seemed to pervade the very atmosphere. A bull frog gurgled softly as he fell back into the limpid water. Suddenly, over the brow of a distant hill, there appeared a solitary man, seated astride a great bay horse; he cast one long sweeping glance around him and then went back over the brow of the hill again. And that same night over seven hundred people were turned away unable to gain admission to the Opera House where "She Couldn't Marry Three" was being played to the most delighted audience of the season.

—There will be special music at Holy Cross Church tomorrow afternoon, as it is Quinquagesima Sunday or the last Sunday before Lent.

—Of the many star-spangled American flags fluttering in the breeze yesterday, none looked more beautiful than that belonging to J. Q. Dolliver, on Manning avenue.

On March 6 we shall begin publication of a detective story by Nym Crinkle, entitled

"EIGHT MINUTES TO THREE".

A. C. Wheeler, who uses this pseudonym, is one of the best known journalists in the United States. He has been for many years the dramatic critic of the New York World, and is today one of the most brilliant writers on the American press. It is to his inimitable sketches o New York life that the Sunday World owes a considerable part of its popularity. Mr. Wheeler has written many successful stories, of which the best known is perhaps "The Great Laran Rebellion".

"Eight Minutes of Three" is in every way a remarkable piece of fiction, and deserves to rank with some of the weird tales of Poe. It will run five days, and will be followed by a short story of New England life by Mary E. Wilkins.

This story, like all the Daily Press serials, is brand-new, and copyrighted to Daily Press use.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

HIGH MASS, WITH INCENSE.

Father Wattson Tells His Congregation to Pray to the Virgin Mary.

At Kingston, N. Y., the Rev. Lewis T. Wattson celebrated the Feast of the Purification in St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, by high mass, with incense, and by a sermon, which caused not a little talk, especially among his parishioners who are not in perfect accord with his ritualistic tendencies.

He took for his text or theme the Magnificat, saying that the Virgin Mary, as the mother of God, should be especially venerated. It is time, he said, to lay aside some of the Protestant prejudices on this subject, and, when we pray, to ask Mary to intercede for us with God. At the marriage feast, Christ, at his mother's request, turned water into wine, and, taking this as an example, Father Wattson argued that if Christ listened to Mary then, why would He not now when she is queen of heaven.

Father Wattson said a woman living in Detroit had told him of a holy woman living there to whom many mothers brought their children to be healed of bodily infirmities instead of going to a doctor. If this holy woman's prayers were so potent, he said, how much more so would be those of Mary. In addressing the Virgin, Father Wattson advocated the use of the expression: "Hail Mary, Queen of Heaven, blessed art thou among women. O Holy Mary, pray for us."

It Was Lost, Too.

A young Irishman in want of a £5 note wrote to his uncle as follows:

"Dear Uncle: If you could see how I blush for shame while I am writing, you would pity me. Do you know why? Because I have to ask you for money, and do not know how to express myself. It is impossible for me to tell you. I prefer to die.

"I send you this by messenger, who will wait for an answer. Believe me, my dearest uncle, your most obedient and affectionate nephew, ——.

"P. S.—Overcome with shame for what I have written, I have been running after the messenger in order to take the letter from him, but I cannot catch him up. Heaven grant that something may happen to stop him, or that my letter may get lost!"

The uncle was naturally touched, but was equal to the emergency. He replied as follows:

"My dear Jack: Console yourself, and blush no longer. Providence has heard your prayers. The messenger lost your letter. Your affectionate uncle, ——."

Rather Hard to Suit.

"Mr. Chugwater," inquired the agent, "are you carrying any life insurance?"

"I am not."

"Haven't you ever thought you ought to be insured?"

"I have."

"Our company is one of the strongest and best in the country. One of its peculiar features is that you don't have to——"

"Would your company insure me for $20,000?"

"It would."

"Do you think I would pass the necessary examination?"

"I haven't any doubt of it whatever."

"Well," snorted Mr. Chugwater, "if your company would take a risk of $20,000 on such a wind-broken, consumptive, dyspeptic, rheumatic, broken-down hump-shouldered, lean, withered and dried-up old hulk as I am I don't want to have anything to with it. Good day."—Chicago Tribune.

THE NATION'S CAPITAL.

Personally-Conducted Tours to Washington, D. C., via Pennsylvania Railroad.

There is probably no place that offers so much in the way of sightseeing and other things of general interest as Washington, D. C. Apart from being the Nation's Capital, the magnificent Government Buildings and beautifully-planned streets and public parks make it well worth a visit.

The series of three-day tours arranged by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, under its perfect, personally conducted tourist system, gives every one an opportunity to visit Washington under most favorable circumstances and at a very reasonable cost.

The tours leave New York, Feb. 28, and at intervals of three weeks until May 23, 1895, inclusive. The rates, including accommodations at Washington's best hotels, are $13 50 from New York and $11,50 from Philadelphia; proportionate rates from other points.

Detailed itinerary will be sent on application to Tourist Agent, 1196 Broadway, New York, or Room 411, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

Their First Masquerade.

The first annual masquerade ball of the A. S. C's was held in Central Hall, Thursday night, but was slimly attended, owing to the many other events of a similar character being in progress at the same time. The hall was trimmed with varied colored festoons and Chinese lanterns. The dancers were attired in costumes ranging from the grotesque to the classic and portraying characters of history and of the passing generation.

A False Diagnosis.

La grippe is confounded by many persons with a severe attack of catarrh, which in some respects resembles the former. These individuals suffer severely with pain about the forehead, eyes and ears, with soreness in throat and stoppage of the nasal passages, and in fact, are incapacitated for work of any kind for days at a time. These are catarrhal sufferers. Ely's Cream Balm has been used with the best results in such cases. The remedy will give instant relief.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 24. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—To what has Christ opened your eyes?—Acts ix, 1-11, 17-21.

The topical references record the history of the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, who was subsequently called Paul the Apostle. One feature of Christ's appearance to Saul was that he was stricken blind, in which state he remained for three days, until God sent Ananias to him, through whose good offices, under the blessing of God, "there fell from his eyes as it had been scabs, and he received sight forthwith," but not only physical but also spiritual sight. The conversion of Saul may be taken as a model, representing to what Christ opens our eyes when we are converted.

1. Christ opens our eyes to a proper conception of ourselves. Paul's first mistake was that he did not see himself as God saw him. He was a Pharisee of the strictest kind and had the idea that in persecuting Christians he was doing God's will. He did not see the error in his heart and life. But Christ opened his eyes to see that and the consciousness of his personal guilt before God never left him. One of the first steps in conversion is the consciousness of our personal guilt, and therefore our need of a Saviour. We must be convicted of sin before we will turn from it to God. This was the case with David when Nathan pointed out his sin. He saw it and cried to God in sorrow and repentance. The repentant thief on the cross illustrates the same fact. He saw his personal guilt. "We indeed justly, for we suffer the due reward of our deeds." It is the same in all cases.

2. Christ opens our eyes to a proper conception of Himself as the Messiah. This was another error in Saul's character. Raised as a Jew and as a Pharisee he was taught to reject Christ as the Messiah. He himself said it was through ignorance that he had persecuted God's people—through ignorance because he did not believe in Christ as the Messiah. But when the scales fell from his spiritual sight he also saw Christ as indeed the Son of God and was ready to confess Him as such, for he cried, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" The thief on the cross had the same experience. He was led to see his own guilt and also the true character of Christ. "We indeed justly," he said, confessing his own guilt, but "this man" (that is, Christ) "hath done nothing amiss." Christ opens our eyes not only to see ourselves, but Himself. And when we see Him in the beauty and loveliness of His character we cannot but admire Him and desire to be like Him.

3. Christ opens our eyes to the duties resulting from a proper vision of ourselves and Himself. When Paul received his sight, immediately he arose, was baptized and ever afterward did the will of God. To see ourselves aright and Christ aright is not all of Christianity. Conversion is more than turning from evil. It is also a turning to good. We must cease to do evil, but we must also learn to do well. Conversion to Christ results in Christian duties. Christ opens our eyes to these duties, and, like Saul of Tarsus, we should not hesitate to do them. Faith and works are both necessary to salvation.

Bible Readings.—Gen. iii, 6-11; Ps. xix, 8; cxix, 18; Prov. xx, 12; Isa. xxxv, 4, 5; xlii, 6, 7; Jer. v, 21, 22; Math. xiii, 13-16; Luke i, 76-79; xxiv, 28-32, 45-48; John ix, 1-11; Acts xxvi, 13-18; II Cor. iv, 3, 4; Eph. i, 16-18; Rev. iii, 7.

A Race For Raisins.

A good many games pleasant to play in Christian Endeavor socials require forfeits as the penalty of failure. An exceedingly amusing forfeit is this: Tie to the center of a long string several raisins. Place either end of the string in the mouth of one of the persons who must redeem the forfeit. Instruct the pair that they are to chew up the string, of course not swallowing it, until they reach the raisins, and the one who first obtains the raisins will be declared victor.—Golden Rule.

Working With a Will.

A California Christian Endeavor district has the right idea of the matter. They are planning and working for their next convention, say their officers, "as if this were the last Christian Endeavor convention ever to be held in the state and must of necessity be the best."—Exchange.

On the Other Side of the World.

South Australian societies have sent 17 of their members to foreign mission fields. They are to be found in India, China and Africa, and though most of them are Baptists the Congregationalists, Wesleyans and the Church of Christ are also represented.

Christian Endeavor Briefs.

Seven years ago the Chicago Christian Endeavor union was founded, with 15 societies. It now numbers 380 societies, with a membership of 17,000.

Maryland has 350 societies and a membership of 15,000 Endeavorers.

Among the interesting features of the programme for the next convention, to be held in Boston, will be the presentation of the various banners to city unions.

The Free St. Matthew's Mission society of Glasgow supports a hospital at Tiberias and maintains a girl at Livingstonia.

The juniors of the Methodist church, Colorado Springs are supporting a girl in Fuchau Mission school, China. They have distributed the past quarter 259 bouquets, with Scripture texts attached; also a large quantity of good literature.

The Christian Endeavor union of Hopkinsville, Ky., has among its denominational vice presidents a representative from the Episcopalians.

A floating society of Christian Endeavor has been formed at St. John, N. B.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Lesson For the Week Beginning Feb. 24. Comment by Rev. Walter J. Yates, A. M. Topic, The Ark of the Covenant.

BIBLE READINGS.—Ex. xxv, 10-16; Heb. ix, 4, 5; John iv, 23.

A wooden box about four feet long and a little more than two feet deep and two feet broad, covered with plates of fine gold, was the ark, preserved with great care as the most sacred thing in the tabernacle. The value was not in the box itself nor in the mercy seat of pure gold which covered it, having the figures of cherubim of hammered gold at each end, with wings meeting in the center and shadowing the sacred chest. The simple stone tablets engraved with the ten commands, "the Decalogue," was the treasure which it was built to contain. Their value lay in their contents and not in the material of which they were composed.

This was Jehovah's law to Israel. He promised to be with them in all their future life as a people if they obeyed this law. They on their part pledged themselves by solemn oath to obey His commands. This was the "Covenant." So this became the ark or chest of the covenant. It was also the ark of the "testimony," as the tables of stone were called.

This chest, with its mercy seat cover, was placed in the innermost room of the tent and temple, which had no opening into it except the door which was covered by a curtain. The tablets of the testimony were not to be taken out for reference nor for reading to the people. The mercy seat was not to be approached at will when guidance was desired of God regarding the affairs of the nation. Only once in the year was this inner sanctuary to be entered, and the most sacred shrine approached. Even then no one but the high priest might venture to look upon this secret dwelling place of the Most High One, and then always with blood of sacrifice in a gold bowl, with which blood he was to sprinkle the mercy seat between the cherubim. The meaning of this is made most clear in the epistle to the Hebrews, ninth chapter.

The law of God announced for the moral guidance of men has never been and in the nature of the case can never be repealed or annulled. The old dispensation served to give knowledge of it, but ability to keep it perfectly was lacking. In the new order of things under Christ one of the race has entered the holiest place of the Most High to ever abide under the shadow of the Almighty. The veil of separation has been forever torn aside that all may enter who will. The law is no longer on hidden slabs of stone, but the new covenant declared of God is: "I will put my laws into their mind and write them in their hearts. I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people." "True worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth."

Other Army Corps.

Methodism is not one organic body. Even in the United States there are nearly a dozen branches of the Methodist family. The largest in numbers, most wealthy and perhaps the most influential is the Methodist Episcopal. Next in prominence is the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Canada Methodism, since the consolidation of all its divisions into one body, has become one of the most influential churches, if not the very first in importance, in that country. The Epworth League began as a consolidation of the five large societies existing in the Methodist Episcopal church in May, 1889. The Church South and the Canadian church organized their societies with the same general name, but under the government of their own authorities. So will each of the other branches of Methodism probably do. The Wesleyans of England, Australia, India and other regions are swinging into line. Each is a separate army corps. Our international convention at Chattanooga, Tenn., June 27-30, will gather delegates from all over the world. Fraternal consultation, and not organic union, is the object of that gathering. Probably at its close we shall be a little nearer the practical solution of the problem of Christian church union, but no schemes for tinkering the machinery are contemplated. Demonstration of fraternal unity will be given in the sacrament of holy communion with which the services will open.

The Best of Each Kind.

Much emphasis is often laid on the fact that Christ chose unlettered men for his apostles. The success of the unlearned in revival and reform work is sometimes emphasized as if that was all that is needed for the work of the church of God on earth. It should not be forgotten that when Jehovah wanted to make Israel a nation he chose a Moses as leader. When Christianity needed an expounder and defender for the gentile world, God laid his hand on a Saul of Tarsus. So has it been in all subsequent times. There is work for Augustine, Wyclif, Luther, Calvin and Wesley as truly as for Moody, Booth, Taylor and the other hearts of fire. Each in his place and all in harmony is the need. The best of each kind and each at his best moves the work of God forward in his appointed way.

The Reading Course.

Thousands in all parts of the world have found profit and great pleasure in the various Chautauqua courses since their inauguration 20 years ago. Many who have felt unable to pursue so advanced and long a course find in that of the Epworth League what is adapted to their needs. There is variety sufficient for all tastes and requirements. If one is pressed for time in a busy life, it is remarkable how much information and real culture can be had in economizing odd minutes and reading systematically a few really excellent books rather than letting them slip by unemployed or in reading whatever chances to fall in the way. Careless and indiscriminate reading is as surely fatal to mental strength and health as careless eating is productive of dyspepsia.

CHAPTER VI.

As the story was unfolded to him an expression of grim despair gathered over Forrester's face.

"You see it will be impossible to fight against such proof," said Dixon, sympathetically. "I am awfully sorry for you, my dear fellow. The only little bit of possible good in the whole affair is that your kinswoman may let you off the debt you unconsciously incurred to her estate."

"My God!" cried Forrester, starting up and beginning to pace the room. "It is an awful blow! I am hard hit in more ways than one. I have asked the sweetest girl in the world, as I think, to marry me, and I hoped to hear her say 'yes' to-morrow or next day. Now marriage is too wild an imprudence. I dare not drag her into an abyss of poverty."

"A girl! What girl?" exclaimed Dixon, impatiently. "You don't mean to say you have been such an idiot—"

"THEN I SUPPOSE THIS CASE WILL BE SETTLED OUT OF COURT."

"Yes, I have! I know what you mean. I have followed up my acquaintance with my traveling companion, and to give her up will cost me more than any other loss—fortune, station, anything!"

"Good heavens! how incredible it seems to me," said Dixon, as if to himself. Forrester continued his troubled walk without heeding him.

"Give me pen and paper," he exclaimed, after a few minutes' silence. "I will write and ask her to see me to-morrow. Then I can explain all to her and she will decide what's to be done." Dixon pushed over the blotting pad to him and Forrester wrote a few lines rapidly, then, as he addressed and fastened the envelope he said: "I leave myself entirely in your hands, Dixon. I suppose the best thing I can do is to get back to my regiment as soon as I can. Thank heaven I did not send in my papers. It's all like my cursed luck." He wrung his friend's hand and was gone.

Somewhat to Dixon's surprise Forrester did not appear next day, and in the evening when the former, who felt rather uneasy about him, called at his hotel he was informed that Capt. Forrester was out—had been out all day.

"He has been running his head into some noose, I have no doubt," was Dixon's mental comment as he took his way to his snug bachelor's quarters in Victoria street, and spent the evening expecting a visit from his unlucky friend. He was disappointed, however.

It was not till noon next day that Forrester made his appearance. He looked haggard and depressed, but had evidently endeavored to pull himself together and spoke with more composure than at their last meeting.

"Here is a note I received this morning," he said, handing it to Dixon. "Rather startling, eh! I suppose I had better keep the appointment."

Dixon read as follows:

"DEAR SIR: I should very much like to speak to you respecting the property we both claim, as I cannot help feeling for the disappointment you must have had. Will you meet me to-morrow at Messrs. Henderson's office about two o'clock? If you will not or cannot, please address to me, their care."

These lines were written the day before and bore no address.

"Go!" cried Dixon, handing back the note, "of course you must go. Why don't you go in for the heiress? It would be a splendid solution of all difficulties and she may be a tolerably looking girl."

"Thank you. I don't fancy the underbred niece of a housekeeper," said Forrester, impatiently. "Besides I am not a free man until I have come to an understanding with the lady I asked to be my wife. I have just come from her place. I was so puzzled and worried at having no answer to my note yesterday that I went up to Kilburn this morning and found she was laid up with a bad cold. Still she might have sent me a line in reply."

"Probably she has heard that you have lost or are likely to lose, your fortune."

"No. That cock won't fight, Dixon. She can know nothing of my affairs. She is among a totally different set of people. However, I will see this Selwyn girl, though I can't see the use of an interview. One must not be uncivil."

"No, certainly not," returned Dixon, and they continued to talk of Forrester's affairs for a considerable time, Dixon perceiving with grave uneasiness what a stronghold his friend's passion for his fascinating traveling companion had taken upon him.

At last it was time to start for Parliament street, where the office of Henderson was situated.

Forrester walked thither in a sort of dream. It was cruel hard lines to be robbed of love and money by one fell blow. What a different aspect life bore to-day from what it did two days ago. Why did Angela avoid him? It looked like avoidance. If she loved him and would wait for him, there was something still to hope for, but how pale and dim compared to the vivid colors hope wore for the last month.

"Yes, Miss Selwyn is expected," replied a clerk to Forrester's inquiry, when he reached his destination. "Please walk up, sir," and Forrester, with the same sulky curiosity stirring in his mind, ascended to the private office of the solicitor, a grave, sedate man, who received him civilly, and then conducted him into another room, observing that Miss Selwyn was anxious to see him alone, though he (Henderson) did not quite approve of the step.

"I myself don't see that an interview can do any good," returned Forrester, gloomily. Whereupon, having given him the Times, Henderson closed the door and left him to his own reflections.

The succeeding ten minutes seemed exceedingly long, but at last the door opened and a small, slight figure dressed in black entered.

Forrester gazed at her in speechless astonishment. "Miss Cavallo," he exclaimed, recovering himself. "This is most unexpected! I thought you were too unwell to leave your room?" and he took her hand in both his own.

"It is imprudent!" she returned, unsteadily, flushing and then growing white. "But I came by the wish of Miss Selwyn, whom I could not refuse."

"What? do you know Miss Selwyn?"

"Yes, intimately. I am here by her wish, to open a rather delicate matter—which—" she paused.

"I am very pleased she has chosen such an ambassadress," put in Forrester, smiling. "Why did you not answer my note? It has been no small addition to my troubles, your silence."

"I knew I should see you to-day," she said, "and preferred to wait until you had heard Miss Selwyn's proposition."

"What proposition?" asked Forrester. "Does she want to divide the property with me?" And he laughed bitterly.

"Something of that kind," said Angela, gravely. "She says she does not like to deprive you and she does not like to return to poverty herself; so if it seems good to you, perhaps you might enjoy it together."

"Is this an offer of marriage?" exclaimed Forrester, a look of amusement relaxing his countenance.

"It is, Capt. Forrester."

"And pray did you not tell my kinswoman that Forrester was not in the market? Who knows, as well as myself, that there is but one woman I would marry at present."

"But, Capt. Forrester, I have no fortune to replace that which you have lost; and it would never do for you to burden yourself with a penniless wife. I thought it best to give you this message and to assure you that so far as I am concerned you are free — quite free—"

"There is something I cannot fathom under all this," cried Forrester, a strange flash of suspicion darting through his brain. "You are playing some game. Tell me the truth, Angela. Who is Miss Selwyn? Where is she? Can I not see her?" He caught both her hands and looked intently into her eyes.

"Yes, you shall see her, and you will not be too harsh in your refusal," exclaimed Angela, her sweet eyes alight with a smile, arch, bright, joyous.

"No! But she must understand that my heart has passed into your keeping! That my future is in your hands!"

"She will forgive it all! Nay, she will love you the better for it. Ah! Can you not guess? Do you not see through my little ruse?"

"Good God! What do you mean?" cried Forrester, clasping her in his arms. "Do you—can you love me?"

"Yes, I do love you. No one will ever love you better than your kinswoman Sarah Selwyn! Will you forgive my deceit?"

"Give me one kiss, a long one, and I'll forgive whatever you like. Now tell me what the mystery about Miss Selwyn is?"

"Simply, that we are one and indivisible. I am Sarah Selwyn, but I have never used my real name! My dear parents, as I consider Aunt and Uncle Cavallo, in adopting me, wished to separate me as much as possible from my father and his people, so they renamed me after my mother, and it is only a short time ago, not more than two years, that I knew I was not really their child! You must let me go, Capt. Forrester! I can speak better if you do! It had been settled that I was to come over to Mrs. Bartlett to look for an engagement to sing at concerts. Then this wonderful news about old Mr. Selwyn dying without a will came to my dear good father, and he said he must urge my claims, but I thought it so impossible that I could ever become rich or grand that I begged to be let to look for an engagement all the same, so I came over to London, and met you, and you thought you too were rich and offered to share all you had with me. Now I am rich, so you must not refuse my offer to share what I have with you!" There was something infinitely bewitching in the sweetness and piquancy of her voice and look as she said this.

"My darling, I cannot believe that such a solution of my difficulties, my despair, is possible. But never more will I call you anything save Angela! Are you really my opponent—my victorious opponent?"

For answer Angela walked across to a door which opened into Mr. Henderson's room. "Ray, come here and explain to Capt. Forrester who I am," she exclaimed.

"Certainly," said Henderson, joining them. "This lady is Miss Selwyn, your second cousin, and heir of the late Mr. John Selwyn. I trust her generous sympathy with you in your disappointment has not betrayed her into any imprudence."

"It has," rejoined Forrester, looking radiant. "She has committed herself frightfully. Three weeks ago she all but refused me; to-day she has promised to be my wife. But to you I leave the tying up of her property strictly on herself."

"Ahem!" said Mr. Henderson, taking off and wiping his spectacles. "Then I presume this case will be settled out of court."

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

Study of His Childhood and Strong Characteristics.

BOYHOOD OF THE FUTURE EMPEROR.

Abrupt and Quarrelsome In Disposition, With No Regard For Neatness of Attire. Lacked the Scholastic Trait—His First Entry Into France.

[Copyright, 1895, by John Clark Ridpath.]

II.—BOYHOOD.

Napoleon may be said to have had a threefold life. He was an Italian by descent, a Corsican by variation, and a Frenchman by nationality. He was the last by a close contingency; for Corsica had only become French a few months before his birth. We may here glance briefly at the aspect of the world at the date of his apparition.

The Bourbon monarchy of France was in its hectic heyday—knowing little, and fearing nothing. Its wisest organ was the minister of Foreign Affairs, the great Choiseul. Louis XV. was in the forty-sixth year of his reign. He had recently lost a vast empire in North America, but had gained his parc aux cerfs at Versailles! Italy consisted of distracted principalities, over which the papal power still extended its scepter in spectral majesty. Clement XIV. had reached the third month of his pontificate. The Hapsburg Joseph II. was in the fourth year of that imperial rule which had now become a shadow and illusion on the disk of time. Great Britain, gaining rapidly by conquest on foreign shores, had for ruler George III., then in the thirty-first year of his age. Chatham had just resigned from the ministry, and the duke of Grafton was staggering under the first blows of Junius!

In America the rebels of New England had been outlawed by Parliament for their "rash and hasty proceeding" against the tax on tea. On the continent of Europe, Voltaire, though seventy-three years of age, was still the literary emperor—giving forth from his estate at Ferney both laws and oracles to men. Only a few miles from the birthscene in the house of Carlo Buonaparte was stationed a Provencal lieutenant with his regiment of Lorraine; and his name was Mirabeau! At that very hour, from the chateau of the Elder Mirabeau tediously back to Paris,

CARLO BONAPARTE, FATHER OF NAPOLEON.

Jean Jacques Rousseau was making his way with his Confessions in his pocket! A sick student at Leipsic, nearly twenty years of age, who had recently written a drama called Die Mitschuldigen, was about to be transferred to Strasburg: he was Goethe, the World-bard. In Russia the daughter of Christian August, of Anhalt-Zerbst, having put a seven years' oblivion between herself and her murdered husband, was sitting in imperial robes among the favorites of the corruptest court ever known in Christendom!

Letitia di Buonaparte was not quite nineteen years of age when her war-god was born. She was now for the fourth time a mother—a thing seemingly incredible in our harsh northern clime. Incidents in the first years of the Napoleonic childhood there are none recorded. We are left to himself and to his schoolmate Bourienne for our knowledge of the earliest characteristics and events of his life.

The Corsican had a prodigious memory, and it reached back well toward his infancy. When in after years he spoke of himself—as he was much given to doing—he generally used exaggeration; but we may not doubt that there was always a vein of sterling truth underrunning his dramatic recitals. We know indeed, out of the nature of the case, that his representations of his own child-character were in the main correct.

The young Buonaparte was from a babe abrupt and quarrelsome. His willfulness was extreme. The likelihood is that he never once in his life willingly obeyed anybody! Near his death, at Longwood, he declared that he was never afraid. His child-passion was frequently excited against Joseph, over whom he exercised a censorious sway from the time when they toddled together in the birth-room or fought in the yard. He appears to have loved his mother, and to have obeyed her in a morose and mathematical way; but in his last talk he indicates that his conduct as a child toward the mother was rather prudential than affectionate. He bears witness that the Ramolino lioness was tender in her treatment of him, as well as severe and just. Certain it is that in and about the maison di Buonaparte he made the earliest possible reputation as a tearer of tapestries and a scratcher of human faces.

To their fourth child, Carlo Buonaparte and his wife gave the name of Napoleon. At the first it was Napoleone. In this form the possessor retained it until, flaring up in Paris in the character of a young Jacobin, he threw away the Italian and aristocratic fictions in his name, to become plain, republican NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. In fact, there was never anything in his character to encourage the use of more letters than were necessary; his speed in writing was unfavorable to the cultivation of diacritical marks!

The first teaching of the child Bonaparte was given by his mother. Then he was sent, in his sixth year, to a child's school kept by a woman. He went from the parental threshold in that same arbitrary and belligerent mood which characterized him ever. He fought with his schoolmates, among whom he appeared with no sign of neatness in his clothing, and nothing debonair in his manner.

At this time, beside his parents, he had two important relatives. One of these was Lucien Buonaparte, brother of his grandfather Joseph; and the other was Joseph Fesch, afterwards the Cardinal Fesch, half-brother of his mother. The latter was a studious lad of twelve, who took an interest in his sister's son; and the former had wealth and influence in the island, both of which he was willing to bestow on the Bonaparte schoolboy. Young Fesch aided him with his lessons, and exercised a conservative influence on his temper. How little might it be foreseen that the younger of these twain, with his surly look and long hair and stockings down over his shoes in the dust of the playground, should one day, from an imperial palace in the most splendid city in the world despatch his elder playmate as ambassador to the Pope of Rome!

What were the civil and social influences around the schoolhouse of Bonaparte? The sentiments of that place are among the most potent and enduring forces of life. The child-nature imbibes unconsciously the prevailing principles of the hour; and the character is forming while the first hesitant words are conned from the primer. The boy Napoleon had around his schoolroom—as around his cradle—an agitated atmosphere. It was banked with the receding clouds of revolution. There was lightning on the rim, and blood on the fringes.

The majority of the Corsicans had accepted the French domination. Some still remembered Genoa with affection; and many sighed for independence. Among the latter were the Buonapartes. The feeling of regret for the lost cause began to wane about the time that Napoleon was sent to school; but there was still in his heart a drop of inherited bitterness on account of the French conquest. He looked back angrily at the terrible conditions surrounding him in his childhood. As late as his twentieth year he broke out in passion. "I was born," said he, "while my country was dying. Thirty thousand French, vomited on our shores, drowning the throne of liberty in waves of blood—such was the horrid sight which first met my view. The cries of the dying, the groans of the oppressed, tears of despair, surrounded my cradle at my birth." The utterance shows how hardly the future emperor of the French himself in youth became a Frenchman.

When, from the sixth to the ninth year of his age, the boy Bonaparte attended school in his native town, three lines radiated before his feet. One of these was dim and clouded, but glorified with patches of extreme light. It was the way into the kingdom of that New Philosophy which was just then revealing itself with such brilliancy in France. A second and well-trod way led straightly to the Church. Rome was great and honorable. Her rewards for diligent ambition were rich and certain. The young aspirant who entered her colleges might well expect emolument and reputation. The third path led dangerously to the military life. None might at that time discern the coming upheaval of society, with its concomitant reign of the sword. But the agitations of the epoch were sufficient to encourage war, and to offer a measure of inducement to follow in the path of military glory.

The taciturn schoolboy of Ajaccio had these three open ways before him. From the first, he was precluded by the dispositions of his family, intensified in himself. He never had the scholastic trait. His abilities as a pupil, and afterwards as a military cadet, showed nothing of the philosophe. Indeed he conceived—how early in boyhood we know not—a prejudice against philosophy and the philosophers as well. As for the Church, he had an inbred admiration for Rome; but the kind of life offered in the priesthood was without attractions for him personally. He was willing that Joseph and other of his friends should become priests and bishops; but not himself. Neither the scholar's gown nor the priest's surplice offered the slightest attraction to his imagination.

The condition of the Buonaparte family about the years 1776-78 was critical. Carlo, the father, had given an interested adhesion to the French. He had his hopes from the annexation. He would keep his titles and recover the properties formerly belonging to the family. The Buonaparte estates in Corsica had been mostly lost. Some had been confiscated by the Genoese party and converted into Jesuit schools. The recent revolution had reduced Carlo's means almost to naught. He was himself of no reputation as an economist. His family had rapidly multiplied. Two children died in infancy between the birth of Napoleon and that of Lucien, in 1775. The family was brought almost to penury.

Carlo de Buonoparte could not get back his properties. The privilege of writing his name with a de did not compensate for his losses. He struggled with adversity, and, sought the aid of influential friends. Among these the most available was General Marbœuf. The latter in 1776 appealed on behalf of his Corsican friends to the authorities in Paris for the privilege of educating the Buonaparte boys in France at the expense of the royal treasury. This thing might be done—provided the applicants should be under ten years of age, and be able to show four strains of noble blood in their veins! In the case of the boys Buonaparte, this could not be proved; and affairs in the homestead went from bad to worse.

At this juncture history, rather than man, came to the rescue. France was on the verge of bankruptcy. One finance minister after another was appointed, and one financial scheme after another exploded in the hands of the inventors. It became necessary to call together, at Versailles, a council of the nobles. Carlo de Buonaparte was chosen a representative from Corsica. In going to perform his duty at the French capital, he took with him, to be distributed en route, his two sons, Joseph and Napoleon; also, the boys' half uncle, Joseph Fesch; also, a cousin of Letitia, the mother. As for Fesch, he was to be left as a student at Aix. The cousin had been appointed to an office in the church at Autun; and at that place the distracted father determined to drop his two sons at school.

This was in the year 1778. The company set out by way of Florence, Genoa, Marseilles, Lyons. The youngest of the company was a sad-faced, big-eyed boy, in such apparel as could be furnished in the house of an impecunious nobleman. The boy's head was bent forward as he walked. His foot now for the first time touched the continent. He was in his tenth year. He muttered broken ejaculations to his companions. It was Napoleon Bonaparte on his way to Autun—and the world.

Two Kinds of It.

The landlady had left the star boarder to carve the fowl while she went out into the kitchen to see about some of the other portions of the feast. Presently she stuck her head in the door.

"Isn't that carving done yet?" she asked in a tone implying that it was not, and was not because the boarder didn't know any more about carving than a Philadelphian knows about rapid transit.

"It is, madam," he responded, with the sweetest grace imaginable, "but the chicken is not." And he passed it over to her with the raw edges showing through in half a dozen places.—Detroit Free Press.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher, That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

CHAPTER I.

Meryon awoke with the issue of an interesting dream in doubt. Terah had admitted that she loved him; the prince had seemed disposed to hear reason; but just then the purple and gold heraldic heron which formed the central device of his highness' state banner detached itself from the surrounding embroidery and flew viciously at Meryon's head. He heard Terah's voice raised in warning, and saw two black mountains at the verge of a desolate plain, sundered from each other by a rugged defile. The sun was setting behind the mountains—and he awoke.

He yawned and glanced at the long silver chain by which a lamp of pierced brass depended from the ceiling. A ray of sunlight from the east window rested on it—by which token he knew it was about nine o'clock.

The room in which he lay was beautiful and—as the bedchamber of a modern young American—singular.

Lofty and of good size, it was rather narrow for its length. Polished marbles of tender hues paved the floor, the central part of which was depressed several inches below the ends, and in a basin in this depression leaped and fell the slender jet of a fountain. A high dado glowed with oriental tiles colored like fading sunsets, and the walls above were hung with tapestries stained as with crushed roses and violets. Higher still was a wide border of dark brown wood exquisitely carved, and above this the four windows, a foot high by four times that width. Silks of mellow tone draped the ceiling.

Along three sides of the south end of the chamber extended a broad divan, part of which served Meryon as a bed. Here and there about this dim, lovely room stood vases of wrought bronze and fine porcelain. Within reach of his arm was a triple gong on a carved wood stand, with a hammer hanging by a silken cord. Meryon struck thrice upon this graceful instrument, and three soft notes of an octave's interval tingled on the air. As they subsided the portiere was pushed open, and a graceful figure entered, bearing a tray with coffee, cakes and cigarettes.

Had the figure been fully draped, you would have taken it for that of a girl, so refined and beautiful were the aquiline features and the shaggy cloud of soot-black, fine-spun hair, which fell on the shoulders. But the supple body, naked from the waist up, was that of a boy of twelve or fourteen, tawny as fine bronze. Girt round his loins was a skirt of dark blue gossamer stuff, with silver lines running through it and a silver fringe, and about his neck a double necklace of delicate silver links hung half way down his breast. Black as night were the great eyes which met Meryon's blue ones, and radiant the smile of greeting which revealed his flashing teeth.

The ensuing dialogue, though carried on in an oriental tongue, shall for the sake of uniformity be here given in the English equivalent.

"The top of the morning to you, Ebal, my beauty!" said the American. "You're a sight for sore eyes! Did anyone ever tell you that you look surprisingly like the divine Princess Terah—God bless her! Maybe only an artist who has painted your portrait as often as I have could see it in your present rig; but put on one of her dresses and anyone would know it. The funny thing is that neither she nor you resemble the prince; but Terah's mother, if she were asked * * * however, there's no fathoming the mysteries of oriental—diplomacy."

"Honored lord!" murmured the boy, in a tone of half-frightened remonstrance, but smiling still. He knelt and placed the tray upon the divan beside his master. Then taking a cigarette from the enameled box on the tray he put it daintily between his lips and lit it at the silver spirit lamp. Having inhaled a single whiff of fragrant smoke, he handed it to Meryon with a charming obeisance and he accepted it with the complacency of one who knows his cast and likes it.

"I don't know whether this is most like Aladdin's palace or a glorified Turkish bath," said he to himself; and then to Ebal: "What news have you brought me, you rascal? What of the rose who makes cabbages of all other roses—the star that makes a brass kettle of the sun? Have you brought me nothing from her?"

Now, Ebal thought Meryon a wonderful and worshipful being, but as a born oriental he was frightened by the audacity of his passion for the young princess. From a fold of his girdle he took a small rosebud, such as grew on the gardens of Saadi or of Omar, and presented it to the other as if it were a fragile explosive.

"I know nothing myself, mighty lord—but Senuah said I was to give this to you and to say that the lion must beware of the pitfall which the hunter digs in his path. That means Hatipha, the head eunuch—how I hate the old beast!" he added, lowering his voice to a whisper.

Meryon laughed. "That's all right, my lad," he said, taking the bud and kissing it. "Don't you be scared. I'm looking out for you; and I'm wiser than a thousand such old mules as Hatipha. I talk openly to you because I love you, and Senuah is our confidante because she's your sister and the princess' favorite maid—and there's no one to take her place. But I can hold my tongue when I see fit. And when the time comes"—here he bestowed upon the youth a wink of great significance. "I'll take you along with us to America and make your fortune. Well, now, be off, my beauty, and leave me to drink my coffee and meditate!"

"But I may help my lord to dress later?" asked Ebal, reluctantly retiring from the fascinating presence.

"When I'm ready I'll hit the gong. There — Allah—Il—Allah Bismillah! Clear out!"

As Ebal vanished with a smile and a sigh, Meryon fell upon the bud with amorous rapture. It fared badly, as buds are apt to do, in the cause of love. After smelling and kissing it till it looked as if ruined by premature dissipation, the lover ended by devouring it, petals, calix and all, as if by incorporating it with his bodily substance to mystically bind to his own the soul of his beloved. Then he drank his coffee and took counsel with himself.

He was an American artist in search of the beautiful, whose devotion to his art was proved by his possessing a fortune that made him more than independent of the world. He had brought good letters of introduction to the prince of this little kingdom, and had confirmed his welcome by painting a capital full-length portrait of his host. Great favor was his; a suite of rooms in the palace, and servants for his exclusive behoof. The prince was not only at all times accessible to him without ceremony, but could not get enough of his society. During his two months' sojourn he had made a lot of valuable studies, in many of which Ebal, in all poses and costumes, or with no costume save his own boyish beauty, was the center of interest. This was all very well.

But alas for insatiable human nature and malicious fate! One day (owing to a concatentation of accidents which cannot here be detailed) he met face to face and unpremeditatedly the only daughter of the prince, Terah the beautiful. It was all up with him in a moment; and her oriental fancy seems to have been no less captivated by the fresh complexion, handsome features and red hair of the occidental stranger. They loved each other at the first intention, as surgeons say, just as young people used to do in the golden prime of the good Haroun Alraschid. Ah! Romance lingers in this old world yet, as we shall see!

Meryon had the tact to cover his face with his hands, and the presence of mind to look through his fingers. The princess replaced her veil not so hastily as to prevent a quick, artist glance from catching a rapturous impression of her dusky grace and glorious eyes. Fat old Hatipha, with pendent cheeks flapping, bustled up in vast perturbation and whipped the princess out of the infidel's sight as fast as he could. But Senuah, following, threw over her shoulder an arch glance which in America would have passed for a wink of sympathetic intelligence. Mischief was afoot.

Then followed intrigue. One afternoon the back part of the booth of Musreddin, the jewel-merchant, contained a new apprentice, with huge turban and voluminous drapery, whose blue eyes wandered from his work as Terah entered, and never left her face during the half hour she chaffered with the jeweler over the price of a ring—which, on the other hand, she would never have looked at twice, had she not been stealing a thousand glances at the back part of the shop! Again, from a meshreble-screened window (chartered for the purpose), who glowered invisible and impassioned while Terah, her divine countenance not ten inches from his, debated interminably with Senuah as to whether they should turn to the right and visit the confectioner, or to the left to the silk mercer's; while Hatipha, the unsuspicious, stood in the shadow hard-by, with mind at ease because, forsooth, the street was empty. Empty!—and all the while Terah's soft finger tips were being kissed ravenously through the lattice-work, and, when at last the debate with Senuah came to an end, folded themselves about a love-note designed in the most gloriously extravagant terms! No name was signed to that note, but perhaps the princess didn't know whom it came from, and didn't thenceforth wear it in her bosom until—paradoxical as it may seem—it got worn out, and means had to be devised to furnish her with another!

Yes, here in the heart of the guarded orient, and under the shadow as it were of the bow-string, was this love affair carried on, until this very morning of the rosebud. How was it to end? Ah, how indeed!

"No doubt," Meryon said to himself, "eloping with an oriental princess under the noses of her father and the head eunich isn't the easiest thing in the world—I never said it was! But a bonanza like that is worth a risk. The boldest way is the best; bribe Musreddin again; wait with the horses at the back door in the alley; she comes in to buy a new ring; frightful row in the street at the front between two camel-drivers; Hatipha mounts guard at the front door; Terah slips into a rear room and a suit of boy's clothes and so out at the back, mounts, and we're off! Give us ten minutes' start, and 'they'll have fleet steeds that follow,' quoth young Lochinvar! That's the programme. Sorry to play such a game on the poor old prince, but that is the fault of the oriental system—and oh, my soul! what an armful of heaven she is."

He caught up a pillow and vicariously pressed Terah to his heart. Like other lovers he was sometimes constrained to wreak himself on his imagination.

"I quite pity Hatipha, too," he said, when he came to himself, "but in the bright lexicon of my youth there's no such word as getting bested by any tumble-down, earringed, dew-lapped, pot-bellied old nondescript like that—I guess not! I'll go down and interview Musreddin as quick as I can get my clothes on."

He reached for the gong, but ere he could strike it the curtains parted and in sprang Ebal, evidently in a fright.

Consumption

is amenable to treatment. Hope, courage, proper exercise, and from the inception of the disease the continual use of Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites, are absolutely necessary.

Keep up good courage, and with the use of this most nourishing and fattening preparation recovery is certain in the first stages, and may be accomplished even when the lungs are seriously involved. Stop the excessive waste (and nothing will do it like Scott's Emulsion), and you are almost safe.

Don't be persuaded to accept a substitute!

OUR CLIMATE COMPARED.

Southern California and Plainfield Not So Widely Divergent As Might Be Supposed.

Hugh D. Vail, brother of Mahlon Vail of this city sends to The Press the following interesting comparison of the weather of his home, Santa Barbara, for 1894, with that of Plainfield for the same period:

	At Plainfield	At S. B.
Mean temperature of the year.....	52.9	59.6
Mean temperature of the Summer.	73.2	63.4
Mean temperature of the Winter...	31.9	51.5
Mean temperature of the Spring...	51.1	56.2
Mean temperature of the Fall.....	53.9	62
Mean temperature coldest month..	28.1	49.7
Mean temperature warmest month.	76.4	65.9
Highest temperature in the year...	100	94
Lowest temperature in the year....	1	33
Yearly variation in temperature....	99	61
Mean of daily variation.....	20.7	16.3
Mean of monthly variation.....	50	36
Number of clear days.....	88	215
Number of fair days.....	174	70
Number of cloudy days.....	103	80
Number of days when the rainfall was over 1.100 inches.....	139	27
Total precipitation in inches.....	50.6	10.1

The above comparison—says Mr. Vail—ought to convince any one who examines it that this is not the very hot place during Summer, that all South California is generally supposed to be by persons in the east.

OLD POINT COMFORT.

Delightful Personally-Conducted Tour via Pennsylvania Railroad.

No other resort of the Upper South can compare with Old Point Comfort in attractiveness. Apart from its historical surroundings and the fact of its being a Government post, the situation of the place, with its magnificent ocean front and elegantly-planned drives, would commend it to the public as a most delightful place to spend a few-days vacation.

The next tour will leave New York and Philadelphia by special train Thursday, March 7, and tickets will be good for return passage on special train leaving Old Point Comfort the following Saturday. The rates, including transportation and meals en route in each direction, as well as hotel accommodations at Hygeia Hotel, Old Point Comfort, will be $15.50 from New York and $12.50 from Philadelphia; proportionate rates from other points. COMING SLOW BUT SURE Rapid Transit Extension Delayed by Discordant Elements.

COMMITTEE DOING THEIR BEST.

Chairman Fisk Thinks Sufficient Permits Will Be Secured to Grant Franchises by the Next Regular Meeting of the Council—Everything Agreed on Between Committee and Railroad.

Chairman Fisk of the Street Committee of the Council told a Daily Press reporter yesterday afternoon that in all probability the committee would have nothing definite to report at the Council meeting this evening concerning the extension of the street railway so as to cover the northeastern and southwestern portions of the city. However, he stated, a report would be made that matters to that end were progressing as rapidly as possible.

The committee have been fully informed from time to time as to the action and efforts which the railroad company are making to secure the right of way along the thoroughfares through which it is desired to run cars, and Mr. Fisk stated that there was a determination on the part of the railroad officials to accomplish this object just as soon as possible. It requires great diligence to secure concessions from a majority of property owners along a street. Some people have a natural aversion to street cars passing their residences, others want exorbitant recompense for granting the right of way, while there are still others who manifest opposition for various reasons; and to overcome all these conflicting interests time and patience are needed.

The company have been successful in securing many concessions of the right of way along Watchung avenue, Putnam avenue and Richmond street, but on streets west of Watchung avenue it has been impossible to secure any favorable action from residents looking to the extension of transit facilities to their localities for the reasons specified above.

Mr. Fisk said to the reporter that before the next regular meeting of the Council it is likely that the railroad company will have secured sufficient concessions to warrant the introduction of an ordinance—which is already prepared—granting the franchises necessary to commence the work of extension. In fact, he said, at present enough rights have been resigned which assure the consummation of the original plans of the company to provide rapid transit to all parts of the city, though the routes may and probably will vary some from those first intended.

The Street Committee have been laid open to a great deal of censure by certain citizens for the manner in which they have conducted negotiations for the extension, but their efforts have been constant and earnest to give to the city of Plainfield a road that when completed will be satisfactory to all citizens—something that is no easy task with so many discordant elements placing obstacles in the way of accomplishment.

In order that future trouble may be avoided the consents of property owners who grant the right of way will be reduced to writing before the franchises are extended.

Death of E. C. Apgar.

After a long illness, Edwin C. Apgar of 713 West Third street, died Srturday afternoon.

Mr. Apgar moved to Plainfield a few years ago, and secured an excellent position in the Pond Machine Tool Company's works.

His health was not very good, and he rapidly declined, until he was obliged to give up his position.

He leaves a wife who has the sympathy of a very large circle of friends.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow evening at 8, from his late home. Interment will be in Milford.

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. TWO YEARS OF PROSPERITY.

Grace M. E. Church Appropriately Observes Its Third Anniversary.

Grace M. E Church was well filled last night by those anxious to attend and enjoy the ex rcises incident to the third anniversary of this society. The service was opened by Dr Lewis offering prayer; he was followed by Dr. H. K. Carroll, who was the first one to conduct regular services in the edifice. He is thoroughly conversant with the history of the church and its early struggles for existence, and it was on this topic that he spoke.

Dr. Carroll said its history was really no different from the history of other churches. When it was first proposed to build a Methodist Church in that portion of North Plainfield a great many thought such a project was impossible, and any efforts in that direction would be wasted, for the field was apparently thoroughly covered. In 1886 $3,600 was easily raised to purchase the lots on which the church now stands, and in 1891 a church to cost $7,500 was started, and when completed it was necessary to raise $2 100 to free it from debt. All this was accomplished and on Feb 14, 1892, the church was dedicated, and on March 26, 1893, the present organization was formed with 72 members, most of whom were from the First M. E. Church. The membership now numbers 107, and all are active workers.

John Valiant, superintendent of the Sunday-school, furnished a few interesting statistics of the growth of this line of work. The school was organized with 78 scholars and 30 officers, which had now increased to 230 members, 81 of whom were in the primary department. In three years $650 had been raised for the maintenance of the school, $150 for missions and $20 for miscellaneous purposes. A library and more room were needed.

After this the most important portion of the evening service took place when 9 little children were taken into the church on probation by Rev. Mr. Randolph A short sketch of the history of the choir was also given by Mr. Randolph.

The meeting was closed by a few remarks from Dr. Lewis, who has the faculty of saying the right thing in the right place. He said that it was easy to undo in two years all the good work that had been done, by a few members becoming inactive and rebellious at every proposed move of the society; especially so when there was so many young people in the church. Children, he said, learn by example rather than by precept, and therefore it was in the home that Christian unity was needed. The homes make and unmake churches, pastors, schools, etc., by the examples set by the older members of a household for the young ones to pattern after. As a parting word he wanted to admonish the young people not to believe that they can do the same thing that has ruined some one else and not be ruined themselves.

TEA IN THE PARK.

The tea given by Mrs. Henry McGee at her beautifully appointed home on Orchard place, Saturday afternoon and evening, from 4 to 7, afforded delight for 175 guests.

The decorations were yellow and green, and harmonized handsomely with the frail little Genista flowers, which were promiscuous about the house, and which sent forth a sweet fragrance.

The hostess was assisted in receiving by Mesdames Dupee, Joy, Horne, McGee, of Plainfield; Welch of Brooklyn, and Miss Cowan of Shady Side.

At the table Mesdames Reed and McCutchen presided, and were assisted by Misses Wilder, Shirley and Ross of Brooklyn, and Ross of North Plainfield.

Among those present from out of town were Mrs. Harry Brewster of New York, and Miss Dodd of Newark.

Great Stories, All of Them.

A most fascinating tale is "The Hollow Ruby" by Julian Hawthorne, now running as a serial in The Daily Press. It will be concluded this week, and succeeded by "Between Scylla and Charybdis" by Mrs. E. Lynn Linton. After that comes "The Thirteenth Column" by Barry Pain, and "Eight Minutes of Twelve" by Nym Crinkle. All of the serials of The Daily Press are crisp, brand-new, copyrighted, and by the best living popular authors.

Now for First Place.

Tomorrow night the Plainfield Bowling Club will contest a game with the Finderne Club on the Board of Trade alleys. By winning this game Plainfield will tie Finderne and Bound Brook for first place in the series.

—The three children of Michael Wunderlick of Leland avenue who were seriously ill with scarlet fever have fully recovered, and the quarantine was removed from the house Saturday.

The experience of Geo. A. Apgar, of German Valley, N. J., is well worth remembering. He was troubled with chronic diarrhoea and doctored for five months and was treated by four different doctors without benefit. He then began using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, of which one small bottle effected a complete cure. It is for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. THE MIDST OF ALARMS.

Fire Gongs Make a Lively Sunday Racket.

BOTH SIDES OF THE BROOK.

Hot Ashes Cause a Blaze at Samuel Milliken's Barn, and a Borough Greenhouse is Damaged—North Plainfield's Gong Runs Away with Itself.

The barn in the rear of the residence of Samuel Milliken, 830 Central avenue, got afire yesterday morning at 7:30 from hot ashes which had been placed in barrels near the structure a few moments before, and when discovered by the hostler was burning briskly.

Considerable time was lost in getting the department to the scene, by reason of Chief Doane first being notified over the telephone by F. H. Andrews, and he in turn asking Ernest Ackerman, who resides near Box 32, on the corner of West Seventh street and Central avenue, to ring the box alarm.

Five minutes after the alarm was sent in, the department was at work speedily extinguishing the flames.

The only damage was the burning of a portion of the siding on the west end of the structure. The loss will not exceed $40, fully insured.

Mrs. S. H. Milliken hospitably served coffee to the members of the fire department after the flames were extinguished, and Mr. Milliken through The Press thanks the firemen and neighbors.

A small greenhouse with its contents of plants, owned by Fred Baker, on Race street, was destroyed by fire last night at 10. Loss $75; no insurance. Box 142 was sounded, and the borough firemen were on hand as soon as possible, but could not save the property.

The irregular alarm which the borough fire gong gave forth last night was due to the disarrangement of the mechanism of the clock regulating the valves of the whistle.

Earnest in Name and Fact.

The Earnest Workers, the boys mission band of the Crescent Avenue Church, held the annual election of officers and a sociable Thursday afternoon. The following were elected: President, Robert C. LaBoyteaux; Vice-president, Edward S. Peck; Secretary, George H. Richards; Treasurer, Edward A. Janes.

The treasurer's report for the year showed the following items: $30 to Pekin, China; $15 to the Nassau mission ship in Africa; $12 to Baranquilla, South America.

Rev. Dr. Blodgett made a short address which he divided into four parts: Be glad that you were born in a Christian land, become a Christian, give to and support missions and missionaries, and become a missionary yourself.

Ice-cream and cake were served, and a social time was enjoyed. The superintendent of this flourishing society is Miss Mary V. D. Bronson; her assistant is Miss Harriet Gardner.

Five Tremendous Scenes.

In "The Tornado" in Music Hall tomorrow night are to be seen five great combinations of scenic and mechanical effects: The tornado in the first act, the collision of two great ocean liners in the second act, the half dozen sailors on the yardarm of a swaying mast furling a monster sail at a dizzy height above the deck of a ship in the very teeth of a furious gale, also a feature of the second act; the night scene of Chicago Harbor, showing with accuracy the famous Masonic Temple, the Auditorium, the Randolph Street Viaduct, and Chicago's vast water front, in the third act; the dissecting room in a medical college in the fourth act; and the beautiful Autumn setting of the fifth act. Indeed, "The Tornado" is one of the most elaborately staged productions of melodrama ever seen in America.

Danced in Washington's Honor.

THIS BUILDING FREE TO ALL

Regulations of the Y. M. C. A. Home Clearly Specified by President Murray.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS: The opening of the new Young Men's Christian Association building has caused much inquiry and some misunderstanding as to who is entitled to use the building. With your permission I would like to take this opportunity to answer these inquiries and to correct this misunderstanding:

1. The building has been erected by the people of Plainfield for the young men of Plainfield, and we hold it in trust for them. Any man, Jew or Gentile, Roman Catholic or Protestant, unitarian or trinitarian, black or white, whether he is a member of the Association or not, can use the building at any time between 9 a. m. and 10 p. m., on any day except Sunday, the only condition being that he shall be over sixteen years of age and shall conduct himself properly. He will be heartily welcome. Special arrangements have been made for boys under sixteen.

2 Members, of course, have certain privileges which others do not have, namely: the use, in addition to other parts of the building, of the gymnasium, bowling alley, baths and circulating library. All except those are absolutely free.

3. Those who desire to become members, and to help pay the expenses of the Association, do so by the payment, after election, of an annual fee, as follows: Sustaining, $10 or more; simple membership, $2; full, entitling to all privileges, $8; limited, $5, entitling to classes, entertainments, etc., but not to gymnasium, bowling alley and bath. Any man, without regard to creed, can become a member of the Association, in whichever of these classes he wishes.

4. The affairs of the Association are managed by a board of directors; and only members of the Association who are also members of evangelical churches, can vote for officers. We are above all else a Christian association, and our support comes in great measure from church members; it has therefore been found wise to place the management of the organization in the hands of those who are connected with God's appointed representative on earth, whose servant we are:

WILLIAM D. MURRAY,
President.

TO CARRY THE GOSPEL.

The Sunshine Mission Band Are Practical Little Workers.

The juvenile members of the Sunshine Mission Band of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church on Saturday afternoon gave evidence that little people can do good as well as big people in church work. The occasion at which this fact was evidenced was a sale of profitable articles gathered by the activity of the lads and lasses of this band of workers, the proceeds of which are to be transmitted to the lands where the Gospel has not invaded to any great extent.

The various tables were in charge of the following bright-faced children:

Lemonade—Sarah Richards; Dolls—Lucie Budlong, and Dorothy Langdon; Housekeepers—Margaret Leal, and Nina Sampson; Candy—Anna Cahoone, Clara Woodward, Lucille Prettie, Mildred Cone, Libbie Fish, and Helen Lovell; Cake—Grace Peck, Anita Frayley, Ellen Vandevort, Elsie Martin, and Rose Barber; Waitresses—Grace and Cony Wilcox, Florence Beebe, Florence Stewart, and Theodora Wilcox.

Misses Buell and Cahoone exercised a motherly oversight over the sale, and took care that no mistakes were made.

PINK AND GREEN TEA.

The residence of J. W. Sandford, Jr., West Seventh street, was the scene of a pretty and pleasant tea and reception Saturday afternoon, given by Mrs. Sandford and Mrs. Albert Arthur Tilney of Boston, at which 130 of their friends were entertained in a graceful manner.

The dominant colors of the decorations were pink and green, with pink carnations on the dining room and pink roses in the parlor.

Mrs James Hildreth Hallock and Mrs Roger Franklin Murray poured tea, and were assisted in serving by Misses Laura VanDerbeck, Grace Yerkes, Estelle Place and Pauline May Sandford.

Christian Endeavor Rally.

The eight societies of Junior Christian Endeavorers of Plainfield will have a grand rally at the First Baptist Church, Thursday evening, Feb. 28. An interesting programme is being rehearsed by the young people, and an enjoyable evening is promised.

O. W. O. Hardman, sheriff of Tyler Co., W. Va., appreciates a good thing and does not hesitate to say so. He was almost prostrated with a cold when he procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He says: "It gave me prompt relief. I find it to be an invaluable remedy for coughs and colds." For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

FANWOOD GETS CROSS.

Doesn't Like the Way the Borough Project Works.

SHE SCENTS A SELFISH SCHEME.

Correspondents Protest Against the Alleged Effort of Sheriff Kyte's Improvement Company to Shut Scotch Plains Out of the World.

The Press has hitherto announced the progress of the movement to form a borough of the railway-station end of Fanwood Township. That the proposition is not altogether favorably received, the following communications indicate:

THE NEW JERSEY BOROUGH CRAZE

To The Editor of The Evening Post:

SIR: Apropos of your articles of August 29 and December 28 last on "The Borough Craze", which I read with great interest and have carefully preserved, the following recent occurrences here may interest those of your readers who are or may be "passed through the fire."

The assessed value of the property in this little village (which together with the village of Scotch Plains is embraced in the township of Fanwood) does not, I believe, exceed the sum of $125,000, or the number of voters 80. One of the arms of the trolley octopus has been for some time suitor before our township committee for a right of way through this village, which is right on the steam railroad; but the committee have, as it seems to me very properly, insisted that the construction of a branch or "loop" to Scotch Plains, over a mile away from the steam or any other railroad, shall be a condition of the grant to the trolley. This the trolley people object to and are using every means to escape.

At this juncture, an officer of a land company, which is the largest owner in this village, begins measures to form a borough (substantially out of this village) and for the avowed purpose of (among other things) giving to the trolley what the township committee refuses—the right of way without the condition of the "loop"; and so take away the one chance that our sister village has had for twenty years to get in communication with the outside world. The form of incorporation proposed is that under the borough commission act of 1882, and among the provisions of that act is, that the county freeholder shall call an election to decide the question by a majority vote, upon petition signed by the owners of (only) one-tenth of the taxable property within the limits of the proposed borough. Another provision places borough government in the hands of seven commissioners, of whom two need not be residents. Of the first requisite (the property) the land company easily have six-tenths, and of the other (the majority of votes cast) they may, as landlord or mortgagee, feel pretty safe of a like proportion. This case needs no comment—it speaks for itself!

A FANWOODER,
Fanwood, N. J., February 22.

WRIGHT BABCOCK POINTS OUT A DANGER

Editor of The Union County Standard:—About a year ago, at a public meeting of the electors of the Township of Fanwood (embracing the villages of Fanwood and Scotch Plains) held in a clubhouse of the place, a committee of representative men was, agreeable to request, appointed to hear, consider and investigate the advisability of the formation of a borough within certain limits (substantially the village of Fanwood), and if found advisable, to state which one of the numerous "Borough Acts" (then numbering over 100) the Committee recommended for the purpose; and to report to a subsequent public meeting to be held at the same place about six weeks later.

This report was made at the time and place prescribed. Though it was in writing and quite full in some respects, it was conspicuously inconclusive and undecisive with respect to the advisability of such a step, and with respect to the best form of doing it, if advisable, under the conditions of the particular case; and the report ended by asking to have the Committee indefinitely continued and to have some slight changes made in its membership. This request, coupled with a report of such colorless character, impressed a "safe majority" of the meeting before which it was made, with the opinion that corporate and political interests were or would be associated with and dominant in a question that should be purely an economic one. So the meeting accepted the report and thanked the Committee, but refusing its request, discharged it!

That the "safe majority" of that meeting judged accurately and acted wisely, would appear from the following occurrences, which I state only on credible information: Last Tuesday evening, at a meeting of the Fanwood Fire Company, not held in its "Truckhouse" but at a private residence, to which meeting (with a single exception to be noted below) no one but members of that company had either invitation or access, an officer (the "single exception" above referred to) of a Land Company (the largest local owners) again advocated the formation of a borough, and this time recommended that such formation be under the "Borough Commission Act".

One of the peculiar features of this Act is, that the question of action under it must be (after certain notice) submitted to a vote of the electors within the limits of the proposed borough, on the application of the owners of only one-tenth of the assessed value of the included property and so without any public discussion of the question; and that a majority of the votes cast, shall decide that question. Another peculiar feature of the Act referred to is, that the government of such a borough (by 7 Commissioners) is placed in the will of a plurality of votes cast.

Of the first requisite (the property) the Land Company now own more than six-tenths, and of the second (the votes cast) that company may and undoubtedly will control a like proportion as landlord or mortgagee, of the voters.

Therefore if the electors of Fanwood (within the proposed limits of the proposed borough) vote for it, they will in reality vote themselves and the property over to the care, custody and control of a private corporation!!

You will do our community a service if you will give these facts wide and conspicuous publicity.

WRIGHT BABCOCK.

THROUGH THE EMERALD ISLE.

An Audience in Holy Cross Church Hears an Interesting Lecture.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy is an interesting talker and when he has an interesting subject his listeners are always entertained in an interesting manner. Thus it was on Saturday evening that the audience in the Sunday-school room of Holy Cross church went away greatly amused and instructed after hearing the lecture on "Ireland", illustrated by a series of views exhibited by the Camera Club, which added realism to the oral description of Mr. Murphy, and gave a better conception of the places talked about.

Starting with the voyage across the Atlantic he carried those present through all the picturesque and historical scenes of the Emerald Isle, frequently interspersing his lecture with stories and witticisms of the Celtic race, related with true mimicry, which he encountered during his tour, and the repetition of which convulsed his audience with laughter. One of the most interesting characters of which he spoke were the drivers of the celebrated Irish jaunting carts—which, he said, jar one mentally as well as physically, but there seemed to be a bit of romance in riding in them that was conducive to a jolly state of mind and disposition, accentuated by the felicitous temperament of the droll drivers, who, however, were experts in devising means to become the recipients of "tips".

The lecture was closed by brief biographical sketches of Ireland's great sons—Oliver Goldsmith, Edmund Burke and Robert Emmett.

At the conclusion a vote of thanks was extended by the audience to the speaker for the pleasant evening afforded them.

The views were skilfully shown by Messrs. Oscar S. Teale, J. Hervey Doane and Harry Coward of the Camera Club.

Fred Dunn of Plainfield Illuminating the West.

Fred S. Dunn, formerly engineer of the electric light works in this city, who was compelled to resign his position and go to California, on account of his health, went to Pasadena early last Fall and soon showed his worth as an electrician and secured a lucrative and responsible position as engineer of the great Lowe Cable Incline Railway on Echo Mountain. He also has charge of the great 3,000,000 candle-power search-light at Echo Mountain, the largest search-light in the world, and which was a wonder of the Chicago Exposition.

His health is much improved, and he is gaining in weight. He is a big man out there, and highly respected everywhere. He is an expert amateur photographer, and has recently sent to Plainfield several large views of the great railway and search-light, and of the magnificent hotel at the summit of Echo Mountain, which is 6 000 feet high.

The search-light he operates is 11 feet long, and the reflector is five feet in diameter and from 1-16 of an inch to 3½ inches thick. The positive carbon is 1½ inches in diameter, and 22 inches long; the negative, 1½ inches thick and 16 inches long. 45 horse-power is consumed in operating the light, whose intensity is such as to be seen at Catalena Isle, 35 miles out at sea.

Among the photographs received from Mr. Dunn are several showing views of the splendid valley, one picturing a great landslide that buried the railway tracks, and one depicting him lecturing on the search-light to a party of tourists, headed, by W. H. Mohr of Elizabeth.

Mrs. Emily Thorne, who resides at Toledo, Washington, says she has never been able to procure any medicine for rheumatism that relieves the pain so quickly and effectually as Chamberlain's Pain Balm and that she has also used it for lame back with great success. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

DOUGLASS AT REST.

Great Demonstration Expected at Washington To-day.

Washington, Feb. 23.—The funeral services over the late Frederick Douglass will be held to-day in Metropolitan A. M. E. church, the largest of the denomination in the city, and the demonstration on that occasion is expected to be one of the greatest ever seen in Washington. The body will be taken to the church from his late residence in Anacostia early in the morning and will lie in the church for view by the public until 2 o'clock, at which hour the services will begin. They will be conducted by Rev. J. G. Jenifer, pastor. Bishops Turner and Wayman will take part, and John W. Hutchinson, the last of the famous Hutchinson family of abolition singers and a life-long friend of the deceased, will sing a solo. The sermon will be preached by Dr. Jenifer, and brief eulogistic remarks will be made by Rev. Dr. Rankin, president of Howard University; Rev. Hugh T. Stevenson, of Anacostia Baptist church and Rev. Dr. F. J. Grimke.

The honorary pall-bearers will be ex-Senator B. K. Bruce, W. H. A. Wormley, Hon. John R. Lynch, John F. Cook, E. C. Messer, P. B. S. Pinchback, Dr. C. B. Purvis, Leonard C. Bailey, John H. Brooks, J. H. Meriwether, Dr. John R. Francis, F. J. Barbadoes, Capt. D. L. Pitcher, B. E. Messer and Hon. Geo. W. Murray, member of congress from South Carlina.

At 7:10 the body will leave for Rochester, N. Y., over the Northern Central railroad, and is scheduled to reach there at 9:25 to-morrow morning.

GENERAL CARR DEAD.

A Cancer in the Throat Assisted by Grip the Cause.

Troy, N. Y., Feb. 25.—The flags upon the city hall and the state armory in this city are at half mast in civic and militant recognition of the death of Major General Joseph B. Carr, of this city. General Carr died at his home on Fifth avenue yesterday after an illness of long standing, though he was confined to his bed only about six weeks. A cancer, which had its inception in the cheek and which later spread to the jaw and throat, was the cause of death. General Carr was operated upon several times for the removal of the cancer at St. John's hospital, N. Y.

Just before he took to his bed the general went to New York to undergo another operation, but the surgeon refused to operate, as the cancer's insidious growth had extended to vital organs and death under the knife would probably have resulted. The general returned to this city knowing that his death warrant had practically been signed, but he met the issue with such courage that even his friends were unable from his bearing to learn that the general had been obliged to give up hope. A few days later "la grippe," which later developed into pleurisy, attacked him, and assisted the cancer in causing death. Death came peacefully and the end was quiet.

DYING OF HYDROPHOBIA.

Bit by a Pet Dog in December, Mrs. Light Is Now in Convulsions

Trenton, T. J., Feb. 25.—Josephine Light, colored, wife of Levi Light is dying of hydrophobia. Four physicians have been in attendance upon her the last three days, but beyond administering opiates they have been unable to do very much for her.

A pet dog bit the little finger and fleshy part of her left hand on the 4th of December last. The wounds healed nicely but last week began to give her pain. Then she rapidly developed symptoms of hydrophobia, going into convulsions when water was offered her and snapping and flying at those by her bedside. She is unconscious and is expected to pass away in that state during the night.

CATHOLIC OBEDIENCE.

They Must Obey the Commands of the Church Cheerfully.

New York, Feb. 25.—In pursuance of the letter of instruction sent out at the instigation of Archbishop Corrigan, the papal decree relative to Catholics being members of the secret societies known as Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and Sons of Temperance, was read from the pulpit of nearly every Catholic church in the city yesterday. In all the churches of the diocese of Newark the decree was read by the officiating priests, with a comment on the decree by Bishop Wigger. The comment recommended ready and cheerful obedience to the commands of the church.

The Harbor Lights.

Sandy Hook, N. J., Feb. 25.—On the night of Feb. 6 the heavy ice drifting seaward, completely wrecked the electric lamps placed on the buoys marking Gedney channel. As this channel is the most direct and deepest, the large eastern steamers prefer coming through it. The lights red on one side and white on the other sowing a safe entrance across the bar to New York harbor. Several large steamers deferred entering till daylight on account of these lights being extinguished. They could have been repaired in a day, but the drift ice would have demolished them again. Now, however, the light house department have placed new lamps on the buoys and the channel is again marked by the electric lights.

Shot Through the Heart.

Terre Haute, Ind., Feb. 25.—A. G. Walker, secretary of the Hudnut Milling company, committed suicide yesterday by shooting himself through the heart. Just before doing so he fired three shots at Mrs. Walker, neither of which struck her. He had been ill for several days and was taking medicine for pains in his head. Mrs. Walker is the daughter of Theodore Hudnut, the founder of the Hudnut Milling company and has three children.

Equalization of Taxes.

Paris, Feb. 25.—The ministry has approved the proposal submitted by the khedive's English financial adviser, Sir Elwin Palmer, to re-classify the lands. This will be the greatest reform ever undertaken in Egypt. Eventually it will equalize all land taxes. At present the land belonging to the wealthy families is assessed much under its value, and the land of others is over-taxed

THE KAISER AT DINNER

Expected Speech on Tariff Did Not Materialize.

Bimetallism League Formed—Silver Men Score a Triumph—Practicable Way of Benefitting the German Farmer—Countess Perponcher Under Arrest for Perjury.

Berlin, Feb. 25.—Great things were expected from the emperor's speech at the dinner of the Brandenburg diet in the Englisches Haus. The members of the diet, almost without exception, belong to the landowning aristocracy. They had been led to believe that the dinner would be something of an agrarian demonstration and the emperor's speech would agree in most respects with their ideas of agrarian reform. Their hopes were strengthened just before the dinner with the announcement that the emperor was conferring at the Old Castle with Chancellor Prince Hohenlohe, probably discussing his speech. It was a bitter disappointment. The emperor referred only briefly to the distress among the peasants and devoted most of his other remarks to the necessity of loyalty, patience and confidence in the margrave. He did not utter a word which hinted even indirectly at higher tariffs, more silver or grain trade monopolies.

New Cruisers Please Him.

Later in conversation with the guests his majesty refrained from any allusion to the agrarian questions. He had much to say about the needs of the navy and seemed pleased that the budget committee had voted him four new cruisers to replace the old-fashioned vessels which soon must be withdrawn from distant service. During the dinner the empress telephoned him from the new reichstag building where the Elbe benefit concert was about to begin. She wished to learn whether he was coming. He told her to let the music begin as he would be unable to be present. The reason he could not go was that he had arranged a consolation entertainment at the Old Castle for the benefit of the downcast agrarians. Shortly after 9 o'clock he left the Englisches Haus and half an hour later was enjoying wine, beer and cigars. His guests were the men who during the last week have been conspicuous in the numerous congresses held here in the interests of the landowners. The Farmers' union, the Bi-metallic league and the Financial and Economic society were most strongly represented. The emperor talked freely on the topics dear to the agrarian mind, doing his best to atone for the disappointment inflicted by his speech.

Silver Men Triumphant.

The economic congresses with agrarian tendencies have been so numerous and obstreperous in the last few days that the newspapers have kept a standing column headed "The Agricultural Week." A powerful bimetallic league has been formed but otherwise the whole agitation has produced nothing more than floods of talk. All the big silver men of the empire have been here and are moving heaven and earth to convert the government to their cause. In an interview with the United Press correspondent Dr. Arendt, the most conspicuous bimetallist in the country, said yesterday:

"There is no doubt that the silver men scored a triumph when the reichstag voted for an international money conference. However, their majority would not have been so great if the deputies had not deemed Count Kanitz's grain monopoly impossible and yet felt that they must help along the suffering farmers in some way. They recognized in the proposal to reform the currency a fair and practicable way of benefitting German agriculture.

The Government To Go Slow.

"I know that the government will not act in a hurry. The silver men do not desire haste in this matter nor would they press forward too rapidly the negotiations for the conference. They are content for the present with their great moral victory which they mean to turn to full account. The government's first step will be to sound France and arrange a cordial entente as the basis of the conference. Premier Ribots' recent utterances on the silver question are of the greatest importance as he took care to explain that his views harmonized with those of M. Hanotaux, the minister of foreign affairs, through whom the understanding could easily be obtained."

Dr. Arendt feels sure of Freiherr von Marschall's support in the present battle of the standards. He speaks of the foreign secretary as a "fanatical bimetallist." After the reichstag voted for the conference, Arendt says, Marschall remarked to him:

"Now things look hopeful. Some years ago, I remember, you, Count Mirbach, Herr von Kardorff and I were the only bi-metallists in Berlin. We were regarded then as something like cranks. Now it is satisfaction to get our views endorsed by a strong majority."

Dr. Arendt does not see why the key to the situation should be left in England's hands. If Germany and France move together, he thinks, England must fall in line. If the conservatives come into power in London," he said, "we can count on them to join us and get the currency right." He is hopeful that even the liberals would not refuse to enter a conference, as he knows Count Herbert Bismarck has letters from Lord Rosebery expressing sympathy with the bimetallists.

Countess Arrested.

The arrest of the Countess of Perponcher, formerly Emma Drost, to answer a charge of perjury, has caused something of a stir in Berlin society. The facts in the case are rather inaccessible. After several years in the United States she married the count and, returning with him to Germany, settled in Eberswalde. She became intimate with the family physician. When the physician's wife sued for divorce the countess swore that her relations to him were perfectly innocent. Facts that transpired after the trial are said to have contradicted her testimony and given grounds for her arrest.

SCORED FROM THE PULPIT.

The Count's Marriage to Miss Anna Gould Criticised.

New York, Feb. 25.—The Rev. Madison C. Peters, of the Bloomingdale Reformed church, in the course of his sermon yesterday said:

"The wealth of this nation is in the hands of a few, and these few are marrying off their daughters to titled imbeciles. This is the most successful way of making a nation poor. A marriage for money or title is a humiliating stoop to the dust; a hollow mockery that blushes to heaven.

"American men, as a rule, marry for love; royal scoundrels always for money. With them cupid has changed his name to cupidity. There is no record of an international marriage where hard cash was the consideration for empty title that did not end unhappily. Yet ambitious fathers and managing mothers and most heartless daughters are constantly playing the same unlucky game.

"Two million dollars for a title! The outward legal form in such a mating may seal the lips of criticism, but a marriage it is not. As the $2,000,000 to be settled on the little count is contingent on his good behavior, there is very little likelihood of the money ever getting out of the Gould family.

The mercantile estimate of marriage is becoming such that I should not be surprised to see the hymeneal market lists chronicled in the newspapers, with the prices current of the stock exchange.

"We despise the man who takes a bribe. We put stripes upon him. What shall we say of these titled fortune hunters who offer themselves to the highest bidder? And what shall we say of the young women who turn what is noble and pure and American away and sell themselves to be offered willing victims on the altars of European profligacy? We pretend to be a democratic nation. We are the most snobbish and slavish worshipers of rank of any nation of the world."

HAS SHE BEEN SENTENCED?

Hawaii's Minister Has No Official News of Queen Lil's Doom.

Washington, Feb. 25.—Neither Secretary Gresham nor Minister Thurston, of Hawaii, has received any news ftom that country per the steamer Gaelic, which arrived at San Francisco from Honolulu Saturday night.

The reports that Mrs. Dominis, the ex-queen, had been sentenced was pronounced by both of those gentlemen to be news to them, as they had no information other than contained in the press dispatches. Minister Thurston said he would not be surprised if he did not receive a dispatch by the Gaelic at all, as there was no great necessity for it. His country, he said, was aware that the American press would keep him better informed than any telegraphic dispatches they could send.

In last night's dispatches from Honolulu was contained the folllowing statement:

"John F. Colburn, of Liliuokalani's last cabinet, has written to Minister Thurston to the effect that he is disgusted with the queen's course, and is working hard with the natives for annexation. He urges Thurston to forward it by every possible means."

Minister Thurston stated that he had received a letter from Mr. Colburn, but he refused to make its contents public at this time.

HOWGATE NOT GUILTY.

Sat Unmoved in Court, But Danced for Joy in His Cell.

Washington, Feb. 25.—Captain Howgate was acquitted yesterday of the charges of embezzling $11,800 from the government while holding the position of disbursing officer of the United States signal service, and of forging a voucher for that amount to cover up his alleged wrong doing. The verdict was rendered about noon, when the jury had been locked up nearly seventy-two hours. Captain Howgate received the announcement without emotion, but after he had been taken to his cell beneath the court room, he danced for joy in the realization that part of the burden and anxiety of fifteen years had been lifted from his shoulders.

CAPTURED IN A BARN.

Killed His Wife and Brother-in-Law in a Fit of Anger.

Chicago, Feb. 25.—Emanuel Barker, the colored expressman, who shot and killed his wife, Mamie Barker and his brother-in-law, Harry Bonner, while in a fit of jealous rage yesterday morning, was captured after a desperate struggle in a barn at 5016 Drexel boulevard and locked up at the Hyde Park station.

Barker made a statement to Captain Aldrich in which he said he killed Bonner in self defense and that his wife was better dead than alive. The trouble was caused by jealously which was also the immediate motive of the killing of his wife and her brother.

They Want To Fight.

Chicago, Feb. 25.—A dispatch to "Parson" Davies last night from Johnny Eckhardt, of the Atlantic Athletic club, offers a purse and division of gate receipts for a ten-round "go" between Choynski and Creeden and Tommy Ryan and Tommy Tracy, both bouts to take place on the same evening, about March 5. Col. Hooskins, backer of the Australians is willing and Davies will put off his trip to England for two weeks. If the fights are not brought off here they will take place at Coney Island.

DIPHTHERIA

Too many homes bear this fear-inspiring placard, denoting the prevalence of that most insidious and dreaded of all diseases—Diphtheria.

It is to-day a recognized fact among the best practitioners that nine out of ten cases formerly considered hopeless may be brought to a happy termination by the use of that great original raw food product, Bovinine.

This great blood-generating, life-maintaining, strength-developing, and flesh-producing product of lean, raw meat, contains the greatest amount of life-preserving qualities in the least possible bulk of any preparation known.

In cases of Diphtheria, Bovinine has special advantages. In this disease, as in others, the rapidity with which it is assimilated gives to it a preference over all other foods, passing, as it does, into the system immediately, without causing the digestive organs to perform any labor. And considering the fact that the lesions in the throat prevent the swallowing of solid food, it becomes an absolute necessity. In the worst cases, where even liquids cannot be taken by the mouth, Bovinine by being used as an injection. Above all, Bovinine is in itself a germicide, and in all such diseases as Diphtheria, caused by microbes, it not only performs its greatest mission of maintaining life, but antidotes the existing bacilli.

Bovinine has done wonders in thousands of cases of Diphtheria. When your doctor uses it you may cease to worry, and be assured of a speedy recovery. To neglect its use may mean years of remorse in the feeling that some loved one might still be with you if everything possible had been done. Bovinine is sold by all Druggists.

THEY ASK FOR JUSTICE

Labor Has an Important Case Before the Court.

The Decision May Affect Future Strikes—Carpenters Will Try To Abolish the "Lumping" System—Walking Delegates Under Indictment. Man's Inhumanity to Man.

New York, Feb. 25.—A case which it is expected may have an important bearing on strikes in general, and which is particularly pertinent to the sympathetic strikes of the building trades, is the indictment against five delegates from the different carpenters' unions, under four counts, for conspiracy and coercion. The case was set for trial to-day before Judge Martine, in general sessions; but owing to the importance of the case, in which it is expected it will take several days to get a jury, the district attorney has announced that it will be moved into the court of oyer and terminer, before Justice Ingraham or Justice Williams.

That "Lumping" System.

While the strikes which brought about the indictment were aimed at what is known as the "lumping system" in the building trades, the men indicted and the unions take the view that the indictment is really aimed at disorganizing the building trades by bringing in the strong arm of the district attorney's office and the courts against what the journeymen declare to be their right to stop work with a view of bettering their condition, regardless of what injury may result. The five men indicted represent the four large carpenters' organizations of the city. The men are: Benjamin Hart and Frank Schultz of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America; Joseph Rogers of the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners; John S. Overfield of the Progressive Carpenters, Knights of Labor, and Dennis Kavanagh of the United Order of Carpenters and Joiners of America.

Building Trade Crowded.

These four organizations had in their different unions passed resolutions from time to time against the "lumping system," which, owing to the depression in 1893, began to grow in strength, to the injury, as the men claimed, of organized labor. The carpenter's trade allowed the system to flourish, as the organizations are not so strong and compact as in other trades, because it is said by the carpenters that there is never more than enough work in the city to keep more than from half to two-thirds of them busy. Most of the other building trades are not so crowded.

The men say that the large and wealthy builders of the city have never countenanced the lumping system. These large builders are for the most part members of the Master Builers' association. The men claim that a large part of the lumping system builders are what are known as the Budensiecks of the trade. Under this system, it is claimed, contracts to furnish only the labor for the whole or parts of the carpenter work are let out to sub-contractors whose offices are usually in their hats and who are not financially responsible. No complaint is made by the journeymen against letting out sub-contracts as long as they are for material as well as for labor.

The Sub-Contractor.

When a lumping contract is made for the carpenter work in a building, the sub-contractor does not need to be under any bond or other obligation. He agrees to furnish the work for a certain sum, and each week the main contractor makes advances to the lumper, which he takes care shall not exceed the union rate of wages for the number of men who have worked that week. The union rate is $3.50 a day, but the lumper, owing to the number of carpenters out of work, can get reductions from the men who may be union men in sore need of work; but the lumper usually requires the men to say to the walking delegates in such cases that they are getting union rates. Moreover, it is the custom on such jobs to employ one exceptionally fast worker at the full rate of wages on each branch of the work. For instance, a man who can outdo most of his fellow journeymen in putting in door frames is put with several other door frame men who are paid less than union rates, and the lumper keeps driving the men to work up to the rate of this particular champion. It is claimed that the men are thus driven beyond their natural powers, and the old men are put to the wall while a premium is set on poor work.

The complainants in the indictment are Journeyman Macdonald and Builder Wallace. The men are charged with the misdemeanors of conspiracy and coercion, two counts on each crime, to the effect that they prevented Macdonald from working and Wallace from employing him.

Was It Conspiracy?

So far as can be learned at the district attorney's office, there has never been a trial in this county on these charges in connection with strikes. There have been prosecutions for boycotting in which the conspiracy laws were invoked, and the applications in the civil courts for injunctions which usually premise a conspiracy. Two indictments similar to the present were found in connection with strikes since 1886, but they do not appear to have come to final trial. Recorder Smyth in one case overruled a demurrer interposed on the ground that the crimes of conspiracy and coercion could not be set up in the same indictment.

Immunity in these strikes is claimed in the main by the journeymen under section 170 of the penal code, which says:

Congregation of persons employed in any calling, trade, or handicraft, for the purpose of obtaining an advance in the rate of wages or compensation, or of maintaining such rate, is not a conspiracy.

"SANCTIFIED SWINE"

So Says Col. Ingersoll of Hoboken's Men of God.

Jersey's Blue Laws Did Not Prevent Him from Lecturing on the Bible. Clergymen Ask the Mayor To Prevent the Lecture Taking Place, But Bob Won.

Hoboken, N. J., Feb. 25.—Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll lectured in this city last night, and more than a thousand people heard him, including the Rev. H. T. Beatty, the Presbyterian minister who dug up the blasphemy blue law and attempted to have the lecture prohibited, and Mr. Herbert Campbell, another of the four men, and the only layman, who signed the protest and Chief of Police Donovan.

There was no interference. Mayor Fagan countermanded his first orders to the police, seeing fit to accept the opinion of Corporation Attorney Minturn and thus relieving himself, so far as he could, of all responsibility in the matter. He is a candidate for re-election.

Colonel Ingersoll said a great many things that the Rev. Mr. Beatty could not have enjoyed listening to.

Are Jerseymen Civilized?

"Put him in the stripes of a convict," say these ministers of this city. "That'll show him whether there is a God or not!" A preacher with any confidence in his own religion should be ashamed to call on the state to protect it—ashamed to stop praying and call in a policeman—ashamed to form a partnership with the jailer and the turnkey to establish a doctrine of universal love and peace. A preacher who would put in prison a man who does not agree with him in his views of religion has the disposition of a devil.

"A hundred years ago, when most of the citizens of New Jersey were civilized savages, they passed a law that the subject of the bible should be discussed only on one side. Since then many people over here have become partly civilized, to the extent that they are in favor of fair play and have adopted a constitution which is contrary to the spirit of that absurd, malicious and idiotic law."

Pastors "Narrow Minded."

The lecturer referred again to the pastors who had protested against his coming to this city as "narrow-minded, provincial gentlemen, who should have lived and died 300 or 400 years ago." He added, "I'm not blaming them at all for what they have done. Their heads are just that shape and they can't help it." He declared that sectarian schools, in which preachers and priests are educated, are "storm centres of ignorance." He said that many felt "called to the ministry because they haven't constitution enough to be wicked." He ridiculed the conception of a God "who couldn't write a book that did not require the protection of the legislature to prevent its being food for laughter." He went on to say that Shakespeare and Burns got along very well without such protection for their books.

Colonel Ingersoll added humor, and perhaps force, to some of his arguments by apt references to the law which forbade his saying some things, but did not forbid his repeating what others said, and left him free to ask questions.

"We Told You So."

"Is the bible moral?" he asked.

"No," answered a man in a box.

"That's for you to say—not for me. The law allows me to ask the question, and you've got a right to think about it, if you'll do it in secret."

And again, as in quoting instances where Jehovah had ordered the slaughter of innocent women and children and dumb cattle, he said:

"I wouldn't believe the God of mercy did that if it wasn't for this law. As long as I'm in New Jersey I suppose I must believe he did it."

He said of the Hoboken preachers again:

"They are gluttonous for revenge. They know I'm going to be put in God's penitentiary. They know I'm going to roast on brimstone throughout eternity. Imagine the joy with which they may look over the balusters and down on me, saying 'We told you so.' And not content with all that, these sanctified swine want to put me in the penitentiary down here."

The body of the lecture was that which has been often delivered upon the same subject, but it was probably never given before with so much spirit, or to a more thoroughly appreciative audience. Detectives Gallagher and Nelson; detailed to listen to it and to arrest Colonel Ingersoll if he actually violated the blasphemy blue law, appeared to be amused and interested throughout. One might have believed that they really enjoyed seeing hot shot poured into the ministers.

How They Spent Sunday.

Chicago, Feb. 25.—Three well-appearing young men, under the influence of liquor, came out of a saloon at the corner of Desplaines street and Grand avenue last evening, and jumped into a buggy. One of them then fired three shots into the window of the saloon. They drove west and turned up Milwaukee avenue, where they met and fired shots at two police officers. The officers returned the fire and emptied their revolvers without doing any damage. A little further up the street the young fellows continued their shooting, but hurt no one. They were fired at by other officers along their riotous route, but are not known to have been hit.

SUNDAY IN THE SENATE

Three of the Thirteen Appropriation Bills Passed.

A Busy Week Expected—Hawaiian Cable Question Under Consideration—The Issue of Treasury Certificates To Be Strongly Opposed. Night Sessions Now in Order.

Washington, Feb. 25.—The situation in the senate yesterday is not more critical than it has been in the closing days of previous short sessions of congress. There is time in which to dispose of all the pending appropriation bills unless a deliberate effort is made to defeat some of them. No such contingency is deemed likely to arise. There is, however, no time to spare for the business to be brought forward during the present week is of great importance, and is bound to lead to debate that may run through day and night until the session ends. There are but three of the thirteen great appropriation bills that have received the approval of the executive. Six are in conference and in some of them radical points of difference between the two houses are involved. Chief among these is the diplomatic bill which carries the senate appropriation of $500,000 for the commencement of the work of laying a cable between this country and the Hawaiian islands.

The house, by a formal vote, has refused to agree to this amendment, and the senate, by a good majority, has directed its managers to insist upon it. Some senators are so impressed with the importance of this proposition that they say they are willing to permit the whole bill to fall rather than allow the amendment to be stricken out. On the other hand, Mr. Blackburn, one of the senate conferees, is authority for the statement that the president would veto the whole measure if this provision were left in the bill.

A Stumbling Block in the Way.

The Indian appropriation bill, which went to conference Saturday, will be a matter hard to manage, for the senate has engrafted much new legislation upon it. Four of the appropriation bills still remain to be acted upon, the sundry civil bill having been made the unfinished business for this morning. This is one of the most important of the appropriation bills. The amendment reported by the appropriation committee providing for the issue of treasury certificates to meet the current expenses of the treasury will be antagonized by the silver men. Mr. Mills' proposed amendment, of which he has given notice, repealing authority for the issue of bonds in the future will also be strongly opposed by those who look upon the authority found in the resumption act as the only barrier between the treasury and a silver basis. The sundry civil bill also carries the senate amendment appropriating for the payment of the sugar bounty earned prior to the passage of the new tariff law, a matter involving an expenditure of between four and five millions of dollars. This one item, it is thought, will furnish a heavy stumbling block for the conference committee.

Will Hold Night Sessions.

The next bills in order will be the legislative and executive and the naval appropriation bills. The friends of the navy will endeavor to see to it that the three battle ships permitted to remain in the bill by the house are not disturbed. A majority of the senate appropriation committee are said to be against the construction of the three battle ships and they may make a report to the senate reducing the number, and thus precipitate a fight. Advocates of the battle ships will have the unanimous support of the senate naval committee which endorsed the bill as it passed the house. Night sessions will be the order this week. The senate will begin to-morrow when unobjected bills on the calendar will be taken up for action. There is a probability that on Saturday, March 2, the senate may remain in session all night, taking a recess for a few hours only during the middle of the day on Sunday. No programme has been arranged for the last week's business of the session of the 53d congress in the house of representatives, and, under existing conditions, none can be outlined in advance. The general deficiency appropriation bill is still undisposed of, and the manager of the measure, Mr. W. C. P. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, will doubtless contest with Chairman Heard, of the committee on affairs of the District of Columbia, for the right of way to-day. Under the rules of the house the district committee is entitled to the day but the exigencies of the session will probably induce the house to proceed with the deficiency bill, yielding to the district another day, if it shall be desired by Mr. Heard and his committee.

To Suspend the Rules.

Beginning with to-morrow, it will be in order in the house to move the suspension of the rules and the passage thereunder of any bill on the calendar at any time until the expiration of the session. But the rule can only be made effective by the co-operation of the speaker whose acquiescence must be secured before the member can be certain of getting recognition. So far Speaker Crisp appears to have made no promises in this regard. There is, of course, tremendous pressure brought to bear upon the speaker and the committee on rules for orders to permit the consideration of special measures, but no agreement has been entered into with respect of these. The indications are that with the exception of some private bills, for which consideration may be had by unanimous consent, no further legislation will be accomplished at this session save appropriation bills. Nearly all of these are now, or will be in the course of the week, in conference, and the consideration of the reports upon these will occupy the greater portion of the week.

CHRISTIANITY CRITICIZED.

The Object Was to Show "The Good of It", and Was Accomplished.

"The Good of It" was the title of the programme of the Christian Endeavor Day exercises held by the Christian Endeavor Society of the Park Avenue Baptist Church Friday evening. The meeting was led by D. M. Runyon, and a choir of ten led the singing.

After an opening hymn, Scripture reading, and prayer, the leader explained the plan of the exercises. Caspar Critic was supposed to be criticising the society and Christian Endeavor was defending it. To support his points, Christian Endeavor called up the different committees to testify as to their work and the good it had done.

Joseph Hawkins took the part of Christian Endeavor and the committees were represeted as follows:

Paris, Feb. 25.—At the cabinet meeting yesterday, M. This order is undoubtedly the outcome of the persistent protectionist agitation in the rural districts of the north of France. Ever since the new cabinet entered office M. Gadaud has been besieged by agrarian deputations and petitions.

"Light Horse Harry" In Saddle.

Feb. 25, 1781, was the date of "Light Horse Harry" Lee's noted encounter with a band of renegade loyalists at Haw, S. C. Lee's legion resembled in dress and equipment Tarleton's infamous legion of loyalists. By inducing the country folks to believe that his band had been sent by Cornwallis to re-enforce Tarleton, Lee marched unchallenged toward the camp of the latter, near the river Haw. Meeting an aid of one Colonel Pyle, who, with a detachment of genuine loyalists, was looking for Tarleton's camp, Lee kept up the deception and found out Pyle's plans. He then coolly sent the aid back to Pyle under escort of his own pseudo loyalists to ask his chief to withdraw from the road and allow the Cornwallis' detachment to pass. Leaving one company behind, he then pushed ahead, overtaking Pyle's command, and for a signal to his followers advanced and offered a hand to the courteous colonel. At the same moment Pyle's men recognized the patriot legion and opened fire. The columns being parallel and at close quarters, the sabers of the legion were quicker in execution than the muskets of the loyalists. They cut down 90 of Pyle's men and wounded scores besides. Pyle ran away, but was afterward taken, and Tarleton received warning in time to move across the Haw. "Fortune, the capricious goddess, gave us Pyle and saved Tarleton," was the terse language of "Light Horse Harry" announcing his exploit at headquarters.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognise her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, Jr.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, at No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt, of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave., Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

Forrest In a Fighting Rage.

On Feb. 22, 1864, General Forrest defeated Sherman's Meridan campaign, which promised much for the Union cause. The cavalry of the expedition, 7,000 strong, were to ride from Memphis through Mississippi to Meridan, destroy everything, including railroads, en route, keep Forrest's renowned corps out of the game and reach Meridan to help Sherman cut the roads in rear of the Confederates in Georgia. Forrest had other notions about the programme. He made a bold stand at West Point, turned the Union cavalry back and chased it to Okolona. The chieftain's brother, Colonel Jeffrey Forrest, led the pursuit with his brigade, and bringing the enemy to bay charged, with all the spirit of the renowned corps, as though his brother were at the head. Held up at the first line only temporarily, he went at the second savagely and was himself shot dead within 50 yards of the Union line. The general reached the spot at that moment, and dismounting knelt over his brother's form. Jeffrey was the pet, the Benjamin of the family, the idol upon whom the general lavished his pride and care. The boy had fallen in battle. His slayers were still at hand. While the chief knelt there, motionless and dumb with grief, his men held back their blows in sympathy. Aroused by the lull in the firing, the general leaped into the saddle and called to his bugler, "Gus, sound the charge!" With his staff and escort, about 80 sabers, he dashed into the nearest mass of the enemy and expended the passionate force aroused by grief in desperate fighting. The Union cavalry didn't get half way to Meridan. Another mounted column joined Forrest next day and Sherman returned to Vicksburg with his entire army.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

Didn't Count the Enemy.

Feb. 23 is the anniversary of General Taylor's great victory at Buena Vista (1847). With an army of 5,400 men, chiefly volunteers, deployed on the mountain spurs and crests of the ravines on both sides of the pass of Angostura, he awaited the attack of Santa Anna. His second in command declared that the ground could not be held. "Maybe so, general. We'll see," responded old Rough and Ready. Though aware that Santa Anna had a large force—20,000—he "didn't stop to count the Mexicans."

Early in the day Santa Anna launched his columns upon the Americans. His cavalry and infantry made repeated charges, but he had no cannon. The fighting was terrific. Mounted on a white horse, which he rode for the first time that day in battle, Taylor appeared everywhere to inspire his men. An aid suggested to him that his white horse made a shining mark for the Mexican bullets. "Well," said the general coolly, "the old fellow missed the fun at Monterey, and I want to give him his share this time."

TAYLOR.

The crisis came when Santa Anna led a desperate charge against the American center, where Taylor stood with his little band, for a time carrying everything before him. The volunteers of the front line were overwhelmed and in danger of annihilation by the Mexicans, who gave no quarter. Taylor turned all his guns upon the charging column. The Mexican lancers were hurled down the steeps in their recoil from the American cannon, and on the plain where they had fearlessly rode in they were overtaken by a storm of iron hail which tore their ranks unmercifully. At that the Mexican infantry began to waver. "Now," said Taylor to Bragg, whose battery was at hand, "a leetle more grape, captain." A little more grape all along the line decided the day. Twilight found the Mexicans back in their tracks of the morning, and Taylor held the battlefield.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

Fight of the Hornet and Peacock.

Feb. 24, 1813, was the date of Lawrence's famous victory in the Hornet over the English brig Peacock. While maneuvering at the mouth of the Demerara river to get at the brig-of-war Espiegle he saw the Peacock bearing for him. The decks of the American ship were quickly cleared for action. The antagonists met and exchanged broadsides at half pistol shot. Both bore up, and Lawrence ran the Hornet close up under the starboard quarter of the Briton and began a furious cannonade. In 15 minutes the Peacock was a sinking wreck. Responding to a signal of distress in her fore rigging, Lawrence sent a crew on board. Boats were lowered to take off the wounded, of which there were many, there having been 40 casualties among her crew in those few minutes. Her sides were full of holes, some of which the Americans plugged, in the hope that she would float until her people could be saved. Guns were thrown overboard and the pumps set going, but it was useless. She sank and carried down, with many of her crew, several gallant American tars who risked themselves to save enemies in distress. The Hornet lost but two men killed and three wounded in the battle and actually suffered most in trying to rescue the enemy.

The British captain was killed before his ship struck. She was a famous vessel, known as the "yacht of the navy" by reason of her spotless brasswork and well kept decks. She carried 22's, while the Hornet was armed with 32's, but her shots seldom hit the mark, so their weight had nothing to do with her defeat. It was Lawrence's skillful maneuvering and furious broadsides aimed low that worsted the Peacock, cutting her to pieces in 15 minutes.

On March 6 we shall begin publication of a detective story by Nym Crinkle, entitled

"EIGHT MINUTES TO THREE".

A. C. Wheeler, who uses this pseudonym, is one of the best known journalists in the United States. He has been for many years the dramatic critic of the New York World, and is today one of the most brilliant writers on the American press. It is to his inimitable sketches o New York life that the Sunday World owes a considerable part of its popularity. Mr. Wheeler has written many successful stories, of which the best known is perhaps "The Great Laran Rebellion".

"Eight Minutes of Three" is in every way a remarkable piece of fiction, and deserves to rank with some of the weird tales of Poe. It will run five days, and will be followed by a short story of New England life by Mary E. Wilkins.

This story, like all the Daily Press serials, is brand-new, and copyrighted to Daily Press use.

While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. CHAPTER II.

"Hallo, my son! Just ready for you," said Meryon.

"Honored lord, the prince commands your presence!" quavered the boy, agitatedly twisting together his slender fingers.

Seeing something was wrong, Meryon recognized the need of restoring Ebal's confidence by preserving a bold front.

"Commands it, does he? Isn't the old man overstraining himself a little? But of course you meant to say that he begs to supplicate the privilege of my company. Well, tell him to keep his caftan on and I'll be round in the course of a day or two."

"Do not speak so, beloved lord! Hatipha has found us out and told his highness. Oh, if they kill you, I will kill myself!" cried the child, bursting into tears.

Meryon, greatly touched, expressed it in his American way by a loud laugh.

"Don't you fret, Ebal, my jewel; neither of us is going to quit this sinful and hollow life for sixty or seventy years to come, at least. You don't half know me yet. I have but to clap my hands and say: 'Galah!' and the president of the United States would march into the palace at the head of the army, navy and New York police department, and snatch up the whole court by the scruff of the neck and dump it down hard on Blackwell's Island—yes, they would! Hand me that stocking. And talk about palaces! wait till you see the white house. Ebal, you don't know luxury, gorgeousness, extravagance, intrigue and corruption until you've been naturalized in the states as a Jeffersonian democrat or a Lincoln republican. This is a poor, simple, innocent sort of place. Why, if Hatipha were to get among some ward politicians that I know, they'd mistake him for a new-born babe—yes, sir!"

"I wish we were there, mighty lord," sighed Ebal, whose black eyes had slowly expanded while he swallowed this information. "How happy we should be!"

"Well, pack your grip, for we shall be starting before long, all three of us. Hand me that necktie, will you?—no, the red one—I'm out for blood this morning! Now I seem to be about ready, don't I? I'll be back in an hour; stay here till I come, and be a good boy; do you hear?"

Thus did the young American go forth to battle. In one way the fight was an unequal one, and no one knew it better than he. But in the east (and perhaps in other places) nothing is to be gained by a timorous or apologetic attitude; and Meryon was conscious, moreover, of possessing certain resources which, if not immediately substantial, might yet serve him in good stead. With wit, knowledge, insight and courage, even a single man may make headway against a multitude.

He strolled with an insouciant air towards that part of the palace buildings in which the prince's apartments lay. As he passed through the various courts, halls and corridors he was the object of a good deal of curious scrutiny from those who saw him, as if some hint had got abroad of his being in difficulties. He noticed, for his part, that there were signs of bustle and uneasiness about which could hardly have reference to himself. They had a military smack to them. War was in the air apparently. But Meryon limited his interest for the moment to the war in which his concern was a personal one.

In the prince's ante-room was a knot of courtiers and attendants, Hatipha among them. His unseemly visage wore a grimace of evil mockery as he caught Meryon's eye, and as the latter drew near he ostentatiously ignored his greeting and turned his amorphous back upon him. Meryon, with a pleasant smile, put forth his right hand and caught the eunuch by the lobe of one of his huge ears, upon which as a pivot he swung him forcibly round. The creature squealed with pain, rage and astonishment.

"Well, how is the old pudding this morning?" the American inquired, sweetly. "It mustn't forget its superiors, or its manners. Waddle in and tell his highness I desire to see him at once on particular business."

The boldness of the rebuke startled all present, but all except Hatipha himself were manifestly pleased. The head eunuch is seldom a popular personage in any place, and he had in this instance fewer friends than the average. But Meryon's blood was getting up, and he would have chastised the grand vizier himself had that functionary bit his thumb at him.

He entered the royal presence close upon Hatipha's footsteps, thus depriving the latter of the opportunity of relieving his heart of the venom which the ear incident had set boiling there. He salaamed with easy courtesy and quietly elbowed the eunuch aside as he wished his highness good morning.

Meryon had, as has been intimated, been permitted great freedom in the palace, and was accustomed to observe little ceremony in approaching the prince; but the difference at a court between a man in favor and out of it is as great as between a musk rose and a skunk cabbage. Meryon was well aware of this, even before he met the potentate's haughty stare; but a desperate game must be dauntlessly played, and dangers met half way.

The prince, a stout, autocratic, but self-indulgent-looking gentleman of fifty, sat cross-legged amidst a pile of cushions on a low divan, with the snaky stem of a nargileh in his right hand. He was alone, save for a couple of Nubian mutes, one of whom kept imaginary flies off him with a long-stemmed fan of ostrich feathers while the other squatted at the bowl, of the pipe, ready to refill it as occasion demanded.

"Sir!" exclaimed the prince, erecting himself indignantly on his royal haunches, "do you venture into my presence before I have signified my pleasure to receive you? Your lack of respect and ceremony amazes me!"

"Prince," replied Meryon, with imperturbable politeness, "I have a communication for your private ear—your private ear, prince," he repeated, with a slight gesture of the head towards Hatipha, who was fairly dancing up and down in the agony of his bloodthirsty impatience to recount his grievances.

His highness hesitated a moment, bending the full force of his glance upon the young artist, who encountered it with one full asstead fast and significant. "Retire!" he then said to the eunuch, waving his hand in dismissal.

"But, most illustrious son of Heaven," began the inflamed functionary, "you understand not."

"What!" roared the prince, in a sudden fury; "am I told by the filth that oozes beneath my feet that I understand not? Retire instantly, or that foul hide of thine shall be stripped from thy carrion carcass and serve as a mat for dogs to sleep on!"

This explosion fairly blew the unwieldy eunuch out of the room, turning green as he went with mingled terror and unglutted malignity. The American and the oriental were left face to face.

"Now, sir," the latter set out, with the modified sternness of a monarch who has just enjoyed the satisfaction of scaring a subject half to death; but Meryon interposed with cool suavity.

"Since your highness desires ceremony, let me remind you that I have not been asked to take a seat. May I inquire if you expect me to conduct this interview standing?"

The prince's breath temporarily forsook him. Meanwhile he and Meryon eyed each other intently. Meryon by this time was roused to the pitch of being capable of anything. But his anger had the useful effect of collecting instead of scattering his faculties, and he was outwardly cold as sherbet and calm as a June morning. He was very different from the genial, careless young fellow who during the past six or eight weeks had amused and interested the potentate. After a few pregnant seconds the prince, reflecting that they were alone (the mutes didn't count) and inwardly sensible of the impress of a spirit he had not calculated on, intimated that a place beside him was at the other's disposal. Meryon leisurely sat down and pursued his advantage.

"Let us clearly understand each other, prince," he said. "I have hitherto met you with the informal confidence which a friend naturally observes towards his friend; but I must tell you that any attempt to impose on my good nature will be promptly checked. Is that plain, or shall I more fully explain myself?"

Some real curiosity blended with the outraged dignity of his highness as he asked: "What do you mean by talking to me like that? Don't you know that by a nod of the head I can cause you to be bastinadoed, boiled in oil and bowstrung?"

Meryon smiled; the smile broadened to a chuckle, and the chuckle expanded into a loud and hearty peal of laughter.

The prince frowned, clutched his beard, kicked off a slipper, put his hand towards the gong and withdrew it, and then, abruptly overcome by the mysterious absurdity of the situation, burst into roars of merriment as resonant as his guest's. Hatipha, hearing from without this combined uproar of mirth, uttered a scream of despair and waddled frantically away to the harem, where he rent his robes and boxed the ears of whomsoever was not active enough to get out of his reach.

Ceasing at length and wiping the tears from his cheeks with the gold-embroidered satin cuff of his caftan, his highness panted out: "And now, what have we been laughing at?"

WASHINGTON NEWS.

THE REPUBLICANS WILL HAVE A MAJORITY IN CONGRESS.

Probable Heads of Committees. Initiation Step Toward a Government Cable to Hawaii. Silverites Stand in the Way of a $16,000 Saving.

It has not yet been decided whether the Republicans will reorganize the office force of the Senate, even if they were able to produce a majority after the 4th of March. The committees will be put in control of Republicans as soon as possible at the first session, and the important changes to be made in the chairmanships have already been informally agreed upon. The most interesting assignment so far made is that of Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island, to be Chairman of the Finance Committee. Senator Morrill of Vermont, the last Chairman under Republican control, is still eligible, but, on account of his extreme age, has given way to his young and energetic friend, Mr. Aldrich, who has for some time been the leader of the Republicans in financial and tariff matters. Mr. Sherman, who lost his place at the head of the Republican membership of the Finance Committee when he left the Senate to become Mr. Hayes's Secretary, will go back to his old place as Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, retaining, of course, his membership on the Committee on Finance. It has been generally supposed that Mr. Reed, when he is elected Speaker, will be compelled to choose the top man on the list of the Republicans of the Ways and Means Committee for its Chairman. If he should follow this rule, Representative Sereno E. Payne, of New York would be the successor of William L. Wilson in this important place. Julius C. Burrows of Michigan, stood at the top of the list, but put Mr. Payne there by being elected to the Senate. It has been widely reported that Mr. Reed would ignore Payne's claim for promotion and make the next Republican on the list, who happens to be Representative Dalzell of Pennsylvania, Chairman. It is learned, however, that Mr. Reed has no intention of appointing either Mr. Payne or Mr. Dalzell if he is made Speaker, but that he will name Nelson Dingley, Jr., of Maine. Mr. Dingley was formerly a member of the committee, and made way for Reed to go to the head of the Republican list of membership, and Mr. Reed, it is understood, will return the favor by making Dingley Chairman of the Committee. Mr. Dingley is one of the ablest men of the House, and is especially well informed on tariff and financial matters, and but for his weak voice and slight physique he would be well fitted to become the leader of the Republicans on the floor.

An appropriation for beginning the construction of a cable between San Francisco and Honolulu is about the only practical result that will ensue from a year's discussion by Congress of the Hawaiian question. By a vote of 36 to 25 the Senate adopted an amendment to the Diplomatic Appropriation bill, appropriating $500,000 for commencing the work of laying the cables. The work is to be performed under government auspices, and the cable, when completed, is to be under the control of the United States government. For party and economical reasons the House will probably vote against the proposition when the Diplomatic bill reaches that body and comes up for concurrence in the Senate amendments. This will mean a hard struggle between the conferees of the two houses but the majority in the Senate in favor of the cable is so large and so determined as to make it almost certain that the House will either have to yield or the Appropriation bill will fail. The vote in the Senate showed a clear majority of 11 in favor of the cable. A full Senate might change the majority slightly, but from the fact that six Democrats—Hill, Gorman, Butler, Call, Morgan and White—voted for the proposition, it is safe to say that there is a fair sized majority in the Senate which will insist upon the Senate amendment going through. The action of the Senate in authorizing the construction of the Hawaiian cable is causing great rejoicing among the Republican "jingoists." They speak of it as in the direction of an important step toward annexation, and some of them interpret the vote to mean that the Senate, as a body, is largely in favor of annexation. None of the Democrats except Senator Morgan and several of the Republicans who voted for the cable proposition would vote for annexation. Senator Teller, who has been most enthusiastic in his support of the new government of Hawaii, distinctly stated in a speech he delivered the other day that he did not regard the construction of a cable between this country and Hawaii as having any bearing on the annexation proposition. On the contrary, he thought the laying of the cable would probably have the effect of staving off American union with the Hawaiian Islands. He based this belief on the theory that the establishment of telegraphic communication with Hawaii would greatly strengthen the existing government and enable it to defend itself against any attempt at foreign intervention and local disturbances. Senator Gray, the recognized representative of the administration, was not only opposed to the appropriation for the cable, but the illegitimate method of attaining such a proposition as a rider to an appropriation bill. He declared with great emphasis that Senators were working themselves up to such a state of mind over Hawaii and the cable scheme that they were ready to propose "anarchy in the Senate procedure." He expressed great surprise and astonishment at the terror of Mr. Morgan and other Senators who had spoken with alarm lest Great Britain should secure a foothold in Hawaii.

CHAPTER III.

Meryon did not at once reply. He took his cigarette case from his pocket, selected a cigarette and said to the Nubian of the nargileh: "Boy, a light." After obtaining it he drew in a whiff or two with a thoughtful air and then turned gravely to his host.

"Prince," he said, in a tone of icy distinctness, "it is fortunate for you that I did not take your bravado in earnest. If I thought," he continued, with a stern and keen look, "that you actually meditated violence to me and thereby to the all-powerful nation which I represent—if I believed that, within three months your kingdom would have been wiped from the map, and you and your subjects would be on your way to New York to become waiters in the public restaurants!"

There was a silence. Both smoked. Meryon with long, serene inhalations, his highness with short, sharp puffs. At last he said: "Your statement, Meryon Pacha, seems improbable. I have indeed heard that your nation is great, and I know that the ways of Allah are unfathomable. Injustice dwells not in my heart. You will admit that you have been hospitably entertained—" Meryon stiffly inclined his head, at the same time slightly lifting one eyebrow and shrugging the opposite shoulder—"but it has come to my ears that you have ventured to look upon and even to address communications to the princess, my daughter, apparently presuming her capable of deigning—"

Once more Meryon interrupted. "Prince, you employ words which I won't take from you. 'Deigning!' Does the tom-tit condescend to the eagle? It was my whim to lay aside the cares of sovereignty (which I must resume on my return home) and masquerade in this out-of-the-way little corner, for a while, as a mere traveling artist. But in birth, station and power you're simply not in sight, beside me, not to mention your interesting family."

The prince, by a nervous jerk of the elbow, upset the nargileh, which the Nubian deftly caught and replaced.

"I've been studying your little principality," resumed the other, "with a friendly disposition to do something to improve it. I heard you had a daughter, and it struck me she might be the means of my helping you. I'm unmarried, and though I could get a wife worth a dozen of her in New York or

"AND IT'S YOUR FAULT."

Chicago, to say nothing of Boston, yet I believe in occasionally crossing the higher strains with humbler blood, and I have had thoughts of honoring you and exalting her by a union with myself."

A dozen things rushing at the same instant to get uttered at his highness' single mouth, naturally got wedged, like people trying to escape from a burning theater, and the prince became crimson, but said nothing at all. Meryon went on:

"But a serious objection has arisen, for which you are primarily to blame, and which you must remove if I am to go on with the scheme. Terah—though I'm confident she is a good little girl and personally incapable of evil—is, nevertheless, conventionally speaking, damaged goods. And it's your fault."

The novelty of his sensations was hypnotizing the prince. His eyes rolled outwards, and his breathing was stentorious. But he no longer attempted to address the meeting.

"Qui facit per alium, facit per se," the American continued; "you are to blame for the crimes of your head eunuch, for you ought to have known better than to intrust such a clumsy beast with such delicate responsibilities. Either from brute carelessness or worse, this fellow, Hatipha, the other day, suddenly sprung Terah on me with her countenance in a condition which I shudder to describe. It—she—I—in short, her veil was down!" Here Meryon bowed his head upon his knees, and tremors shook his frame.

Inarticulate gurglings came from the prince's lips. Drops of sweat formed beneath the rim of his turban and ran down into his beard. This was a great day for him, never to be forgotten!

"Anyone less magnanimous and charitable than I would have turned his back upon her and you forever," the artist went on presently. "Such an outrage upon an unsuspecting guest can hardly be too severely resented. But compassion for Terah—who was really as much shocked as I was—and friendship for you, led me to forbear. I caused word to be sent to her that, on certain conditions, I would try to overlook the matter. And I am now here, prince, to tell you what the conditions are."

His highness, with eyes goggling on vacancy, stretched out his arms in front of him and rapidly closed and extended his fingers. It is uncertain whether this indicated that he wished to catch hold of an elusive word, or of something more substantial. Either way it was expressive.

"What I require," said Meryon, with stern impressiveness, "is your straightout apology; and to prove its sincerity it must take the form of delivering up Hatipha into my hands, to be annihilated as I see fit." Having thus delivered himself, Meryon took another cigarette from his case, signed to the Nubian for a light, and added composedly: "I have spoken!"

The spell upon his highness was broken. A confused roar proceeded from him, which perhaps set out to be a sort of laugh, but went on like the cry of the tiger thirsting for meat. He clapped his hands against his thighs, kicked off both his slippers (which the Nubian of the fan impassively restored to him, receiving in acknowledgment a violent kick in the stomach), and betrayed other symptoms of strong feeling. Gradually the waves of emotion became less agitated, and allowed him to employ human methods of speech.

"Meryon Pacha," he said, "I have been indignant. I heard reports of you which made me wish to kill you. You have spoken, and made things look different. I am more indignant than before, and somebody must be killed, but I am willing it should not be you. You have spoken of Hatipha; it shall be! I will discipline him. I will draw off his hide in strips an inch wide. I will burn out his eyes with hot needles. I will tear out his tongue, and cut off his hands and feet. I will rub his carcass with red pepper and sirup, impale him upon a stake ten feet long, and set him in the public square for the flies to eat. Yea, by the beard of the prophet, he shall be taught etiquette!"

Meryon mused and shook his head. "The punishment is too light," he finally said. "Ordinarily, I might be satisfied with it, for I am more forgiving and tender-hearted than a woman. But this dog's offense demands some really adequate penalty. I think I must have him boxed up and sent to New York to be naturalized and run for mayor on his record. It is necessary, too, that my own countrymen should see that my honor is vindicated. I will think it over. In the meantime let him be shadowed."

"Is the penalty you made a very terrible one?" asked the prince.

Meryon smiled wearily. "Merely to read the account of it in the newspapers is punishment enough for most crimes," he replied. "I hate to inflict it; but mercy is one thing, weak indulgence to sin, such as your proposition would amount to, is another. And from the reputation of the woman I marry every shadow of a stain must be removed."

"As to that," said the prince, whose natural suavity was returning, "though I suppose what you say of yourself and your nation is true, still I could, easily—very easily—have your head cut off, and say to your people (when they came to ask) that you had been killed by somebody else. But I, too, am tender-hearted, and what you say about the princess is certainly true, for Hatipha himself told me so—and other things! So I should like to have you for a son-in-law, especially if it would benefit my kingdom. But how would it benefit it?"

"Well, looking at it strictly as a financial measure, I should say it would benefit you about a lac of rupees' worth a year, very likely more—what with the summer visitors, the boom in trade and the new openings for unmarried ladies." After a pause he added: "But, mind you, I haven't yet promised I'll take her. My system got a bad shock that day, and I may never get over it."

The prince was silent for a long time, doing more thinking than was perhaps good either for him or Meryon. At last he said:

"Allah is great. Man knows little, and sometimes lies. Your words, Meryon Pasha, may be truth or not. You wish to live; you also wish, I think, to marry my daughter; but whether you desire the good of my kingdom is as yet hidden from me. But there is a way, if you choose, to prove it."

"Yes?" returned Meryon, in an indifferent tone.

"Yes. This morning I have news that the prince, my nearest neighbor, is going to make war on me. I am unprepared and need help. Beyond the country of my enemy lies another kingdom, whose king is my ally. If a messenger from me could reach him in three days from now I should be safe. But if I send one of my own subjects he would be stopped and slain, for his speech and features would betray him. But you, Meryon Pacha, could go in safety, for there is no war with your country, and since you are a sovereign, as you say, and able to destroy all who injure you, you have nothing to fear. I will give you a message to my ally which will tell him that you are my friend and are to be my son-in-law, and that my kingdom is in danger. Now, Meryon Pacha, will you do this thing to win the princess and save the kingdom?"

The American reflected a moment. The prince was ingeniously beating him with his own stick, so to say. The threat of war was probably a fact; but the secret embassy was devised as a means of getting rid of him without seeming to do so. On the other hand he could not, after his late magnilo-quence, decline to do his future father-in-law so ostensibly facile a service. There was but one weak point in his highness' argument. He put his finger on that.

"The letter which I am to take to your ally will make me known also to your enemy, if he searches me. He would treat me as a spy and I should have no ground of complaint."

The prince smiled an oriental smile. "You are prudent and far-seeing, Meryon Pacha," said he. "But if I protect you from this peril, will you accept the adventure?"

"Oh, well, I don't care if I do," replied the other, twisting his red mustachios. He already had a glimpse of an expedient for making the affair serve his own purposes.

"It is well," said his highness. "Return to me at sunset to-day and I will give you the final directions."

"All right," returned Meryon, briefly, and the interview ended.

CHAPTER IV.

An hour after sunset Meryon, mounted on a thoroughbred Arab and followed by two camels bearing his luggage, passed out of the gate of the city and set his course towards the west. A good many things had happened since we saw him last.

Ebal, on hearing the result of the interview, had declared that it meant mischief, and begged to be taken along to share his master's fate. Meryon had a half-formed scheme to profit by the confusion in the harem caused by the disgrace of Hatipha, to carry off the princess; but the only way to effect it was to have her join him that night beyond the boundary of the principality, which was not more than twenty miles distant. By the connivance of Senuah and the help of Ebal, this might be accomplished; and the latter eagerly agreed to attempt it. There had not been much time to arrange the details of the plot, but a trysting place was fixed upon—a tall, isolated rock near the caravan road, in the enemy's country. Here Meryon was to wait six hours; if Ebal and the princess did not appear within that time, he was to presume that the plan had miscarried, and keep on alone.

Meanwhile it transpired that Hatipha had escaped; when the prince's guards went to get him, he had vanished. It was not surprising; the war scare threw everything into a bubbub. Had the American not been rendered so conspicuous by his mission, he might easily have spirited away the princess himself. Late in the afternoon a report that the princess' mother had been taken violently ill added to the confusion. When Meryon went to the prince for his farewell interview, he was half minded to proclaim and put himself at the head of a revolution, depose his highness, and assume his throne. The odds were in favor of such a move being successful. Meryon finally resolved against it, from reluctance to be left with a kingdom on his hands so far from New York, and with the home policy still so strong against annexations. He afterwards was sorry he had been so fastidious.

He found the prince entirely alone—divested for the moment even of his Nubians. He produced a writing done in minute characters on very thin tissue, setting forth that the bearer was the trusted friend of the undersigned, and going on to describe the situation and demand help. When Meryon had finished reading this his highness drew from the folds of his robe a small gold box richly ornamented, and opened it. There lay a huge ruby, about two inches in length, and shaped like a much elongated egg. Meryon could not repress an exclamation of surprise; such a stone was never before seen; it could not be bought for a room full of rupees.

The prince twisted it between his fingers, and it came apart; it had been cut in two and hollowed out, and the parts made to screw together. The letter was now rolled up and inserted into this precious box; so there was a vast fortune and a message of life and death all done up in a parcel the size of a man's little finger. The prince handed it to Meryon.

"Do you expect me to take the responsibility of lugging a bomb-shell like that about the country?" demanded the latter recoiling.

"Death is powerless against him who carries it," replied the other. "It is a talisman, the greatest treasure of my dynasty; till now no unbeliever has ever seen it; judge then of the confidence I repose in you! When you arrive here with the army of my ally and give me back the hollow ruby, I will in return give you my other greatest treasure—my daughter, the princess Terah—to be the bride of your heart and the queen of your harem."

"This old pouter-pigeon," said Meryon to himself, "has been smart enough to see that by putting me upon honor he can get the best of me. He has me on toast. I must countermand the orders for the elopement, and play straight ball! These orientals are too much for us after all. Kismet! Hand it over, then," he added aloud, as if the precious object were a chocolate caramel.

"How will you carry it?" asked his highness.

"In my waistcoat pocket, of course," replied the American, nonchalantly stuffing it into that receptacle.

"Perhaps it is as well so," said his highness, thoughtfully. "If danger threatens you can readily swallow it," he added. "Remember, Meryon Pacha, it is worth the ransom of a kingdom."

"What? this thing!" exclaimed Meryon, slapping his pocket with a contemptuous smile. "Bless you, the boys where I come from use things like this for sinkers when they go fishing! Good-by!"

On returning to his apartments he sent for Ebal to tell him of his changed purposes. The boy was not to be found. The hour for starting came, and still no Ebal. After waiting till the last possible moment he was forced to set out with this important detail left at loose ends. He was ill at ease and rather cross. He cared more for Ebal than for anyone in the country except Terah, and feared lest some mishap had overtaken him.

The party consisted of two camels with their drivers—one of whom was the guide—loaded with Meryon's luggage, and he himself on his horse, a thorough-bred Arab. The twenty miles to the border was traversed without incident. As they crossed the line the moon rose, in its third quarter, throwing their long black shadows before them on the sandy plain. Its light also dimly revealed the apex of the great rock appointed as the trysting place, and where it was still Meryon's intention to camp for the night.

Meanwhile, he anticipated being stopped by the officers of customs, for his passport, which was in readiness; but none appeared, and they kept on. An hour's further travel brought them to the great rock. The picturesqueness of the scene pleased Meryon's artist eye.

The rock was of a roughly conical shape, about a hundred feet high. It stood in the midst of a barren plain; but around it, their roots nourished by the waters of a spring which bubbled from the ground and filled a wide stone basin, was a grove of tall palms and great hemispherical mangos. All was silent and deserted in the silent moonlight. In the base of the rock was a narrow opening leading to a small cave or cell, formerly, according to tradition, occupied by a saint and hermit of supernatural powers. Meryon looked into it, and saw a space about eight feet in diameter, hewn out of the solid rock. By heaping a few loose bowlders at the entrance it might be made a dungeon more secure than a chamber in a New York safe-deposit company's vault.

The animals were watered and fed. The camels squatted down in their usual absurd fashion, with their legs curled under them and their noses on a parallel with the horizon. The drivers curled up beside them and promptly went to sleep. Meryon did not feel sleepy. He wandered about, thinking over what had happened, and speculating as to might be to come.

It was like a mixture of the Arabian Nights and a comic opera at the Casino—this predicament into which his artistic and susceptible temperament and devil-may-care habit had brought him. No doubt his mother-wit and audacity had that day saved his neck, but only to put it in yet graver jeopardy. Again, supposing all to turn out well, what sort of a figure would his oriental bride cut in the drawing-rooms of the Four Hundred, and at Newport, Lenox and Bar Harbor?

"She'll cut a swathe—that's what she'll do!" said he to himself, with a chuckle. But the chuckle died away. How about his being hanged for a spy?

Would Ebal succeed in bringing her to-night? The lover hoped ardently that he would; then the man of the world took a hand, and hoped he would not. The adventure was as near being desperate as it could be, already; with her to take care of, it would lap over about ninety per cent. on the wrong side. No; the princess was safest in her own harem for the present.

The moon mounted to the apex of the dome of heaven. In another hour or two dawn would begin. It became chilly. The stillness was broken only by the low gurgling of the spring, a sigh from the camels, or the sound of the horse cropping the herbage. The artist thought he would turn in for an hour's nap. Hark!

A noise like a faint pulsation, far off. It grew stronger, but he could not yet fix its direction. It came nearer. It was approaching from the city. A horse—a single horse; Ebal, alone; he had not brought Terah. "Confound him!" muttered the lover. "A good thing, too!" retorted the same person.

The horseman, whoever he was, now came up rapidly; yet, in that strange light, it was difficult to distinguish him. At times he utterly vanished, like a phantom; then he reappeared, shadow-like; but each time nearer. All at once, as it were, up he rode in flesh and blood. Yes, it was Ebal.

"Well, my boy, so you didn't get her?" said Meryon, stepping up. Ebal was evidently much exhausted; he reeled in the saddle, and would have tumbled off if Meryon had not caught him. "Why, you poor little kid!" muttered he, compassionately.

Then he gave a sudden start, and stared in the youth's face. Ebal's soot-black hair, his eyes and features; but this supple young body which his arms held was the body, not of a boy, but of a girl! He almost dropped her in astonishment.

"Terah! What, Terah? Well, by the great horn spoon! Why, you cunning little sweetness!" Here he kissed her. "Tuckered out, eh? I should think she might! And all sole alone! What became of Ebal?"

The princess was nearly at the end of her tether. Being an oriental, she did not faint; that art is little understood in the east. But she rested in her lover's arms like a little sack of soft peaches, and did not in the least resent his demonstrations of affection.

"Light of my soul," she murmured, "am I safe? Oh, I am so thirsty—and hungry! Oh, such a ride! That hard saddle—I can hardly move my legs! Are we alone? It's so strange being without a veil! These men's clothes—how I must look!"

Meryon set her down on a pile of rugs beside the spring. He got a bottle of wine and some food, and made her as comfortable as he could. "You look like an angel," he said; "though not like a male one, in spite of that rig. You're feminine, my dear, inside and out. Luckily that Arab streak in you—wherever you got it—Ebal has it, too—keeps you from being so plump as most of 'em; and that burnous doesn't tell much; still, the sex is written all over you and whoever takes you for a boy is an ass. But what about Ebal? what's the matter that he didn't escort you?"

The princess, whom the wine was beginning to restore, laughed faintly, as a schoolgirl over some bit of roguery.

"We exchanged dresses and places, lord of my heart," said she. "Ah, I often wished, before I got here, that I was safe back among the soft cushions again. But now I am glad; and when I have smoked some cigarettes and had a good long sleep, I shall be all right."

"This is going to be the devil," thought Meryon, (referring to the situation.) "Here she is dressed like my footboy and acting like the princess! We ought to be off in an hour, and she's booked herself for a nine-hours' nap. Hannibal getting his army over the Alps was nothing to my getting this girl over fifty miles of flat plain. I must try fixing her a bed on camel back, and letting the beast rock her to sleep. And Ebal—by the way, Terah," he said aloud, "how is it about Ebal? Do you mean he has taken your place as princess in the harem? But he'll be found out, won't he? and what'll they do with him then?"

"Where are the cigarettes?" demanded the princess. "Ebal? Oh, the prince will impale him, I suppose. Or perhaps, since he's so young, he will only bastinado him and cut off his head. I don't know, but Ebal won't mind; it was he that proposed the exchange; and he's only a slave you know. Where am I to sleep?"

"WE EXCHANGED DRESSES AND PLACES."

"You won't sleep, at present," returned the American, with sudden sternness. "Listen to me! Do you mean to say, seriously, that Ebal will be killed for getting you off?"

She stared at him with eyes of lazy wonder, and laughed.

"Light of my soul, if he had deceived you like that, would not you kill him? Bismillah! My father is a man."

Meryon jumped to his feet.

"I'll show you and your father the sort of man I am!" said he. "That boy is not going to be killed. We are going back to prevent it. Ebal impaled—I guess not! This elopement is indefinitely postponed. Why, what a cold-blooded little thing you are! The embassy may go to the devil! Hey, you fellows! Wake up and pack, do you hear? We're going home. Hallo! What's all this!"

They were surrounded by a score of armed horsemen, among the foremost of whom Meryon recognized the fat figure and malignant grimace of his enemy, Hatipha, with a huge pistol in his hand.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

The small boy who, when asked his age, replied that, judged by the fun he had had, he was 100 years old, pretty accurately described the feeling of the large audience at the Academy last night. Lillian Kennedy made a decided hit, and the amusement that was crowded into three hours to unravel "She Couldn't Marry Three" was enough for two nights; and all the roles essayed by Miss Kennedy and the strong support, were equally charming and successful. The company is far above the average, and is sure of big business.

THE DAILY PRESS

ESTABLISHED MAY 10, 1887. PLAINFIELD, N. J., TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1895. TWO CENTS A COPY, $5 A YEAR.

SCORING THEIR ORGAN.

Republicans Publicly Rebuke Their Former City Clerk.

SAY HIS PAPER LIES ABOUT THEM.

What He Stated in His Editorial Columns, They Declare to Be Absolutely False—They Consider His Utterances Prompted by Personal Spite.

Again last night was the Republican organ repudiated by the Republican officials of Plainfield. The course of the ex-city-clerk in his abuse of the city authorities through the columns of the paper of which he is editor, has repeatedly subjected him to the scorn and contempt of the public functionaries to whom he has so much reason to feel grateful for past personal favors; and the rebuke which was administered at the meeting of the Common Council last night was scorching and complete.

Among the many things which the Republican organ for selfish reasons of its own has been presuming to dictate to the local government, has been the attempted removal of George W. Grant from the office of Chief of Police and the substitution of its pet candidate, Chas. W. Dodd. The Daily Press took issue on this point, and held that Mr. Grant was entitled to continue in the office which he had filled with such commendable zeal and good works. For siding with Mr. Grant the editor of The Press was treated by the Republican organ to daily personal abuse and revilement. He was held up to ridicule as a "Brownie", a "kid", a "leg-puller", a "drooling infant" in need of a "bib"; and in various other elegant language was informed by this modern Chesterfieldian journalist that the Mayor would positively refuse to heed The Press argument in favor of Mr. Grant, because, forsooth, "the Mayor didn't go to office boys for advice"!

Intermingled with this constant ill-tempered and unchristian treatment of a fellow-editor, was a ceaseless stream of vulgar insolence directed against not only Mr. Grant but also against the Councilmen and the Mayor, who were accused of shirking their responsibilities, of being afraid of Mr. Grant and of his "reading of the riot act", of "stabbing the rights of every property-holder", of following "antediluvian methods", of turning the police force of Plainfield into an "asylum" for invalids and incapables.

The windy campaign of the ex-city clerk for a change blew itself to pieces, and in The Daily Press of Tuesday, Feb. 19, he read the news that Mr. Grant had been reappointed Chief for another year, by the unanimous vote of the entire Police Board.

The advice of the "office boy" had been taken.

It was a bitter pill for the Republican organ to find itself wallowing thus in the slough of defeat, and it was galling to have to go to its opponent to find the news. But instead of taking his medicine, the ex-city-clerk grew more venomous in his utterances, and continued to abuse the city fathers for not doing as he had attempted to dictate. Among other malicious and false things he said:

After considerable effort and careful investigation we have discovered that George W. Grant was appointed Captain of Police, pro tem., because the Mayor was unanimously in favor of the appointment.

We are surprised that the relations between the Mayor of the city of Plainfield and the other members of the Police Board are not quite as cordial as they appear to be. At a recent meeting of the Board—and, by the way, it was the first meeting that has been called by the Mayor for many long and weary moons—some things were talked about, some questions were asked, and some incidents occurred which, we have heard, would greatly interest the voting population of the city.

Stinging denial of the charges of the ex-city-clerk was made by Mr. Stockton, Chairman of the Committee on Police and Public Lights, in open session of the Common Council last night. Mr. Stockton said, with a supremely contemptuous expression for the person he was scoring:

"The Police Board on Feb. 16 duly elected George W. Grant Chief of Police, under the ordinance. An article in a daily paper [holding up a clipping from the Republican organ as printed above] attempts to make the citizens believe that the Mayor and the Police Board are on the outs. As a matter of fact, the reappointment of Chief Grant was unanimous, and our relations are entirely harmonious.

"The same paper states that the Police Board had not met before in several moons. That is absolutely false. The Board has met three times in the last 30 days. I deem it just and proper to make this statement in connection with the official announcement of Chief Grant's appointment."

After the session, Chief Grant thanked Mr. Stockton for his public statement refuting the intimation that he had not been the unanimous choice of the Board. Mr. Stockton replied that the justification had been due him, and was given because it was deserved.

Several of the Councilmen were outspoken in saying that the editor of the organ was actuated in his falsehoods against them by personal spite and wilful malice. His conduct was roundly condemned on all sides, and his representative at the meeting was compelled to hear much highly unpleasant remark concerning the ex-city-clerk who is thus snapping at the hands that fed him when he confessed his need.

MR. SOHL'S BENEFIT.

"The Danger Signal" to Be Produced in Music Hall March 4.

Friends of Joseph Sohl, proprietor of Music Hall, are working zealously to make a great success of the performance to be given for his benefit Monday evening, March 4

The play to be given is "The Danger Signal". This was written by one of the most famous authors of our time, Henry C. DeMille, who has given to the stage such strong successes as, "The Wife", "The Charity Ball", "Men and Women", "The Lost Paradise", and many others.

"The Danger Signal" was a big success at the Lyceum Theatre, New York city, but is entirely dissimilar from plays produced there lately, in that it abounds in realism, and requires many novel mechanical effects.

A monster locomotive made of iron and steel, from which real steam issues, a freight train, made up in full view of the audience, a cyclone rotary snow plow, and the cannon-ball express, consisting of locomotive, tender, three coaches, 180 feet long and 12 feet high, crossing the stage at the rate of 50 miles an hour, are all seen in the play.

The play cost $10,000 to equip.

A TWOFOLD SUCCESS.

The Rectory Society Gains in Finances as Well as Sociability.

The sale and tea given by the Rectory Society of the Grace P. E. Church at the home of Mrs. D. T. VanBuren on Central avenue from 2 to 7 yesterday afternoon and evening was auspicious in not only increasing the finances of the society but also in affording to its members and patrons a pleasant opportunity for social chat.

The fancy work table was in charge of Mrs. Howard Tracy, Mrs. Evarts Tracy and Mrs. James Hallock; cake, Mrs. Foote and Mrs George Clay; candy, Misses Reinnart, Holly and Rodman. At the dining table tea and cake was served, with Mrs. L. G. Timpson and Mrs. C. Lawson pouring tea, assisted by Misses Catherine and Mary Reinhart, Bogert, Woodruff, Lawson and McClure.

During the course of the sale and tea about 160 guests attended, and all left with the impression that the Rectory Society was a valuable adjunct to the welfare of the church with which it is affiliated.

The Boulevard Band.

Residents of the boulevard are agitating the advisability of organizing a brass band. They have the talent, but nary an instrument except John Goff's fish horn and that's in use fish days. "Gamey" Nelson does say "Dat's so hard to blo' that we dun can find no one to fill it; but we got lots of base drummers and cymbal players. Now, you know a man must be well fed to fill dat horn, and besides, we ain't working much dese days and our meals are so far apart. Wait 'till apples are ripe."

Muhlenberg Hospital.

The number of patients treated at the Hospital this Winter having been unusually large, the supply of old linen, muslin, and old garments is almost entirely exhausted.

The Women's Auxiliary Board therefore urgently requests their friends and patrons to send to the Hospital, as soon as possible, whatever they can spare of the articles mentioned.

LIQUOR-LICENSE NIGHT.

Every Application Granted by the Council.

EVEN "PADDY DAY'S OLD PLACE".

All Voted for Unanimously Except this Saloon on West Third Street, and that Gets Through by the Vote of Six to Four.

Once a year the meetings of the Common Council of Plainfield, ordinarily shunned by those citizens who find them too tedious with their routine of real hard work, become a matter of great and absorbing interest to that portion of the people who believe in having public places where the men may congregate to slake their thirst and drink in the town's gossip.

Last night was the date of this annual event for the license element, and it was a large and unusual gathering which assembled in the lobby of the chamber and waited through the business of the session.

Little was done beyond the granting of the liquor licenses.

Chairman Moore of the Committee on License reported the license applications correct in form, and they were granted as follows:

John Rafferty, saloon, 213 Park avenue.
John J Sullivan, saloon, 518 West Third street.
John J. Goff, hotel, West Third and Liberty streets.
Jacob Blimm, hotel, 37-39 Somerset street.
James Day, saloon, 545 West Third street.
John E Beerbower, City Hotel, Park avenue and East Second street.
Alexander D Findlay, saloon, 123 East Second street.
James Connecly, saloon, 214-216 Park avenue.
Charles Smith, saloon, Front and Somerset streets.
Fred Caspar, hotel, 142-144 East Front street.
Wallace V. Miller, Hotel Grenada, 111-119 North avenue.
Frank Linke, wholesale, 227 West Front street.

The vote on all of these was unanimous to grant, except on that of James Day. When that came up, Mr. Dumont asked if it were not a new application. He said he was opposed to increasing the number of saloons. Mr. Westphal stated that the place had been licensed a number of years, though not during the last two or three years.

"Oh, well,"—ejaculated Mr. Dumont—"It 's Paddy Day's old place, and we all know what that was!"

The vote was: To grant—Messrs. Bird, Fiek, Frazee, Moore, See, Westphal, 6; not to grant—Messrs. Dumont, Erickson, Ginna, Stockton, 4.

The announcement of the vote aroused applause in the lobby, which was promptly checked by Chief of Police Grant.

Other licenses were granted as follows:

Hackmen — Daniel Hibbitts, Cornelius Guinee, W F Callahen (2), John Kelly, P. T. Keely & Son (3), Patrick Lynch (3), Henry Hansen (2), Peter N. Peterson, Max Newman (2), Thomas Burns.

Truck—J Krewson, S R Coddington, Charles H Farlee, Frank Rickert (2), A B Summers (2), W S Ayers, A. E. Hoagland (3).

Cartman—Robert Randolph.

Peddler, with horse and wagon—Ellis J Dunn.

The only petitions received by the Council were as follows:

From J. P. Mason and others, for three electric lamps on Stelle avenue between Central and Plainfield. Referred to the Committee on Police and Public Lights with power.

From the Ministers Association, requesting that no new application for liquor license be granted, that none be renewed where the applicant had been convicted of disorder or illegal selling, and that the Council consider the propriety of not granting any license whatever. Received and filed, previous to the action on the licenses.

The annual report of the City Clerk was submitted, inspected by the Committee on Finance, and filed.

Mr. Stockton reported the appointment of G. W. Grant Chief of Police, and explained the relations of the Police Board and the Mayor, as quoted in another column of this issue.

The Committee on Streets reported that it had received bids for street work as follows:

Crushed stone—A I & N B Smalley, 85 cents to $1 a ton, according to size; Wahl & Hatfield, 90 cents to $1.

Crosswalks—Double, J T Vail, 97 cents a foot; M Powers, $1 20; John A Thickstun, 98 cents; single, Vail, 55 cents; Powers, 60; Thickstun, 50.

Culverts—Per lineal foot, main, Vail, $2 10; Powers, $1.90; Thickstun, $2; branch, Vail, $1.60; Powers, $1.27; Thickstun, $1.50.

The Committee recommended, and it was adopted, that contracts be made, under bond of $1,000, with the Smalleys for the crushed stone; and under bond of $500 for each contractor, with Thickstun for the single crosswalks, with Vail for the double crosswalks, and with Powers for the main and branch culverts.

No other business was done.

THE W. C. T. U. MEMORIAL.

Here It Is, as Not Read at the Meeting of the Council.

The Press was today supplied with the following for publication, which was said to have been sent to the Common Council last night, but which certainly was not read:

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN:—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of this city most earnestly and respectfully petition the Common Council to thoroughly investigate the legality of the signers to the petitions asking for the granting of license. We are informed that in some instances a money consideration has been received. We further pray that you will recognize the fact the legalized liquor traffic is the most fertile soil for the production of suffering, poverty and crime in our midst by withholding the granting of license. It lies in your authority and power to be the saviours of many souls from drunkards graves. To redeem from the most cruel suffering the lives of innocent and helpless women and children. To remove from our city the stigma of legalized sin against the "Thou shalt not of God", and to heed the expressed protest of the ministers and people from time to time. We wish to recall the words of Mayor Gilbert in his address of 1893, viz: "We must not lose sight of the fact that the influence of our administration of public affairs may last many years after we shall have relinquished our trust." Apply this to the liquor traffic. Again from the address of the past year. "We are living in an age of progress, and to keep our place in the foremost rank we must equip ourselves with everything that is to promote the health, comfort and prosperity of our people." These are words spoken by your Mayor and which give him the endorsement of the best people of the community. We trust that you will endorse and in reality promote "the health, comfort, and prosperity of the people" by refusing to longer grant license to sell liquor in saloon, inn or tavern.

Respectfully submitted,
CARA L. PECK,
President.

Rec. Secretary.
S. R. KROM,
Asst. Rec. Secretary.

Judge Brown for Councilman.

Fire in a Chimney.

A still alarm last night at 7:40 brought the Plainfield fire department to the residence of Dr. Henry H. Lowrie, 414 Park avenue, where a chimney was burning. Dr. Lowrie says he never saw quicker or more efficient work. The alarm was sent by telephone from his house, and in three minutes the firemen were on hand putting out the fire with extinguishers. He highly praises and thanks the department.

FOR AN ALMSHOUSE.

Citizens Preparing for a Needed Reform.

TO CONFER WITH THE COUNCIL.

Col. Tyler, Pastor Newell and H. P. Reynolds Appointed a Committee to Act in the Matter.

The attendance of members at the special meeting of the Citizens Organized Aid Association last evening in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue Church was very large.

Col. Mason W. Tyler presided, and after the roll call by Secretary Ladd, Rev. G. Kennedy Newell was asked to state the object of the meeting, which was to consider the advisability of establishing an almshouse, to be under the supervision of the Citizens Organized Aid Association.

Mr. Newell explained in a very satisfactory manner the advantages of the plan set forth in the report of the District Committee, as follows:

REPORT OF THE DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

January 31, upon invitation of the District Committee, there was a joint meeting of Hon. Alexander Gilbert, Mayor of Plainfield, the gentlemen of the Alms Committee of the Common Council of the City of Plainfield, Col. Tyler, Mrs. Woodruff, and the District Committee of the C. O. A. A.

The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the care of the city poor and to see if some steps could not be taken looking toward the establishment of an institution where the dependent poor could be properly cared for.

The present system of helping the city poor in their own homes is technically known as "outdoor relief". In the course of the discussion the following points were brought up against outdoor relief:

First—The city has no control over the city poor. It cannot restrain its wards from immorality, drunkenness and disorder. In his report of Jan. 2, 1895, the Overseer of the Poor states that this lack of restraint results in pauperism and crime.

Second—Private charity can care for the poor in their own homes more wisely than public charity. It would give the beneficiaries what they need as much as material aid, viz: Counsel, lessons in thrift; by its moral influence and individual touch it would stimulate self respect and encourage self support.

Third—The present system of outdoor relief demoralizes and pauperizes its beneficiaries. Having once begun to receive public relief it is almost impossible to stop. It is but a step from temporary public relief to permanent pauperism.

And it tends to pauperize others. The public money is too easy of access. One person in every 175 in Plainfield receives public aid. The effect of this cannot fail to be harmful to the community.

People who would blush at the mention of a poor house, do not feel it a delicate matter even, to appeal to the Overseer. Furthermore, it has been the case in other places where public outdoor relief has been stopped that the number in the alms houses has not increased, but diminished, showing that public outdoor relief is the stepping stone to the alms house.

Fourth—The present system is not economical. In Plainfield probably not more than 20 or 25 would go to an institution for the poor. With this reduced poor list the present appropriation would more than cover the expense of running an institution.

The highest amount paid by the city for the support of a single individual is $10 a month; for 25 persons that would be $3,000 a year. Last year the appropriation for rent, fuel and provisions was $3,197. Ten dollars a month is a large estimate for the care of 25 persons under one roof.

The Herkimer County (N. Y.) alms house is warmed by steam and lighted by gas, and with these luxuries the inmates were cared for at $6 per month for each individual.

After some further discussion the gentlemen of the Alms Committee of the Common Council asked that the C. O. A. A. make some recommendation to the Common Council which that body could act upon.

Therefore the District Committee offers to the C. O. A. A. the following:

The C. O. A. A., of Plainfield, having the deepest interest in the care of the dependent poor, and desirous of helping the Common Council of Plainfield in every way in this matter, respectfully submit the following proposition to wit:

That the Common Council provide a small farm with buildings upon it suitable for the care of the dependent poor, and make yearly appropriations to cover the running expenses of such institution.

On its part the C. O. A. A. promises to give to the institution such practical care and oversight as to guarantee:

1. That it shall be conducted upon the most economical basis.
2. That the inmates shall have all necessary care.
3. That order and discipline shall be maintained.
4. That no unworthy cases shall be admitted.
5. In the cases of those at present upon the poor list whom it would be wiser to help in their own homes the C. O. A. A. will undertake to relieve the city of responsibility as far as possible by directing them to the proper channels of private charity.
6. The C. O. A. A. suggest that the Common Council appoint a committee of three to be with a committee of three from the C. O. A. A. a joint committee to consider and further this matter.

G. K. NEWELL,
Chairman of District Committee.

L. V. F. Randolph then offered a set of resolutions, which were in substance as follows:

That the Committee's report be accepted and approved with the thanks of the Council.

That the Common Council be invited to appoint a committee of three, they to work with a committee of the same number from this Council. That the Committee from this Council consist of Col. Mason W. Tyler, Rev. G. Kennedy Newell, and H. P. Reynolds, they to seek the adoption of the plans as presented by the Committee.

After considerable discussion, in which the legality of the action was considered, the resolutions were adopted.

The meeting then adjourned.

LAST OF THE ASSEMBLIES.

Society Butterflies Enjoy Their Final Flutter Before Their Lenten Rest.

The fourth and last Assembly in the Union County Country clubhouse last night came at an opportune date when society could enjoy a final flutter in the social whirl of pleasure before retreating to the quietude and seclusion of lent—there to slumber till Easter ushers in the season of gayety again.

The affair was a brilliant one in all respects. The number of subscribers to the assemblies this year was very large. This of course gave to them a more lavish display in conducting the events than could otherwise have been, and that of last night was complete in all particulars, tending to make it a fitting finale to the series of the season.

The decorations of the Casino ball room were very pretty, and arranged with taste for artistic effect to the eye. Many of the adornments used at the Ackerman reception still remained in place, and fresh smilax and roses together with potted palms, gave to the scene an idea of tropical splendor.

On the stage a garden scene was placed and down each side the palms waved listlessly back and forth as the gentle breeze was wafted from the current of the dancers. On each side of the platform piano lamps shed forth a suffused glow through red and pink tinted shades. Along the east and west walls of the ball room the green smilax was trailing, while the canopy of the fireplace was obscured with the green verdue. From the balconies red roses were profusely displayed.

Between 9 and 10 stylish turnouts had constantly been arriving, and when the opening overture of Elliott's orchestra was sounded the ballroom was filled with beautifully gowned women and conventionally attired escorts, who animated a scene that always creates in the onlooker and participant a feeling that crowds out all but that which is pleasureable. The dancing was continued with vim until the last number was finished, when the subscribers and guests departed with the prevalent idea that the Assemblies had been all that their promoters had anticipated.

The refreshments were served in the women's reception room under the skilful direction of Thomas Toombs, steward of the Country Club.

Tell your friends it is the last chance this season to get a handsome custom suit for half the order price and have it correctly fitted without extra charge, which many fortunate buyers are securing daily.—Newark Item.

One Way to Cure the Grip.

Albert Rue of Washingtonville felt so ill last week that he forgot all about his birthday till a merry party of thirty friends invaded his home and roused him from his attack of the grip into a jolly celebration. The hours sped all too quickly, hastened by the social chat, games, dances, and feasting of the gathering; and 3 a. m. was at hand before anyone thought to look at the clock. Then Violinist Frank Titus played "Home, Sweet Home", and those who had enjoyed the event wished that Mr. Rue had two birthdays a year.

—Should the Republican party of the borough at their primary Friday evening use wise discrimination in the selection of their candidates for councilmen there is a strong probability that there will be no opposition to their ticket.

The experience of Geo. A. Apgar, of German Valley, N. J., is well worth remembering. He was troubled with chronic diarrhoea and doctored for five months and was treated by four different doctors without benefit. He then began using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, of which one small bottle effected a complete cure. It is for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. HIS WIFE AGAINST HIM

Another Deed Charged to Her Convicted Husband.

Says He Killed Their Baby—The Wife of the Man Under the Shadow of Death Tells a Story Placing More Blood on His Hands—His Parents Visit Him.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 26.—Henry Kohl, the condemned murderer of Joseph Preinel, need not expect any help from his wife, concerning whom he has been saying that he hoped she would "tell the truth." She declares that she told the truth when she informed the police that her husband had acknowledged the murder to her, and she not only reiterates what she then charged, but also gives more details of the case than she has ever before indulged. She also asserts that Kohl was responsible for the death of their first child, born in December, 1892. In relating the latter incident, she said:

"One night Henry became angry at me and threatened to kill me with a revolver. He frightened me so that I fainted, and when I revived I was lying on a bed. The next morning he fired two shots from the pistol out of the window and then handed me the weapon and asked me to say nothing about what he had done."

Could Bury Her Cheaper.

Mrs. Kohl's mother, who was standing by, went and got the revolver and showed it to the reporter, and she continued her story as follows:

"As a result of the fright I had received, our firts child, a girl, was born prematurely. The doctor said that she would not live, and then went away. After he had left the house Henry said: 'Do you think I am going to let that baby live for a time and then pay $30 or $40 for her funeral? Not much. I can bury her cheaper now.' He then went down to an undertaker and told the man to come and get the child's body that night. While he was gone I had the baby put into a basket near the kitchen stove so that she might keep warm, and when he returned he was very angry. 'Do you want that baby to live?' he asked. He picked her up, carried her into the front room, which was very cold, and took off all her clothing. I heard her crying for nearly an hour, and begged him to bring her back, but he would not do so. After a while he heard Mrs. Sophie Oberle, who now lives at 31 Pierce street, but who then lived next to us on Sixteenth avenue, coming, and so he brought the baby back. Mrs. Oberle met him in the hallway, felt of the child, and said she was so cold she would die, and she did die at 2 o'clock that afternoon. I think Henry was the cause of her death."

"I Have Killed Him."

Mrs. Kohl related with more particularity than ever how she first learned that Henry killed his cousin Preinel.

"He had always told me," she said, "that Joe had plenty of money, and when Joe came to live with us Henry had a key made to fit the lock on Joe's door, so that he could go in at any time for the purpose of robbery. On the morning after the murder Henry took the key out of his pocket and said: 'I haven't any more use for this.'

"'If you have been stealing from Joe,' I remarked, 'it will all come back on us.'

"'You needn't worry,' was his reply. 'Joe is out of the way. I have killed him.'

"I asked him how he had done it, and he answered that he would tell me some other time.

"'Where is he?' I asked.

"'Oh, never mind,' said Henry. 'Let him rot where he lies.'

"He threw the key out of the window and went away. That was on Saturday, June 16, before the body had been found. On Sunday morning I read in one of the German papers an account of the finding of a body in Schinder's creek, and Henry's mother, who heard me, said: 'That is our Joe.'

"Henry the Murderer."

"'Then Henry is the murderer!' I exclaimed.

"'Be still!' said his mother. 'He is your husband and the father of your child, and Joe Preinel was nothing to you.'

"The murder was committed the day after Henry's father sailed for Germany. Well, on Monday morning, and still before the body was identified, I read in a newspaper that a strap was found around the neck of the dead man. Henry used to keep his trousers up with a strap, and I noticed that he then fastened them with a safety-pin.

"'That must be your strap, Henry,' I said.

"'Yes, it is,' he replied, and then he told me more about the murder.

"From that time on the knowledge that my husband was a murderer lay heavy on my mind, and I would have told about it sooner or later. On July 8 I went to see my mother, and Henry was angry because I stayed so long. He called me bad names, and I called him a murderer. It was then that he tried to kill me with a knife, for which he was arrested, and after he was locked up I told Captain Glori and Judge Eggers what I knew."

Kohl has expressed a wish to see his little girl before he dies, and the reporter asked his wife whether she would allow the child to go the jail and see her father.

He Killed Two.

"No," she answered, "I will not. He killed one of his children and he killed Joe Preinel, and I don't want to have anything to do with him. I do not care whether they hang him or not. I would never live with him again, anyhow."

Mrs. Kohl expects to become the mother of another child this week.

Shipment of Armor Plates.

Bethlehem, Pa., Feb. 26.—The Bethlehem Iron company yesterday shipped the last of the side armor plates for the battleship Indiana. They were eighteen inches thick and weighed nearly forty tons. The plate tested here a week ago has been shipped to the Indian Head proving grounds for a comparative test with the last Carnegie plate.

A TERRIBLE PANIC AVERTED.

Women Faint and a Man Is Carried Insensible to the Street.

Philadelphia, Feb. 26.—A terrible panic was narrowly averted at the Chestnut street opera house last night at the presentation of "The War of Wealth." At the conclusion of the third act of the play a quantity of cotton was set on fire upon the stage to represent the burning of a mill, and the column of fire that shot up from the stage and the volume of smoke that filled the house made the scene entirely too realistic to be pleasant to the spectators. To add to the uneasiness of the audience the asbestos curtain of the house was sent down upon the scene and some one in the audience shouted "fire." The nerves of the audience had already been strung up to a high pitch by the fire upon the stage and this ever terrible cry of "fire" in a crowded theatre proved too much for the spectators and a wild rush was made for the doors. Some of the cool heads in the audience, however, shouted out that the fire was a part of the performance and finally the panic-stricken throng was quieted, and the people returned to their seats and the performance proceeded. During the panic three women fainted and one man was carried in an insensible condition from the house.

"I'LL PUT SIX BULLETS IN YOU."

So Said Captain Glori to "Lanky Bob" During a Quarrel.

Cleveland, Feb. 26.—In two weeks the contract between Bob Fitzsimmons and his manager, Captain Glori, will terminate and so will all connection between the two men. Fitzsimmons and Glori have been quarreling for some time, and an episode which occurred in this city Saturday afternoon came near putting Fitzsimmons out of all kinds of business. The pugilist entered the Wilmot hotel and finding Glori seated in the office began to curse and abuse him for the non-payment of a bill.

"That bill is your personal affair and the funds of the company will not be applied to its payment," said Glori.

"I'll punch that fat face of yours right now," said Bob, and he looked as if he meant it.

"If you move towards me, I'll put six bullets through you as quick as a gun can act," declared Captain Glori, and Fitz retired. They agreed to separate at the end of two weeks.

Fitzsimmons says of Doc Paine, the champion amateur middle-weight, who sparred him three rounds at the Cleveland Athletic club: "That man is all kinds of a champion. I never had the mits on with such a clever boxer."

STAGE, ITS USE AND ABUSE.

A Minister's Sensational Sermon May Cause His Arrest.

Otseco, Mich., Feb. 26.—The members of the Ladies Library club of this village, recently gave a performance of Longfellow's "Spanish Student," some wearing the costumes which the male parts demanded. Sunday Rev. L. N. Pattison, pastor of the Methodist church, preached a sensational sermon on the "Stage, Its Use and Abuse."

He set forth a series of suppositions in which he suggested that the ladies, some of them mothers and none under twenty years of age, had been immodest in exhibiting themselves to the public. He also paid his compliments to the business men who had disguised themselves as bald-heads and sat in the front row, and claimed that the bald-head row was an adjunct of a low-down theatre.

The ladies attacked are of Otseco's best society. They are very indignant and threaten to cause the arrest of Mr. Pattison for slander.

THE WAR UPON CHINA UNJUST.

All Clamoring for Peace, "If the Terms Be Tolerable."

London, Feb. 26.—The Central News correspondent in Pekin telegraphs:

"The grand council met yesterday and the question of war or peace was put to a vote. The high provincial officials, first to third rank inclusive, were questioned by wire and telegraphed their answers. All expressed the opinion that the war was forced upon China unjustly, but they were anxious for peace; some adding: 'if the terms be tolerable.' There is great anxiety among the foreigners in Tien-Tsin, Pekin and New Chang."

Holyoke's New Dam.

Springfield, Mass., Feb. 26.—The contract for the great new dam at Holyoke, which is to be one of the largest and finest in the country, was awarded yesterday by the Water Power company to the Fruin-Baurbrick Construction company and Henry S. Hopkins of St. Louis. The terms of the contract have not been given out. It was signed by Gideon Wells and Edward S. Waters, for the company, and by Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Fruin for the contractors.

An Actor Dead.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 26.—Otto Puls, an actor of prominence in the German theatres, died in this city this morning. Death was due to bright's disease. Mr. Puls was 47 years old. Before settling here permanently he was identified with German theatricals in Milwaukee, Wis., and Omaha, Neb. He was a general favorite not only because of his geniality, but because of his talents.

Carnegie's Employes Idle.

Homestead, Pa., Feb. 26.—About 1,500 employes of the Carnegie Steel works were thrown out of employment yesterday by the closing down of a number of departments in the plant. The converting mill, the 10 inch, 23 inch, 36 inch and 40 inch mills are all idle on account of scarcity of orders. Work will resume as soon as orders are received.

Plumbers on Strike.

Fitchburg, Mass., Feb. 26.—The local plumbers' union declared a strike yesterday for an increase of pay. The plumbers have been getting $3 and want $3.50, which they claim is the pay received in all eastern cities. The strike effects all but four of the master plumbers' in the city.

His Scheme Failed.

Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 26.—G. Ellis Tuttle, an attorney, was indicted yesterday on the charge of trying to bribe a witness in a case for damages for false imprisonment which he was prosecuting against three police officers.

CONSIDER MANY BILLS

Last Week of the Fifty-Third Congress.

Filibustering in the House To Defeat the Deficiency Appropriation Bill—Uncle Sam Wants the Blaine Property in the Capital—Evening Sessions in the Senate.

Washington, Feb. 26.— Some filibustering, in aid of the effort to defeat the provision in the general deficiency appropriation bill for an extra month's salary for all employes of the house, including clerks to members, was indulged in yesterday after the bill had been reported to the house. But the efforts was futile and by a vote of 125 to 75, a motion to re-commit the bill was defeated, and it was passed, 145 to 91. The principal item under discussion in committee of the whole was the amendment offered by Mr. Breckinridge (dem., Ky.), in charge of the bill, to appropriate $425,000 to carry out the agreement made by Secretary Gresham and Sir Julian Pauncefote, British ambassador, last August, to pay the British government for the claims on account of seizure and warnings of vessels engaged in the fur seal traffic.

The committee on appropriations, by a tie vote, refused to incorporate the item in the bill to be reported to the house. It was advocated by Messrs. Breckinridge, McCreary (dem., Ky.) and Hooker (dem., Miss.), and opposed by Messrs. Cannon (rep., Ill.); Hitt (rep., Ill.) and Henderson (rep., Ia.)

In committee of the whole the amendment was agreed to by a small majority, but in the house on a call of the yeas and nays, it was defeated, 143 to 112.

The conference report on the post-office appropriation bill, an agreement on all but one unimportant item was adopted by the house, the matter in dispute going over until to-day for action. As agreed upon the bill carries a total appropriation for the year ending June 30, 1896, of $89,545,998.

In the Senate.

The senate began yesterday the last week of the 53d congress with the consideration of the great appropriation bill to provide for the sundry civil expenses of the government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896. Behind it, as yet untouched by the senate, were the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the naval appropriation bill, and the deficiency bill, while seven other appropriation bills—pensions, fortifications, diplomatic and consular, District of Columbia, postoffice and Indian—were still in the hands of conference committees. The sundry civil bill covers 138 printed pages; and when the senate took a recess till 8 p. m., it had disposed of about one-fourth of the bill, or thirty-two pages.

Mrs. Blaine's Interest.

No less than four hours' time was occupied in the discussion of the amendment reported from the committee on appropriation to acquire for the government Mrs. Blaines' interest in the Blaine property on Lafayette square, this city, paying her $150,000 for it, besides an indefinite amount for the cancellation of the lease—estimated at $50,000, but stated by the opponents of the measure at an amount equal to the purchase money. Amendments requiring "a complete and perfect title" and "a fee simple title" were voted down; and finally the committee amendment, slightly modified, was agreed to—yeas 31; nays 25. An amendment was also agreed to for the purchase of sites for public buildings at the capitals of Wyoming, North Dakota, South Dakota, Idaho, Washington—the cost of none of the buildings to exceed, including site, $120,000.

Evening Sessions.

The evening session began with less than twenty senators present; but no objection was made as to the lack of a quorum. The first amendment which led to any question was one changing the arrangement of the offices of assistants in the coast and geodetic survey. The house had made appropriation for only thirty-four assistants; but the committee amendment provides for forty-two; and the discussion was on the point whether the one or the other arrangement should prevail—the committee amendment being most vigirously pressed by the senators who spoke on the subject.

Mr. McLaurin (dem., Miss.) thought it a very strange thing—when the superintendent of the coast survey made an estimate for the appropriations necessary for his bureau, to increase that estimate, as the amendment did, by $18,000. He protested against it.

London, Feb. 26.—The cages collided in the shaft of the Whitwood colliery at Normantown, near Leeds, yesterday. The shaft was damaged so badly that it was quite impossible to bring up any of the 500 miners who were below at the time of the accident. Much anxiety is felt for their safety.

FACTS FOR OUR READERS

Follow Nature and Keep Well, a Good Rule.

THE QUESTION IS IMPORTANT, ARE YOU PREPARING FOR SPRING?

If Not, Here is Some Very Necessary Information for You.

Nature will soon begin her annual struggle for freedom from winter's icy imprisonment. Already beneath the frozen surface, giant forces are moving in that direction. Purification is going on.

It is the same with the human system. The lengthening days are approaching when the blood seeks to recover from its sluggish inactivity, and it bears in its course germs of health or disease, as it has stored up one or the other. It requires therefore to be enriched with vitalizing and health-giving qualities to give tone, vigor and health to the system.

For this needed and beneficial service nothing is so powerful as Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. Like nature's own wonderous remedies in the physical world, which purify the mountains and streams as they leap from their confines to fill the valleys with new life, and cover orchard and field with flower and fruit, it brings new force and health to wasted tissues and enfeebled nerves.

Now is the time when your nature calls for help. Don't mistake; no other remedy equals Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy as a spring medicine. No other remedy will so quickly and certainly strengthen your nerves, invigorate your blood and correct the action of all your organs. It will make you well and strong as it has done thousands of persons; as it did Mrs. W. A. Cutler, of 59 Orchard st., Worcester, Mass.

"A year ago," she says, "I felt ill with nervous prostration and neuralgia, which affected my whole system. My digestion was also very poor. After eating I would be taken with a smothering sensation, while the palpitation of the heart was terrible.

"Severe nervous headaches made my life miserable in connection with these other troubles. I was in a fearful condition, and became greatly discouraged. I consulted physicians and treated with them, but with no benefit. Nothing I took did me any good.

"Finally, as a last recouse, I commenced to use Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, which had been wonderfully praised to me. With the first bottle I noticed an improvement and persevering in its use, I continued to steadily gain in every respect.

"My nervousness was soon cured. The neuralgia, headaches, palpitation of the heart, indigestion and all my complaints entirely left me. All this was accomplished by Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

"This wonderful medicine did for me what all the doctors and their medicines could not do. I wish to urge all sufferers to try it."

No power of words can describe the wonderful good which this remedy is doing among the sick and suffering. Those who take it are cured. Thousands of people, at the advent of spring, while not exactly sick, are yet out of order or ailing in some way. They do not feel just right are not well and strong, cannot eat or sleep well, are nervous, and have no strength or ambition for work or pleasure. Their stomach, bowels, liver or kidneys are inactive and torpid. Such people need this best of all spring medicines Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, to restore the natural action of these organs, give strength and vigor to the nerves and new life and vitality to the blood.

Why waste time in trying uncertain and untried remedies, when here is a physician's prescription, a discovery made by the greatest living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th street, New York city. If you take this medicine you can consider yourself under Dr. Greene's direct professional care, and you can consult him or write to him about your case, freely and without charge. This is a guarantee that this medicine will cure, possessed by no other medicine in the world.

THEY HONOR THE DEAD

Thousands Mourn Over the Remains of Douglass.

Gathering of the Nations' Great—Eloquent Speeches and Many Floral Tributes—"Know Ye Not, That There Is a Prince and a Great Man Fallen This Day in Israel?"

Washington, Feb. 26.—Not since the unveiling of the Lincoln emancipation statue in 1878 has there been such a popular outpouring of colored people to pay tribute to a benefactor of their race than was witnessed yesterday in and about the Metropolitan African Methodist Episcopal church where the services over the remains of Frederick Douglass took place. The body was taken from Cedar Hill, near Anacostia, the home of the deceased, at 8:30 o'clock yesterday morning, and reached the church about 9:30. From that hour until 1:30 p. m., thousands of persons, including many white people, passed in double file through the building and viewed the remans which were in charge of a guard of honor composed of members of a colored camp of the Sons of Veterans.

Closed Forever.

When the casket was closed at 1:30 o'clock and further admittance to the general public was refused, several thousand people were assembled about the church, and the throng was made greater by the many who were filing out after viewing the body. Delegations had in the meantime begun to arrive and were given seats on the side aisle of the church, a large structure capable of holding about 2,000 people.

The altar and reading desk were covered with floral tributes, the most prominent of which was a magnificent shield composed of roses, orchids and palms, sent by the Haytien government, through Minister Hientjens. Another tribute was from B. F. Auid, the son of Frederick Douglass' old master, who is now captain of the eastern police station in Baltimore.

With Bowed Heads.

Shortly after 2 o'clock, the funeral procession entered the church, headed by Rev. J. G. Jenifer, the pastor, reading the ritual. In the procession were Mrs. Douglass and the family of the deceased; many intimate friends, including a number of white people; Senators Sherman and Hoar, Justice Harlan, Miss Susan B. Anthony, Mrs. May Wright Sewall, president of the Womans' National council; Rev. Anna H. Shaw, Mrs. Rachel Avery Foster and a number of those in attendance on the Womans' council.

Mrs. Sewall, Miss Anthony and Mrs. Shaw were given seats on the platform. The services were simple but appropriate. The funeral sermon was preached by Rev. J. G. Jenifer, pastor of the church. He took for his text: "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?"

Rev. H. E. Stevenson, pastor of the White church in Anacostia, attended by Mrs. Douglass, followed with a brief address at the request of members of the family.

He Sang a Solo.

A letter from Mrs. Douglass asking that a place be given in the programme to Mr. John Hutchinson of Boston, was read and served as an introduction to Mr. Hutchinson, white-haired, and white-bearded, the last of the famous Hutchinson family of abolition singers, who, with his sister, accompanied Mr. Douglass to England on his mission against slavery. Mr. Hutchinson told some touching little stories of his life-long friendship with the deceased, and then sang two requiem solos.

Miss Susan B. Anthony then arose, amid a stir of interest, to read a letter from Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Staton, highly eulogistic of the deceased. Miss Anthony prefaced the reading of the letter with some remarks of her own. Mrs. Stanton, she said was beloved by Frederick Douglass more than any other woman in the ranks of suffragists. On last Wednesday as she eat with Frederick Douglass on the platform of the Womans' council she had told him that he must be present at the home of Elizabeth Cady Stanton on November 12 next, to congratulate her on having rounded out four score years. "I shall be there," he said, "and I shall be ready with my words."

Her Eloquent Prayer.

The hymn "Seeking for Me," was followed with an eloquent prayer by Rev. Anna H. Shaw, and then Bishop Williams of the Colored Methodist Episcopal church, delivered the benediction. The services lasted nearly three hours.

Mrs. Douglass and the children and other relatives of her husband filed out of the church and remained in a room below until the congregation had departed. Then the remains were borne to the hearse by eight colored letter-carriers and after the family, friends and others had entered the carriages waiting for them, the funeral procession moved to the Pennsylvania railroad station where the casket was placed on board the funeral train.

Bound and Gagged the Watchman.

St. Louis, Feb. 26.—Three masked men entered the office of the Heitzberg Pork Packing company and bound and gagged Charles Herold, the night watchman in charge of the building. The safe was blown open with a heavy charge of powder and nearly $1,000 secured by the robbers. The men fled, and after releasing himself, Herold telephoned to police headquarters. So far none of the robbers has been arrested.

Horses and Cattle Burned.

Pittsburg, Feb. 26.—The extensive dairy barn, owned by R. M. Senton of Ohara township, three miles from the city line, was destroyed by fire early in the morning. Fourteen cows, four horses and other valuable property was also burned. Loss, $10,000; no insurance. Origin of fire unknown.

Bloodhounds After Them.

Corsicana, Tex., Feb. 26.—Thirteen convicts broke jail at the county farm last night. Bloodhounds were put on their trail. One of the escaped convicts was traced into this city where he took a train for the south.

OUR NEW CUP DEFENDER.

Dimensions of the New Boat Now in Course of Construction.

Bristol, R. I., Feb. 26.—The latest information from the Herreshoff works is so positive in its character as to leave no reasonable doubt as to the type, general dimensions and construction of the new cup defender.

She is an out-and-out keel boat, an improved Colonia and will be of Tobin construction—Tobin bronze plates on steel frames.

She will be 89 feet on the water line, about 24 feet beam and somthing over 17 feet draft, or four feet longer on the water line than Colonia, about the same beam and with over two feet more draft.

Her lead keel is about 30 feet long on the top, is five feet six inches in depth at the centre and tapers away gradually to a point both forward and aft. It is some two feet across at the top and is slightly bulbed at the bottom. The Colonia was about 130 feet over all. The new boat will be considerably less, by reason of the shortening of the forward overhang and the making of a stem whose contour above the water is very much like that of Valkyrie II., challenger for the cup of 1893. The after overhang is about as long as the other Herreshoff boats and the rudder is hung on the sternpost, but is somewhat wider than usual, since it only runs to the top of the lead keel, and not to the bottom.

LADIES TAKE NOTICE.

Jerseymen Wish To Fine You for Obstructing Their View.

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 26.—The house enjoyed itself for an hour over the anti-theatre high hat bill. Mr. Duncan, of Essex, who introduced the measure, read a humorous speech in its favor and Robertson of Passaic, Lower of Ocean and others also made laughter provoking remarks. The bill provided for a fine of ten dollars to be paid by women found guilty of obstructing the view of persons behind them in theatres by reason of the size of their hats. The bill was killed by a vote of 18 to 42.

The house passed the following bills: Preventing street railway companies from watering their stock; giving sheriffs in first-class counties the appointment of all court constables; authorizing Jersey City to issue $250,000 bonds for additional public school buildings; authorizing the erection of a hospital for the treatment of contagious diseases in the city of Paterson.

BELMONT-MORGAN SYNDICATE.

Gold for the Sub-Treasury—Bankers Get 60 Per Cent. of Their Bid.

New York, Feb. 26.—In the allotment of the bonds by the Morgan-Belmont syndicate the bidders for $5,000 and under and the foreign exchange houses which ship gold were awarded the full amount of their bids. Savings banks received 60 per cent. of their bids and others 10 to 20 per cent. of the amount of subscription.

The syndicate is turning over to the sub-treasury all gold received on account of subscriptions, which is charged to syndicate account on the sub-treasury and gold receipts issued therefor. The government will consequently receive a much larger amount of gold than the $65,000,000 for which the bonds are issued.

One member of the syndicate estimates that at least $80,000,000 gold will have been deposited by the syndicate before the contract with the government is completed.

FOUND A MANGLED BODY.

Flesh Torn from the Limbs by Prowling Dogs.

Chicago, Feb. 26.—Two boys yesterday discovered the mangled body of a man, apparently about 25 or 30 years old, half reclining against a tree at Ninety-fifth street and Western avenue. The body was roughly dressed and gave evidence of having been exposed to the weather for a considerable time.

The man's legs and trunk had been burned and ropes around the hands and shoulders indicated that he had been attacked and reduced to submission after a struggle. Large pieces of flesh had been torn out of his legs and the supposition is that prowling dogs had found and attacked the body before it was discovered by the boys.

There is no clue to the man's identity or to the party or parties who assaulted and murdered him.

Fell Heir to a $1,000,000.

Blissfield, Mich., Feb. 26.—Mrs. Isaac Hope, of this town, has fallen heir to nearly $1,000,00 by the death of an uncle in Africa. When 15 years of age, the uncle, William McKay, ran away from Scotland and located in the gold fields of Africa. His parents died and everybody lost track of the boy. He died some time ago, leaving an estate of $15,000,000. There are sixteen heirs living in Ohio, Michigan and Illinois among whom the estate will be divided.

In the Clutches of the Law.

New York, Feb. 26.—Four seamen who went to the captain of the schooner Kate S. Cook a fortnight ago and threatened to cause the whole crew of eleven men to desert the ship unless the captain dismissed one man who was objectionable to them, were indicted yesterday for conspiracy. They are Charles D. Perry, John Dempsey, Edward Duffy and Louis S. Conlance. Each was held in $1,000 bail by Judge Cowing in the court of general sessions.

Couldn't Stand the Shock.

Leavenworth, Kan., Feb. 26.—William Baker was instantly killed by electricity in the North Leavenworth coal mine yesterday. The voltage that passed through his body was less than 300. Baker and three others were operating a machine and accidentally came in contact with the cable. William Jenkins, the engineer, received the same shock, but soon revived.

Minneapolis' $300,000 Fire.

Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 26.—The Crown Lithographing company and the Housekeeping Publishing company, at Seventh street and First avenue, south, was destroyed by fire yesterday. Loss $300,000; insurance very light. It was the finest plant in the northwest.

Shocks of Earthquakes.

Tacoma, Wash., Feb. 26.—Two slight shocks of earthquake were felt here and at Sumner, twelve miles distant, at 5 o'clock yesterday morning.

HAYWARD AT THE BAR

His Movements Before and After the Ging Murder.

Declares That When He and His Brother Were Arrested He Asked Adry If He Had Committed the Crime—Adry Refused To Answer. Looked on the Corpse.

Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 26.—Harry Hayward, on trial for the murder of Miss Ging, went on the witness stand yesterday when court opened.

"Mr. Hayward," said Mr. Erwin, "if possible, I want you to take up your story just where you left off. You stated that you got back to the Ozark about 11 o'clock the night of December 3, after taking Miss Bartleson home from the theatre."

"I want to correct one statement," said the witness. "I was not at Chicago May 9, as reported in the papers.

"Well, that night I returned to the Ozark. I went into the Hennepen avenue entrance and went into the basement, and went into Blixt's room. I don't know whether Miss Blixt told me or not, but I got the impression that an accident had happened. That a horse had come back without its driver. I went out and took the elevator. I went up on the elevator to the fifth floor. Here I saw some policemen and young Mr. Goosman. I asked what the trouble was and Goosman told me an accident had occurred. I understood that it was a lady, and my curiosity was aroused. He told me that the patrol wagon had gone out and got the body of a woman. Finally he said that Miss Ging had gone out driving and had not returned with the carriage. All the things that had passed between Miss Ging and I came back to me. Two or three times before that she had asked me for my revolver and I at once came to the conclusion that it was not an accident, but that she had been killed. Mr. Goosman and I went down to the police station, where I talked with Jailor McKenna. I gave them a description of her clothing, for she had worn the shirt waist, sailor hat and blue skirt almost constantly for the past three months. I might have said, 'I told you so.' I was mad. Her secrecy had caused me to think she had been in with someone else gambling."

Adry Was Surprised.

"Did you ask if you could get in that vault?"

"Yes, that night. I did not know whether that money was still there."

"Well, when did you see Adry that night?"

"About 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning, after I had been downtown. I wanted to pass away the time. I wanted him to keep awake and talk to me. There was no revolver transaction, though and that 'picking up money' talk did not occur. I did not take up a revolver. I do not know whether I went into my room or not."

"You did not say while talking with Adry: 'It's like picking up money.'"

"No, sir; I did not." Here the witness went over minor points of the night. He read letters to the police officers and laid down to rest on the lounge in Adry's room between 4 and 5 that morning.

"Adry was surprised when I told him," continued the witness. "I lay there, kind of figuring what I would do. I knew that suspicion would point toward me and I wondered what those newspaper fellows would say. I got a newspaper in the morning and read it. Then I went to Waterman's room and said to him, 'I told you so.' I went to the office in the Oneida block that morning about 9 o'clock. I met Detective Howard and he told me they wanted to see me at the city hall."

"Now you may state what was done at the inquisition," said Mr. Erwin.

He Saw the Corpse.

"I went down there," said Harry, "with the intention of telling every detail of my relations with Miss Ging, except the gambling for her. Next day I told Mayor Eustis about that, thinking it would give him a clue to the real parties. In fact, I think I gave him a hint of my suspicions."

He then told of the sweating process conducted by Mayor Eustis and assistant county attorney, and detailed how Lawyer Bartleson interfered in his behalf.

"They took you to the morgue and showed you the body, did they not?"

"Yes, but not in an ordinary way. In a sensational manner. There was a cover over the corpse, and I was brought up and shown it. I felt pretty bad. I was right there and all these people thought I was guilty. Mayor Eustis asked me some questions, and told me to take off my hat so that he could see my face. Then they took me to the police station. I did all I could during that trouble. I went to Miss Ireland and asked her if I could do anything. I went to the florists and got some flowers for the funeral."

"After your arrest, where were you taken?"

His Troubled Mind.

"To the lock-up. The next morning I was arraigned in the police court, and from there taken to the county jail. My brother Adry was taken there at the same time. I said to him: 'What's the matter with you? We are not guilty.' He said: 'I wish I could feel as well about this as you do.' I said: 'Adry, you held this woman up once; did you do this?'"

As the witness exclaimed this in sharp tones a deep murmur arose in the court-room and then slowly died away.

"He would not answer," continued the witness, "and after that he remained silent and wouldn't talk at all."

"Did you ever say that the man who did this was in New York?"

"I believe I said in conversation once that the man who did it was probably far away in the east."

is a virtuous vice. The world is better for it. It makes men ambitious—and it makes women careful of their personal appearance. It doesn't take much money to keep well-dressed now-a-days. THE WEATHER.

For Tomorrow: Fair; Colder; Northwesterly Winds, Becoming Variable.

Pitiful is the sight of a man scorned and cast out by his own political bedfellows.

The "Tea at Four o'Clock" players are not anxious to repeat their portion of the Muhlenberg entertainment, and everybody says that to read the story of the minstrels in The Daily Press was as good as seeing the show. It still remains to be seen, therefore, whether or not the benefit will be repeated after the long days of Lent are past. The regret is that the performance was not given in Music Hall, where the crowd could have been accomodated.

Seldom in years was the "license session" of the Common Council as tame an affair as that of last night. The usual large number of protests against license was reduced by the one appeal of the Ministers Association. Even the memorial adopted by the Friends and published in The Daily Press some days ago, was missing. The W. C. T. U. had expected to be on hand to reveal the maresnest that signatures to license applications were bought, but some good friend had told them that that was a matter of common knowledge, and the W. C. T. U. had therefore nothing more to say. The applications were reported correct in form, and went through with bells on. And till 11 that night there was much rejoicing at the bars of the town.

DR. AND EDITOR MORSE.

Finds Great Curative Qualities in a Simple Remedy.

From Westfield, N. J., Leader.

The fact of the Editor of the Leader being a physician of the old school, encourages some people to ask why we kick quacks and quackers. We do hate charlatans the worst way; that's a fact. But—every proprietary medicine isn't a quack medicine. In some of them we believe as devoutly as we do in calomel and quinine. There, for example is Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. It has our faith. We know its value. In the laboratory it has fully approved itself as containing just those ingredients which every physician knows the materia medica to indicate for the disorders for which the remedy is prescribed. In clinical experience its further proof has not been wanting, as we have reason to know. We have no hesitancy in saying that we would prescribe the remedy in any case where it is really indicated.

Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has no rival as a blood builder and nerve food. It has met with unparalleled success in the treatment of all diseases of the skin, liver, kidneys and the blood. It restores the disordered liver to a healthy condition, and effectually cures the worst cases of habitual constipation. It has cured cases of Bright's disease, erysipelas, rheumatism, dyspepsia, gravel, diabetes, bladder and urinary troubles, where all else has failed.

It is a certain cure for all the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females, and affords great protection from attacks that originate in change of life. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is for sale by all dealers in medicine at one dollar a bottle or six bottles for five dollars; which brings a treatment within the reach of all.

—Butter and cheese, fresh, fine and at prices that astonish housewives and dismay rival storekeepers, are a special feature at Fulper's this week. Note the prices he quotes.

—The nominating committees of the Christian Endeavor society of the First Baptist Church will make their report Friday evening, March 8. There will be no meeting this week, as the Sunday-school teachers of the several schools will hold an important meeting Friday evening, at which time an election will take place.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognise her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,
of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,
Plainfield, N. J.

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. E. Grigg, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

T. R. VAN ZANDT,

Marvelous Results.

While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

ABSOLUTELY PURE

A Disputed Question.

Scientists and electricians cannot agree upon the number of electric volts which are necessary to cause a cessation of life in the human body; some claim that an excessive shock is more likely to cause incineration rather than instantaneous death, but if they would turn their attention to prolonging and increasing the pleasure of life, the public would hail the result with more satisfaction. For instance, the electricity generated in a wave of laughter is after all the most pleasant shock, and to see a large assemblage moved by a current of uncontrollable mirth while witnessing the play of "She Couldn't Marry Three," places beyond dispute the fact that large volts of laughter are better than volts of electricity any day.

A. C. Wheeler, who uses this pseudonym, is one of the best known journalists in the United States. He has been for many years the dramatic critic of the New York World, and is today one of the most brilliant writers on the American press. It is to his inimitable sketches o New York life that the Sunday World owes a considerable part of its popularity. Mr. Wheeler has written many successful stories, of which the best known is perhaps "The Great Laran Rebellion".

"Eight Minutes of Three" is in every way a remarkable piece of fiction, and deserves to rank with some of the weird tales of Poe. It will run five days, and will be followed by a short story of New England life by Mary E. Wilkins.

FIRE IN BROOKLYN CITY HALL.

Brooklyn, Feb. 25—Fire this morning destroyed the tower of the Brooklyn city hall, leaving only a heap of charred timbers on the roof of the building to mark the brief course of the flames. The water which the fire engines threw upon the building completely flooded it, and caused damage roughly estimated at $25,000, besides ruining two old paintings which hung in the Common Council chamber.

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

THE SUN'S FASHIONS.

VANITY FAIR FEASTING BEFORE LENTEN SECLUSION.

Evening Gowns Just Now Are in Demand, and How to Change Their Appearance So that They Be Serviceable for Consecutive Wear is the Feminine Question.

The season of parties, dances and social festivities of all sorts and degrees of magnificence is at high tide now that the restrictions of Lent are not far distant, and repentance in sackcloth and ashes must so soon replace the reigning frivolities in Vanity Fair.

Evening gowns may be simple or as elegant as money can make them, but one is quite as fashionable as the other. Tulle dresses are made with one, two or three layers fulled over a gored satin skirt, just as you fancy, or, if preferred, the front of satin may be spangled and only the back covered with tulle.

Laces are a dominant feature of all gowns, and some of the new importations are more beautiful than anything we have had before. Different kinds of lace are interwoven in the most exquisite manner, for example, Chantilly and Venetian, thread and rose point in alternate scallops of each. Some of these laces are beautifully jetted, and the very latest novelty in lace is perfumed as well as jetted. Chantilly laces have revived their old time popularity and appear in lovely new patterns. Black and white are intermixed in one wide flounce, which may form the entire skirt of a dress.

A simple and stylish bodice can be made of soft silk fulled into the belt back and front. The neck is cut low and well off from the shoulders in the Victorian style and is edged with a bertha of lace. A band of ribbon extends from under each arm to the shoulders, where it forms a rosette.

One of two very youthful evening dresses is made of spotted muslin with a full plain skirt over one of taffeta, which may match the muslin or contrast with it. The full simple waist is cut square at the neck and edged with a frill of the material, with here and there a small bunch of flowers. A band of ribbon goes around the waist and ties in a bow on the left side, from which it falls half way down the skirt and ends in a bow.

The new crepons are so varied in design and beautiful in coloring that they baffle description. One of the latest novelties has an ecru ground which resembles canvas, with crinkled silk stripes of two or three subdued colors woven on its surface, crossing and recrossing to form a large plaid, which is all very modest in coloring, but showy in effect. Many shades of one color are prettily blended on one surface; two colors in strong contrast are woven together, while other crepons have dots and spots of bright colored silk to further emphasize the deep crinkles.

Summer silks show the creped effect which has come to be a reigning feature of all dress goods, and are either crinkled in stripes of various widths or all over.

Among the novelties in washable goods are robe gowns of grass linen, deep ecru in color and beautifully embroidered in open work scroll and flowered designs.

Diagonal materials of both plain and mixed colors, and in great variety as to the width of the diagonal, are to be worn for spring gowns, and woollen goods, in canvas and basket effects, are to be made up in tailor dresses.

Round waists will continue in favor through the coming season, except perhaps for stout women, to whom they are not very becoming, and all sorts of beaded yokes, spangled and finished on the edge with jet cabochons, are used for their decoration.

The latest bonnets for evening and afternoon wear are, in most instances, all black, made with flat crowns or shapes of net closely spangled, and trimmed with rosettes of net mousseline de soie beaded on the edge, and gauzy wings of wired mousseline, with spangles. Where flowers are used they are made in the form of rosettes.—N. Y. Sun.

Off With An Old Love.

They broke up. She sighfully gathered a bushel of letters, dropped tears on some withered rose leaves, added a volume of "Trilby," a copy of "Oh, Promise Me," a candy box, several empty perfume bottles and a pearl ring and sent them back with the brief but expressive words: "Please do likewise." He sent her two letters, a cigar holder and a silver hat marker.—Emporia (Kan.) Gazette.

CHAPTER V.

The battle (considering the romantic environment) did not amount to much. Meryon began it with two impulses, both foolish. The first was to put himself between Terah and danger—which, since they were both already surrounded by the enemy, was impossible except he formed himself into a hollow square, which is well known to be impracticable. His next idea was to swallow the hollow ruby, which would have resulted, had he accomplished it, in his being cut asunder like a bean pod, for the sake of what was inside. He put his hand to his pocket and felt the ruby there, but it had slipped through a hole and lodged in the lining. While he was frantically fishing for it, he heard Terah cry out; the memory of his dream flashed over him—but where were the black mountains and the embroidered eagle? He felt a burning, numbing sensation in his right shoulder and would have fallen over backwards but that he was sent the other way by a bang on the back of the head; after which he knew nothing.

Death is said to be a painless operation; when Meryon came to himself he was assured of continued existence by the excruciating discomfort which he suffered. He was in a small dark place

HE STAGGERED OVER IT.

—the cave in the big rock, as he rightly surmised—with a gag in his mouth, a bullet wound in his shoulder, a gash in the back of his head and a splitting headache. A raging thirst beset him, hiding from him the fact that he was also fainting with hunger. The first thing he did was to feel in his pocket. The ruby (as he expected) was gone.

In his groping, however, his hand came in contact with his canteen, which he had filled at the spring just before Terah's arrival. After a fierce struggle he succeeded in getting his gag off and took a drink—the best drink he ever had, before or after. Why had he been gagged at all? Why shut up in the rock? There were several perplexing features about this affair. Meanwhile he was not going to submit without a struggle to being buried alive. He got to his feet and dragged himself to the doorway of the cave, revealed by gleams of light coming through chinks, and found it stopped by a mass of rock. With all his remaining might he gave this rock a kick; to his astonishment it fell outward, being only a slab resting against the aperture; he staggered over it, out into dazzling daylight, and into the arms of a man in European dress, who exclaimed in some surprise: "Hullo, Fred Meryon! I might have known it would be you," in the voice of his old friend, Horace Chase, the surgeon. Meryon said: "Great Scott, Horace!" and fainted—not being an oriental.

The meeting had come about thus: The English had a "post" in the capital of our prince's ally, and hearing that a row was brewing between the two other principalities, sent a detachment out to stop it. Chase went with it to cut off arms and legs in case anyone was injured. After transactions which do not concern us, they got on the trail of a marauding party and captured them with their booty, among which was a young person dressed like a boy, but a girl underneath. She said she was a princess, and told a queer tale, in consequence of which they kept on until they came to the tall, conical rock, and were about to investigate it when it opened and out popped Meryon, as we have seen.

Among the prisoners was a fat old person whom the princess denounced as her father's chief eunuch, a fugitive from justice, and the shooter of her lover. This creature, upon interrogation, denied not only what was charged against him, but, most shrilly of all, something which was not, namely, that he had taken the hollow ruby. Further inquiry developed that he had got together his band of cutthroats ostensibly to waylay Meryon and capture the princess, who was to be held for ransom; but he himself had secret knowledge of the ruby, and designed to get that for himself. Accordingly he had shot Meryon, gagged him lest he recover and swallow the stone, and deposited the body in the rock, meaning to sneak back unobserved and hunt for the jewel at his leisure. Fate had then stepped in and laid him by the heels as narrated.

What was the hollow ruby? the Englishmen wanted to know. Terah told them; though it was news to her that Meryon had had it in his keeping. Where, then, was the hollow ruby now? Hatipha was not only searched outwardly, but fed for a day or two on a diet of castor oil and soapsuds, to no purpose. Meryon's clothes—he being still unconscious in the delirum of fever—were examined; and they even sent back and searched the cell in the rock. The ruby was not to be found. At this juncture Meryon came to himself, learned from his friend Chase what had been going on, and spake. It should be premised that the English had brought their prisoners to a city of the hostile country; and that Terah had become an object of general admiration.

"That old swine Hatipha has it, depend on it," said Meryon.

"We can cut him open. There's nothing else left to do to him," said the always low-voiced and undemonstrative Chase in a dreamy, professional tone. "But I fancy you swallowed it yourself."

"With that gag in my jaws? But I see your game. You want to incise my epigastrium and get the glory of an operation. All right. Only, mind you, if ever I get well again, I'll give you such a licking as—"

"Don't excite yourself; I won't risk it, then, for my operations always succeed! This wound of yours is enough for the present."

"Why not try the experiment of removing the bullets?" growled Meryon, testily.

"Dear boy, it just went in at one door and out at the other. Here's the aperture of exit at the back."

"I can feel it all the same. Why doesn't my princess come and nurse me?"

"Your princess?" Chase repressed a smile. "She's busy."

"What the devil do you mean?"

"Look here, my boy," said Chase, gently, "don't agitate yourself—but what is she, anyway? You were always a fool about girls—it's your temperament, you know; but you can hardly be quite such an imbecile as to mean anything serious with her?"

"Dr. Chase, I consider your remarks damned insulting! I want no more of 'em! I shall marry the princess and take her to New York, and whoever doesn't pay her proper respect as my wife, will regret it, do you understand!"

The surgeon was imperturbable. "You should have had her boxed up in the harem and expressed through to your New York residence, and married her as she stepped out; and afterwards keep her in the meat-safe, or some equally cool and secure retreat. For, to be frank with you, she has been carrying on here in a manner that may be natural to an oriental princess with a taste for variety long repressed and finally indulged, but which, were she my fiancee, would make a murderer and suicide of me in five minutes. Why, you great red-headed calf, if she'd been able she would have been married by this time to the entire detachment, from the drummer-boy to the captain. You can punch my head, you know, but I'm giving you cold facts. Of course I don't blame her—who would? it's the way she's made, and would be just right in a Nautch-girl—but as Mrs. Fred Meryon, of Murray Hill and Beacon street, eh? Come, man, swallow your medicine!"

"Are you giving me this straight?" inquired Meryon, after a short and pregnant silence.

"Straight and cold; and a good bit diluted, too!"

There was another silence long and meditative. "Poor little thing!" at last muttered the artist. "It's my fault. To marry her would make it worse. We don't understand these eastern women—their warm blood or their cold blood, either. But now she has found out what freedom is, it would be cruel to take her back to be shut up again. Still, what else . . ."

"We'll take her back and see if something nice can't be done for her," said Chase; "meanwhile I'll see she gets into no mischief here; and do you keep quiet and get that shoulder healed."

A week later they set out and proceeded by easy stages, carrying Meryon on a palanquin. Terah and Hatipha were of the party, much against the will of both. But whereas Hatipha's only objection was that he would be flayed and impaled at the end of the trip, the poor little princess had to tear out of her heart some thirty or forty vigorous young flirtations. It may be stated here that during the first night's encampment this young lady disappeared, and with her a handsome young camel-driver and a camel; and there is reason to think that she has been living happily ever since.

Upon arriving at the prince's palace, they found changes.

It appeared, in the first place, that the princess, the mother of Terah, having been taken very ill of a dropsy and at the point of death, summoned the prince to a private interview at which she informed him that Terah was not his daughter, but that as compensation Ebal, who had been brought up as a slave, was in truth his lawful son and heir. Their remarkable likeness to each other was due to their both favoring their mother. The lady further explained that her infidelity and deception had been carried out in retaliation for a disappointment the prince had given her, some fifteen years before, in the matter of a box of sweetmeats. She died, with a smile of satisfaction, just as the executioner whom the prince had lost not an instant in sending for, arrived with his bowstring—too late!

But his highness was indignant, and somebody must be impaled. He sent for Terah. It was then discovered for the first time that she had eloped with Meryon, and left the slave boy Ebal—now the true prince—in her place. The latter was brought to his father, expecting instant death; but as his highness needed an heir and had no other, he was forced to spare him. He sent, however, for the father of Terah, whoever he might be.

The messenger learned that he used to be a gardener in the service of the harem, and that he had died a natural and easy death only a week before.

Here truly was a maddening state of things: four impalements missed one after another, and Hatipha and Meryon also out of reach. Some one must be slaughtered, and at once; but whom? No one who had offended the prince could be got at, and nobody who could be got at would offend him. His highness' wrath, which had been warmed up for eight and forty hours, now attained the temperature of super heated steam, and the boiler exploded. In other words, this great and worthy potentate expired of an apoplexy in the midst of his trembling courtiers, who instantly, with hosannas of joy, prostrated themselves at the feet of the astonished Ebal and proclaimed him their ruler.

CHAPTER VI.

By the time Meryon, Chase and the others arrived, the young monarch was well settled on his throne, and was showing himself a wise, skillful and merciful administrator. He welcomed the artist with heartfelt joy, and they told all their adventures to each other. Meryon was given a suite of rooms next to the prince's own, and they were always together, with Chase in the chair as moderator. The prince expressed regret at the miscarriage of the Terah affair. He had no better substitute to offer than Senuah, who was his half-sister by another mother and Terah's father—a rather obscure and roundabout relationship.

"BUT I'M NOT MARRYING JUST NOW."

"She's a nice girl," said Meryon, "and her birth would be no obstacle; but I'm not marrying just now."

"We haven't got any airtight harems in the states yet," commented Chase; "but we may come to it later."

"I still shall hope to visit you sometime in New York," said his highness, "and see the white house and the ward politicians and the other things. Meantime, the misfortune that keeps you on this divan is my gain, for it compels you to stay with me."

"You must thank Chase," replied Meryon, with a moody grin; "he won't treat it as I advise."

"The man imagines that the bullet is still in the wound," Chase explained. "His real trouble is the block of wood in his head, which will come away only with the head itself."

"I wish I were as sure of the whereabouts of the hollow ruby as of that bullet," Meryon observed; and, having said this, he shut his eyes as if intending a nap.

In fact, he remained motionless and seemingly asleep for about twenty minutes, during which the prince and the surgeon conversed in low tones and smoked their nargilehs.

Then Meryon opened his eyes and fixed them upon Chase, with a strange expression.

"Horace," said he, in a husky voice, "something queer has happened. I've been back in that cell in the big rock, and saw myself there as I was when those fellows threw me in. I saw all I did while I was in there—and I know what became of the ruby!"

"Oh! that's it, is it?" returned Chase, slipping his fingers on his friend's pulse, and winking to the prince to humor the sick man's fancy. "We were just wondering what had become of you."

"You think I'm cracked, but the story will prove I'm not," continued the other, speaking with emphasis, but not wildly. "I lay stunned for awhile; when I came to I was delirious—and that's the reason I wasn't able till now to remember what happened. But the ruby was on my mind and the first thing I did was to hunt in my pocket for it, and there it was all safe. I tried to get it in my mouth, but for some reason I couldn't understand—it was the gag, of course—it wouldn't go in."

"Well?" said the surgeon, regarding him with mingled perplexity and interest.

"Then I thought I was standing in front of a safe in a vault," Meryon went on, "and I was being hunted by thieves who wanted to get the ruby from me. The safe wouldn't open. I felt all over it in the dark to find an opening; at last I found one—a small hole in the upper part—but, when I touched it, something sharp came through and gave me a jab so that I yelled with pain. But the thieves were close up by that time, and my only chance was to get the ruby through that hole, if I died for it. So just as they appeared, I made a desperate effort and crammed it in; and got a jab that sent me off unconscious again. The next thing I knew—however, that's no matter. The ruby is in that hole."

"What does the boy mean?" said Chase, impressed by the force and vividness with which the tale was told.

"I understand him," interposed the prince, gravely. "The stone is in his shoulder. Allah is great!"

"I wish some of your brains would get into Horace's skull," sighed Meryon, relapsing on his cushions. "If he'd followed my directions in the first place, the thing would have been cleared up and I should have been a well man by this time. I knew there was something there, and naturally supposed it was a bullet; but there's no arguing with a man who can't see farther than his nose. Get your instruments, now," he added, testily, "and have the job over. If it hadn't been for my vision I should have gone to my grave with that confounded talisman in my body and a cloud on my reputation. Let this be a lesson to you!"

It is not necessary for us to assist at a surgical operation. In ten minutes it was over. The hollow ruby, cleansed from its gory stains, was lying upon a white satin cushion, upon which it shed its glorious light. Meryon was reclining on the divan with an expression of pardonable self-satisfaction on his pallid features. Chase was looking subdued and thoughtful, and the prince said:

"Meryon, my friend, the jewel is yours. My only sorrow at its loss was that I was thus prevented from giving it to you. No less precious a keepsake would be worthy of our friendship. If it bring you no good fortune, may it at least remind you of the youth who loved you, to whom in his obscurity you were as a light of day and the warmth of the sun at noon."

This was very handsome; too much so, indeed; and Meryon would have declined the gift on the spot but from unwillingness to hurt the prince's feelings. Perhaps, however, it was not quite so valuable as the prince supposed. I saw it last year in Meryon's studio, and I must say that it seemed to me . . . . but, after all, I am not an expert in those things.

Hatipha, in another attempt to escape, fell headforemost into a water-butt and was wedged in so tightly that he drowned before they could get him out. As or Senuah—ah, yes! there is something to tell about her.

She made herself very useful and agreeable during Meryon's convalescence—a period of a month or more. But for her skillful and tender nursing he might have been bedridden twice as long. He and Chase had agreed to go home to New York together as soon as he got well. But one morning the surgeon came into his room, and, after examining him and pronouncing him fit to travel, added: "By the way, you'll have to excuse me."

"What for?"

"About going home, I mean; I shall have to stay here for the present. The fact is, I have another patient—at least—you'll have to congratulate me, old man."

"What ails you, Horace?"

"Senuah is a capital nurse, and a most charming and lovely girl. Away in front of Terah in all respects."

"Horace, you don't mean to—"

"We're to be married to-morrow. And whoever doesn't pay her proper respect as my wife will regret it, do you understand!"

"HORACE, YOU DON'T MEAN TO?"

"If you don't regret it, my dear boy, you may be sure I shan't," replied Meryon, with a broad smile; and up to last accounts, I am happy to add, there seems to have been no cause for dissatisfaction. Yet we should not forget, in considering the incident, that it is an exception and not a precedent that confronts us.

Cod-liver Oil is useful beyond any praise it has ever won, and yet few are willing or can take it in its natural state. Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil is not offensive; it is almost palatable.

Children like it. It is Cod-liver Oil made more effectual, and combined with the Hypophosphites its strengthening and flesh-forming powers are largely increased.

BETWEEN SCYLLA AND CHARYBDIS

BY MRS E. LYNN LINTON

[Copyright, 1894, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

Pretty girls with good fortunes and susceptible temperaments need careful guardianship in smart hotels where society is mixed and credentials are not always forthcoming. Harpies of both sexes abound; and more than one good bag has been made for the benefit of the fowler and the ruin of the victim—always under cover of fine manners and high-sounding names. This being so, it was a little doubtful if Mrs. Brand was the right kind of guardian for Ida Maynard. A ladylike woman who had less self-respect than complaisance, and whose capacity for belief was as large as her power of discrimination was small, had a burden of responsibility rather heavier than she could bear in the charge of a pretty young person of romantic tendencies and a handsome income. And more than one of Ida's old family friends lamented the chain of circumstances which had driven her into Mrs. Brand's nerveless hands as the sole guardianship she had. So far, however, no harm had come to the young heiress with a chaperon who never thwarted her, but also who never knew when the ice was thin or when there were rocks ahead.

The hotel was crowded, and the company was of the gayest. Butterflies sporting with one another among the flowers best expressed their general condition, and, because the place was so overflowing and the salle-a-manger had not space for universal segregation, the small tables usually given up to two or three were perforce tenanted by five or six. Whence resulted intimacies which were sometimes dangerous even when most delightful.

The hotel was crowded, and there was not space for segregation in the salle-a-manger. Owing then to this congestion the maitre d'hotel, with bows and apologies, begged to be allowed to place three charming people at the table of the young heiress and her chaperon. They were all that he had of most comme il faut on his list; and he was sure that in asking this accommodation he was doing nothing that would be displeasing to madame or mademoiselle.

That evening, then, at dinner three strangers were at Ida's table, and the mental stock-taking began.

Imprimis, a tall handsome Englishman about thirty-two or three, with fine features, a good carriage, good manners if somewhat overbearing, and the unmistakable look of one who had seen service of some sort. Secondly, a soft-voiced young Italian, with the caressing eyes and soft seductive ways of his country; accompanied by, thirdly, his mother, a typical southerner, graceful, indolent, astute and fascinating. The Englishman was Gerald Frobisher; the Italian was Il Barone di Siena; his mother was la Principessa di Certosaria. They were all noticeable because of manner, dress, and general appointments; and soon this special table became the cynosure of the room, as rumor magnified the fortune of the young heiress and the social standing of her companions.

In the sweetest ointments lurks at times that intrusive fly. Through the most harmonious combination of circumstances strikes the jarring note of unpleasant friction. And this little coterie, formed by chance, was no exception to the rule. The jarring note came from the Englishman. From the first he seemed to have translated his condition as a compatriot into the privileges of a friend and the duties of a guardian. He drew an invisible line of possession round Ida and Mrs. Brand; and before they well knew that he had cast his shoe over them he was the master of the situation. He made no overt demonstration of authority, such as the world could see and comment on. He simply gave them to understand that they must not do such and such things, and that it would be better for them—indeed it was imperative—that they should follow his advice.

As his strong will coerced Mrs. Brand's weaker mind he had things on the whole pretty much his own way, which was not always Ida's. Yet somehow, willing or unwilling, she had to go as Gerald Frobisher ordained, and bit by bit she felt her liberty slipping from her without ever coming to the moment when she could make a stand and say: "I will not."

On the other hand, the young baron and his mother, the princess, were the very heart and soul of complaisance. They seemed to live simply for Ida's pleasure. They had not a wish which was not in signorina's—not a thought extra to her service. Whatever they might propose had but one object—the pleasure or convenience of la signorina, for whom, had they the power, the very elements would be ruled to render service and tribute. Always suave and amiable, they made a decided contrast with Gerald Frobisher, who was generally the very reverse of amiable, with a certain arbitrariness of manner, a certain subacidity of accent, that was less reassuring than threatening—less enticing than compelling. "The bear," the princess used to call him in her pretty Italian way—her very distaste more caressing than Gerald's praise; and—"Ah! he is your typical Englishman who does not understand love and would beat his wife or sell her for so much and so much"—as the young baron would say, with that little shudder which expresses so much, generally adding: "Per Bacco! that is not the way we Italians treat our women! We Italians know how to treat women as they should be treated—with love and gentleness and courtesy and indulgence, but, most of all, with love!"

And when he said this his velvet-brown eyes would look into Ida's with something behind and within which made that erstwhile frank and half-unconscious young woman drop hers to the floor, overpowered by she knew not what. All that she did know was—it was something pleasant, yet something that made her feel part afraid and part ashamed, and especially desirous that Gerald Frobisher should not see.

The day was glorious. A day when youthful spirits were not to be confined within the four walls of a house, nor yet between the hedges of a hotel garden. It was a day for amusements, expeditions, adventures, what not. One of the kind which holds the promise of some undeclared joy like the secret perfume lying within the closed bud of the lily; one of those when Prince Charming is on his way, and the princess is setting forth in her golden chariot to meet him—when the young feel and the old remember, and the joy of living has no flaw from either regret or despair.

"This is the right day for the old Schloss," said Gerald Frobisher at breakfast.

He spoke with the manner of command rather than suggestion—ordaining for the others according to his own ideas of fitness, without reference to their wishes.

"Just!" said Mrs. Brand, complaisant as usual.

"It would be rather jolly," said Ida, not caring to agree too enthusiastically, but secretly charmed with the idea. "What do you say, princess?" she added, turning to the Italian as if it were a foregone conclusion that those two, who were their table companions, should also be their comrades in the day's pleasures.

Gerald's keen eyes flashed impatiently; and his stern mouth hardened to a line.

"Five is an impossible number," he said, as if to himself, but everyone heard, though no one took up the challenge.

"It will be lovely," said the princess, smiling in her sweet way. Her eyes and her smile took in the whole company. "Giulio had already suggested this little journey to me. I am glad that Mr. Frobisher has fallen in with the idea so amiably."

"Pardon me, I have fallen in with no idea from the baron or anyone else," said Gerald, ill-temperedly. "I was not aware that the baron had any ideas—on the subject," he added, as a rider to the original proposition, and when he thought the sarcasm had had time to strike.

The young man laughed and showed his small, white, pointed teeth, like a row of little shark's teeth gleaming beneath his silken mustache.

"Ah! my friend!" he said, gayly. "A life spent in shooting rhinoceroses and bears is not the best school for the knowledge of mankind. We who live in cities have the advantage over you men of sport and the chase. We have humanity as our books. You study only the habits of bears and buffaloes."

"We learn a little about men, too," said Gerald, slowly. "We have to deal with slaves and thieves, cowards and adventurers of all kinds. We learn their ways pretty accurately, I assure you."

"No doubt," said the baron, retreating in good order, but adding, as his last shot: "This, however, proves my point. These slaves and cowards, etc., do not make up the general society of ordinary European drawing-rooms. Hence you must allow us stay-at-home citizens to have some advantages—and among them you must grant us the knowledge of our own world of gentlehood and the best traditions of good breeding and social diplomacy."

"What time shall we start?" said Ida, to create a diversion.

These dangerous fencings and bitter double-meanings were always going on between the two men—a duel as yet with the foils only; (but the young heiress was beginning to fear a more serious collision, as the animosity between them was daily growing more apparent and more extreme). How long it would continue restrained within the due boundaries of courtesy remained to be seen. As things were, it continually looked as if it would break loose like a flood and carry devastation and destruction into the little settlement they had formed among themselves.

Gerald looked at his watch.

"Be ready in half an hour," he said, shortly.

"That will be a little too quick for me, Mr. Frobisher," said the princess, again smiling as if the very soul of sweetness were lodged in her handsome body. If they could have read her heart and thoughts! "I am not so energetic as you English. I want a margin for deliberation."

"If your margin throws us too late we cannot go at all," said Gerald, unpleasantly.

"We must not inconvenience my mother," said the baron, with a fine air of filial duty and conventional courtesy.

"Of course not," said Ida.

Whereupon the young Italian leaned over to the pretty girl, and said: "Thank you, signorina!" with effusion, holding out his hand as one under the influence of strong emotion. Looking into the flushing face of the girl with a world of tender meaning in his eyes, he said, speaking to his mother, but still looking at Ida: "The signorina always does and says exactly the right thing at the right moment and in the right way. Is it not so, my mother?"

"Assuredly! She is a saint!" said the princess.

Gerald rose abruptly from the table.

"Very well," he said, holding his head straight and high. "I will give you a quarter's grace, princess. I will order the carriage for the half hour, when I shall expect you all to be ready."

"If our proceedings inconvenience you, my friend, I will take command of the party," said the Italian, with a manner suggestive of the heathen Chinee, it was so bland and so childlike.

Gerald disdained to reply, save by a look that was decidedly contemptuous—as contemptuous and as essentially insulting as a blow would have been. Then he strode out of the room, and worked off a little of his spleen on the unoffending hall-porter, who chanced to cross his path.

Mother and son exchanged looks.

"Our friend is not in the best of humors to-day," laughed the baron.

"Are all English gentlemen like that?" queried the princess. "And yet"—correcting herself—"how foolish to ask such a question, when I know so much better! Who, indeed, knows so well as I the charm of the English character? Was not my own dear mother an Englishwoman?"

"They are adorable," said the baron, with fervor. "Who that knows them would not love them?—for the sake of one!" he added, in a low voice, those velvety eyes looking into Ida's with the love and softness, the passion and the prayer he knew so well to throw into them—"for the sake of one, loving all!"

"Had we not better go and get ready?" said Mrs. Brand, with the fear of Gerald Frobisher before her eyes.

"Yes, let us go," said Ida, in a half-relieved, half-embarrassed kind of way.

And again mother and son exchanged glances, and the smile that just lifted the corner of each well-shaped but over-fleshy mouth meant "Good so far." "Winged if not yet bagged" would have been an Englishman's formula.

The morning had passed into the early afternoon without untoward accident of any kind—unless Gerald Frobisher's temper might be called untoward. Never remarkable for amiability, to-day it was of the vilest kind to be found. His rough life and adventurous experiences seemed to have hardened him to so much granite—granite abraded at all four corners and full of jagged edges and wounding spikes. It served, however, to bring out into greater relief the sweet courtesies and graceful plasticities of the baron, whose whole energies seemed devoted to the one desire to please and entertain the signorina, to do as she desired—to anticipate her unspoken wishes and make her feel that she was the main object of his thoughts and the—as yet undeclared—mistress of his heart and life. His gentleness, his unfailing good humor, the skill with which he parried Gerald's rougher onslaughts—but in the parrying inflaming the Englishman's anger still more, thus putting him for ever more and more in the wrong—his caressing eyes and musical voice, his subtle tenderness, all stole over Ida as some irresistible charm, some powerful spell spoken by a potent magician. For one of the few times in her young life she contemplated her wealth with a glow of pride and delight, and rejoiced that she was free, rich and the mistress of her own destiny.

All this Gerald saw and understood. And the feelings which this knowledge roused in him were akin to those with which he had defied a savage chief at the head of his tribe, stalked a rogue elephant, circumvented a man-eating tiger, fought single-handed with a cobra, or looked for whipsnakes in the grass that he might crush them before they had power to sting. In the baron he recognized his enemy, whom yet he despised; and forthwith set himself to destroy him with the same feelings if not by the same methods as those with which he had destroyed those others in the jungles and the wilds.

The object of the expedition had been accomplished. They had seen the Schloss and heard the legends; peered into the dungeons and admired the view from the battlements; eaten their luncheon spread on the trestled tables of the courtyard; talked platitudes with an air of profundity; skirted by intense feelings with an air of indifference; and done all that people in their circumstances are wont to do. And now it was time to return, Ida always between the two men who were battling together for her possession with as much fierceness, and to the same purpose, as if they had been fighting with clash of steel, not mere fire of words. Fortune hunters both of them, they were the Scylla and Charybdis of the girl's perilous voyage. Into whose hands soever she might fall she would fall to her enduring sorrow.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

A False Diagnosis.

La grippe is confounded by many persons with a severe attack of catarrh, which in some respects resembles the former. These individuals suffer severely with pain about the forehead, eyes and ears, with soreness in throat and stoppage of the nasal passages, and in fact, are incapacitated for work of any kind for days at a time. These are catarrhal sufferers. Ely's Cream Balm has been used with the best results in such cases. The remedy will give instant relief.

WATCHUNG AVE. OPENING REVIVED

Officials from Both Sides of the Brook Agree on Proceeding Simultaneously to Get the Thoroughfare Through, and Hustler Smalley Lends a Hand.

Chairman Charles J. Fisk of the Committee on Streets of the Plainfield Common Council is determined to have the long agitated project to open Watchung avenue from Front street to the foot of the mountain pushed rapidly to completion, and at his prompting a consultation between the Plainfield and North Plainfield authorities was held last night as announced in The Daily Press of last evening.

The session was held in the office of Mayor Gilbert, in the Coward Building, and was informal; those attending were Councilmen Ginna and Fisk of the Plainfield Committee on Streets, Councilman Valiant of the North Plainfield Committee on Streets, Street Commissioner Robert A. Meeker of the city, ex-Borough Councilman Newton B. Smalley, Town Committeeman Robert M. Fountain, and the Editor of The Daily Press by invitation.

The map and list of assessments which were left as a $2,000 legacy of the former effort to open the avenue were open for inspection and discussion. Mr. Fisk reviewed the action that had been taken, stating that the Town Committee and the City Council had acted jointly in appointing commissioners and assessing benefits and damages. They had operated under a law which had been passed to cover just such cases, and after the preliminary work had been accomplished objectors had obtained a decision in the courts setting it aside on the grounds of the unconstitutionality of the act under which they had conducted the survey.

The method of procedure left was for the two councils to agree informally on action, and then proceed independently but with thorough understanding of one another's movements.

All agreed that the opening of the avenue would be a vast improvement. Mr. Smalley, who was one of the most agressive in previous agitation of the enterprise, said he could talk a week on the matter, and not exhaust argument in favor of it. The only cause for previous defeat had been the injustice of the assessments. Too much had been put on some individuals, some had been awarded too large benefits, and not enough had been put on the township at large.

The commissioners had awarded damages of $25,423.08, and provision to raise this amount had been made by assessment on the property-holders most directly benefited in the immediate neighborhood of the improvement. Outside of this, $1,509.73 had been assessed on the town at large, for the expenses connected with the work of the commission. Plainfield had been assessed $657.37 as her share of the cost.

Mr. Smalley pointed out that the work involved in perfecting the improvement would be less today than when agitated before. Much of the proposed extension has already been opened, thereby lessening future cost, and opening up property improvements which would take a generous share of the assessment. For instance, Grand street had been opened through Watchung Park, and deeded by A. D. Thompson to the Borough, and that was really a part of the proposed Watchung avenue, and a portion of the assessments would be distributed over the various properties thus opened up in the Park. Formerly, the work of opening would have to be done clear from the brook to Johnston drive, but now the only part really unopened was from the brook to Jackson avenue. If the work of assessment were carefully done, and if the individual amounts were not excessive, and a fair proportion were assessed on the borough at large, he was sure that everything would be plain sailing and that all would push the enterprise along as a good thing.

He believed that too generous allowances had been made to some of those whose property would have to be taken to complete the improvement. For instance, Mr. Messersmith had been awarded $2,917 damages, when only three-fourths of his $2,000 lot of land was to be taken, and he was left his house, which Mr. Smalley would pay $1,500 for tomorrow gladly and move to a lot he had ready in Watchung Park. St. Joseph's Church had been awarded $1,800, when it had always been understood that she would be glad to have her land taken without recompense, for the sake of having the thoroughfare opened. The street would not touch the church building, but instead would pass directly between the church and parsonage, opening up for the church two very desirable corner lots. So with many other similar cases; he believed that by cutting the damages down to the actual selling figures of the land, and making the assessments so that no one would growl, there would be speedy accomplishment of the desires of the projectors of the improvement.

Asked if he would be willing to undertake the work of getting signers to the petition to the Borough Council, Mr. Smalley said he was glad to be identified with the matter as he felt that it would be the making of the borough. That new street meant the immediate development of one-third of the North Plainfield territory, now lying dormant. No better building land lay outdoors than the lots of that section, especially along the crest of the hill, and all that was wanted was a thoroughfare reaching it from the station. Even far-away Washington Park would be benefited by the opening, as the avenue would be used by the residents of that fashionable section in communicating between their homes and the station. It would be a wonderfully popular and handsome driveway, and would give great relief to Somerset street, now congested with traffic and made dangerous for skittish horses because of the trolley cars.

Mr. Fisk said that what was wanted was to start right and then go ahead. As a sample of enterprise and push he cited the widening of Peace street, for which Mr. Smalley expressed admiration as one of the best things Plainfield had done. Mr. Fisk told how injunctions had been all ready to serve, on the part of the obstructionists, against the city's procedure, and how the city stole a march on them by beginning the work at 2 a. m. and pushing it through in the night; and when the kickers came down to breakfast they were glad to have the work proceed, and were now among the proudest residents of the improved street.

Plainfield, said Mr. Fisk, was ready to go ahead just as soon as North Plainfield saw her way clear. He advised that Mr. Valiant consult Borough Counsel Reed, and get instruction from him as to the exact method of procedure. Then Mr. Smalley could be advised in the matter, and he could secure the necessary petition, and when that was presented to the Borough Council the work of appointing commissioners and assessing benefits and damages could proceed. Mr. Fisk said he would guarantee to have an ordinance go through the Plainfield Council simultaneously with that in the North Plainfield Council, and thus the street would be laid out on both sides of the brook at once and would meet at the brook and be ready for a bridge from the Boards of Freeholders of the two counties.

It was pointed out that the natural sequence of opening Watchung avenue would be the vacation of Warren street, and the improvement of the houses already up in that locality. On the Plainfield side the assessments for benefits from the improvement had previously been extended out Watchung avenue as far as Seventh street.

After thorough discussion of every detail of the plan, it was decided that Mr. Valiant and Mr. Smalley should proceed immediately on the line suggested by Mr. Fisk, and that an effort should be made to get the project in shape for the new Borough Council to act on it. It is hoped to get the enterprise under good headway during the Summer, so that by Fall the avenue, straight as an arrow, and 60 feet wide, will sweep in grandeur from Front street all the way to the mountain drive, uniting at the Y. M. C. A. Building with that portion already affording such a splendid drive from Front street to the Netherwood Heights.

8 MILES MORE OF TROLLEY TRACK

That's What the Plainfield Street Railway Company Plan to Build.

Councilman Fisk spent yesterday afternoon with Mr. Riker of the Plainfield Street Railway Company, going over the available routes for street railway extension. The company is anxious to begin work on the extensions, and the only trouble is to get the sufficient rights of way. It is hoped everything will be ready for action at the meeting of the Common Council next Monday night. The extensions are planned to reach Netherwood, Scotch Plains, Hillside Cemetery, the West End, and Dunellen. Altogether the company will ask for franchise for eight miles of track in addition to that already in operation. The people have only themselves to blame if these extensions are not completed this year, as the company is ready to go ahead as fast as the consents can be secured.

A TEXT FROM THE PRESS

Rev. Dr. Lewis Gives a Plain Temperance Talk.

SHARP SARCASM ON THE SUBJECT

Interesting Comparison of the Relative Value of the Signature of John Doe (His Mark) and the Signatures of Clergymen and Christian Women.

"THE APPLICATIONS WERE REPORTED CORRECT IN FORM, AND WENT THROUGH WITH BELLS ON. AND TILL 11 THAT NIGHT THERE WAS MUCH REJOICING AT THE BARS OF THE TOWN."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS: The above quotation from your editorial note of yesterday is remarkably suggestive as to the situation of things in Plainfield. It was all right that the saloons should rejoice. Those who win rejoice in spite of themselves. Your editorial records that the protests against licenses were unusually meager. Undoubtedly. The most persistent sometimes grow a little weary of useless methods. The clergymen have come to think it a little monotonous and a trifle wearying to be politely listened to as to their protests and then hear the order given: "File the protests and go on with the voting." It is just a trifle humiliating, not to say insulting, to be told year after year that John (his x mark) Doe has an hundred fold more weight with the men who are under oath to administer the government of Plainfield as the best interests demand, than the name of J. K Newell "Secretary of the Ministers Association" has, or than the combined names of D. J. Yerkes, D. D., and W. R. Richards, D. D., "pastors" etc., would have. John (his x mark) Doe evidently represents something; something tangible; something that shows on the ledger.

It is not wholly conducive to enthusiasm on the part of Christian women to be told, year after year, that Margaret "her mark" Doe counts for more on "license night" than Mrs. Horace Kimball, "President of the Children's Home Association". Mrs. Kimball represents only the results of the liquor traffic, which form so large a factor in the demand for a Children's Home, while Margaret "her mark" represents something else, causes, not results. Margaret's "mark" is necessary to scatter the results of the saloon system promiscuously about the city, so that Mrs. Kimball and her compeers will have some use for a Children's Home. Othello is nothing when his occupation is gone.

Your editorial suggests that Christian and temperance influences have depressed the market for signatures to applications for license, so that it is "A matter of common knowledge" that the X "marks" of John and Margaret cost money. Quite likely; but since the "applications go through with bells on" nothing is lost, and the commercial power of the saloon is increased, and its hold on the throat of the city is strengthened.

If the total cost of a given license is $700, plus $25 each for the names of applicants, and possibly the cost of a burial lot signers somewhere, so that tender consciences can swear that John and Margaret are owners of "real-estate", it is easy to see that between the brewer, who holds a mortgage on the saloon, and the demands of the license system, the saloon keeper is "between the devil and the deep sea" and that business must be pushed to prevent shipwreck. And who except preachers and Christian women, does not know that the "very best interests of our fair city" are enhanced in proportion as the business of the saloons is increased?

"Rejoice?" By all means. The saloons do right. Let them rejoice. They are securely intrenched, if their fees are somewhat large. Protection always costs something. But when a saloon can vanquish a church, count by count, it is competent for the saloon to smile complaisantly, "set 'em up all around", and suggest between drinks that the "churches are not in it tonight". I wonder sometimes if it would not do well, just for a change, for the Common Council to have a session some "license night" which would call for "praise meetings" in the churches as well as the saloons. Is that asking too much for Christianity?

I hope The Press will not make it public, but judging by the past the time will come again when these clergymen and church people whose prayers are as powerless

"As a painted ship upon a painted ocean"

to move the Common Council, will be besought to rally for some phase of good citizenship or good government, especially when such a rally will help one party to put another out of power. When the saloons have done their work so well that corner lots and houses to rent are rated as they were in Sodom one morning after a big fire, the secretary of the Ministers Association, and the presidents of all the societies of Christian women, and the most efficient church officers, will be sent for by the politicians and real-estate men to help pull society out of the ashes of its own folly, and revive business and our good name.

Meanwhile, let the saloons rejoice "until 11 at night", but not any later, please, because they are in partnership with the city, and the city says "Close at 11", and the firm should not be divided against itself, when it is so well united against the churches. A. H. LEWIS

THEY'LL GET THERE!

Plainfield Bowling Club Now Tied for First Place, and on the Climb.

The Plainfield Bowling Club are up where they belong, but the question is whether they will stay there at the pinnacle or be compelled to bite the dust, figuratively speaking, at the hands of the Bound Brookers, with whom they are now tied for first place in the Watchung league by ignominiously defeating the Finderne Club last night in the Board of Trade alleys.

If the Plainfielders put up the game on the play offs that they did last night there is reason to believe that victory will perch on their banners as the finishing leaders of the league.

The game last night was an exciting one, and the bowlers of both teams spat on their paws, wiped their throbbing brows, grated their molars and rolled with a determination to win, while the onlookers and rooters rooted with great vehemence at every good play. This of course made things interesting for both sides.

The Findernes started in at the commencement as though they were going to grab all the high scores to be grabbed, and in the first half of the game things looked a trifle favorable for the accomplishment of these intentions. Especially so every time a ball went bowling down towards the pins from the brawny arm of Terwilliger, who played a star game in the first half for Finderne, but whose score dwindled. This seemed to be the principal trouble with the Finderne's—that of exhausting their best playing at the start.

On the contrary the Plainfield boys kept up a good average all the way through, and finished up winners with 49 points to spare. Vail bowled the best game for Plainfield.

The score:

PLAINFIELD.		FINDERNE.
VanAlystie	140	Brown	167
Barnes	133	White	159
Maltby	174	Price, J	140
Watters	141	Shaw	179
Vail	173	Terwilliger	205

Maltby	170	Price, J	154
Watters	189	Shaw	143
Vail	185	Terwilliger	141
	1634		1585

Scorers—Saunders and Petrie. Referees—Stevens and Reynolds.

The playoff will be bowled on the Finderne alleys, their club offering a special trophy to the winners.

THE SPOUSES ENTERTAIN.

Red Men's Auxiliary Provide a Pleasant Time for Palefaces.

The dance and entertainment given by Iona Council, No. 14, Daughters of Pocohontas, in the Red Men's hall on West Front street last night, provided amusement for 250 people who attended. The floor had been crashed, and the walls gayly decorated with bright colors. From the centre chandelier hung miniature flags and Chinese lanterns, while four streamers of red, white and blue bunting were suspended from the centre to each corner of the room.

The entertainment portion of the event was commenced at 9, and continued to 10:30, during which time the following Plainfield artists rendered songs and recitations that in many cases were more meritorious than is usually found in the amateur performer, and who were greeted with applause by those present:

Piano solo, Mrs. Fred Canfield; recitation, Miss Webber; comic recitation, A. Gorton; songs, Eli Odam; songs, Dr. G. C. Bedford; recitations, Elmer Neal; song, Mrs. A. J. Stiglitz; humorous sayings, John H. Carney; song, Mrs. W. Westphal.

At 10:30 the grand march was commenced, led by David C. Allen and Mrs. George Voehl. At the intermission refreshments were served by members of the council. Mrs. George Voehl was the chairman of the committee having charge of the affair.

LEVI HETFIELD DEAD.

Paralysis Ends a Busy and Useful Life.

VIGOROUS AT THE AGE OF 77.

He Was One of the Pioneers in Plainfield's Development, and Leaves a Record of Industry, Integrity and Success.

Death this morning at 4 removed from among Plainfield's citizens Levi Hetfield, to whom much of the present success of this city as a residence and business centre is due. There is no person in this section of the State who was better known as a business man and more respected as a citizen than Mr. Hetfield. His whole life and interests have remained in Plainfield from his boyhood days, and the sturdy habits of his character are evidenced in the many organizations and institutions which are now important factors in local life, and in forming which he took a prominent and active part. The large property interests of which he was the owner are self-sufficient in themselves to speak for his great executive ability as a business man.

Mr. Hetfield was a native of Westfield. He came to Plainfield when a young lad, and commenced to learn the trade of a carpenter, at which he soon became an adept, and by industrious and frugal customs soon launched into business for himself—that of a builder and contractor. From that time forward his life had been one of continuous prosperity.

His first business venture of any magnitude was the erection of a flour and feed mill on Madison avenue, but which a few years later was burned. This business was supplemented by a lumber and coal yard.

A large part of the fortune which he left was made from increase in value and improvement of real-estate, between Third and Fifth streets, which he purchased years ago as farm land, and which is now covered with valuable residences.

In politics he was Democrat, active in serving his party, but true and consistent in advocating its principles. For three terms he was an influential member of the Common Council. He was one of the charter members of the Dime Savings Bank, a director in the Plainfield Street Railway Co., Bound Brook Mutual Fire Insurance Company and the American Mutual Fire Insurance Company. He was an active member of the First Baptist Church. A number of years ago he retired from active business life and has since devoted his time to overseeing his large estate. His executive ability was frequently recognized by the Court of Chancery in appointing him as administrator of various estates, notably among them being the Job Male and Alfred Berry estates.

In 1838 he was married to Miss Sarah A. Hand, who died in 1868, and in 1874 he was again married—this time to Miss Maggie Freeman. He leaves four children, Walter L., John M., Mrs. Harold Serrell and Mrs. Dr. Andrew Manning, all of this city.

Mr. Hetfield's death was caused by paralysis, with which he was stricken last week after returning from Elizabeth on Wednesday, where he had over-exerted himself in the work incident to settling up the affairs of the estate of Mrs. Colt. No immediate fears were entertained at that time, but on Monday afternoon he sank into unconsciousness, which continued until death ensued this morning.

The funeral will be held Saturday afternoon at 2:30, at his late home on Madison avenue.

Praise for Congressman Dunn.

[From The Elizabeth Daily Journal.]

Congressman Dunn's Newark bay bridge bill has received President Cleveland's signature, and it is a law. But it is merely permissive; it does not, of course, provide ways and means for building a bridge between Elizabeth and Bergen Point, but it opens the way for such a bridge so far as Congress can open it. The rest must be done by the New Jersey Legislature and by the people of Union and Hudson Counties. Mr. Dunn has given his best effort to secure the passage of this bill, and he is to be congratulated upon his success.

"She Couldn't Marry Three."

This play is presented by one of the cleverest companies in existence, every one of them being especially selected for their adaptability in portraying the character they represent. The star, Miss Lillian Kennedy, is the brightest ingenu soubrette in America, and in this comedy she has a role which gives full scope to her wonderful versatility.

The experience of Geo. A. Apgar, of German Valley, N. J., is well worth remembering. He was troubled with chronic diarrhoea and doctored for five months and was treated by four different doctors without benefit. He then began using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, of which one small bottle effected a complete cure. It is for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. HYMENEAL.

Bowen—Vingut.

The marriage of Miss Augusta Floyd Vingut to Herbert Wolcott Bowen, formerly a resident of Netherwood for several years, was celebrated yesterday at high noon at the residence of the bride, 46 West Thirty-fourth street, New York, the ceremony being performed by Archbishop Corrigan.

The bride, who is a daughter of Mr. Vingut, is descended on the paternal side from a distinguished Castilian family, her father being a prominent resident of Barcelona, Spain. On the maternal side she is a great-great-granddaughter of William Floyd, a signer of the Declaration of Independence and a great-granddaughter of Major David VanHorn, who was an aide de camp at Washington's inauguration. She was educated abroad and made her social bow to the fashionable set in New York about a year ago.

The groom, who is United States Consul-General at Barcelona, Spain, is a son of Henry C. Bowen, proprietor of The New York Independent, and a lineal descendant of John Eliot, a great-grand-nephew of Benjamin Franklin, and is connected with the Winthrop, Tappan, Aspinwall and many other well-known families. He is a Yale graduate and attended the Columbia Law School.

Owing to a recent death in the groom's family only the relatives witnessed the ceremony. There was no reception afterward. Miss Grace Coudert, daughter of Hon. Frederic R. Coudert, was maid of honor, and the bridemaids were Miss Dorothy VanSchaick and Miss Marie Vyse of Staten Island. The maid of honor wore pale green satin, and the maids salmon pink satin, trimmed with old point lace and spangled chiffon. They carried bunches of violets. The bride wore a frock of heavy white satin, trimmed with point lace, and a veil of the same dainty material. The groom's brother, Clarence W. Bowen, acted as best men.

Mr. and Mrs. Bowen will spend a week in Washington and after a short stay in New York will sail for Barcelona, Spain.

JUST FOR CHARITY.

The King's Daughters Impersonate Pretty Characters for the Benefit of the Unfortunate.

For sweet charity's sake the Dorcas Circle of the King's Daughters gave a delightful entertainment in the Y. M. C. A. Hall last night, consisting in the first part of a Japanese fan and parasol drill and in the second of a series of nine muses. The profits of the affair are to be devoted to relieving the city poor.

The drill was divided into three parts, each followed by a tableau. As the curtains on the stage were drawn apart six young women emerged from each side and to the slow and catchy music went through a series of fancy steps that were performed in a graceful manner. Each was attired in gowns of Japanese style—six carrying fans and six parasols, the fantastic movement of which added to the beauty of the first part. The second part was an execution of four movements representing Gossip, Coquette, Fencing and Bird figures, ending with a rendition of the "Three Little Maids" from the Mikado opera by three central figures. The finale of the drill was another series of fancy steps differing somewhat from those of the opening. The following are the young women who impersonated the characters: Misses French, Maltby, Clark, Green, Patten, Barrett, Pangborn, Langdon, Kline, Runyon, Cornwell, and Mrs. S. W. Clark. The music and figures of the drill were arranged by Mrs. A. A. Rockwell of New York.

After an intermission of ten minutes, the Muses, originated by Mrs. Welles T. Miner of New York, consisting of nine tableaux, were presented by nine young women, each portraying a different Muse. With varied colored costumes, appropriate to the poses assumed, and executed with artistic precision, this portion of the entertainment was also a pretty sight to gaze upon. The muses were followed out in this order: Melpomene, Miss Sutphen; Clio, Miss Cornwell; Urania, Miss Green; Terpsichore, Miss Swayze; Polygynia, Miss Langdon; Erato, Mrs. S. W. Clark; Euterpe, Miss Cone; Thalia, Miss Wyckoff; Calliope, Miss Pangborn. The production was under the direction of W. A. Archer and J. S. Miner of New York.

The following kindly officiated as ushers: Messrs F L C Martin, Samuel Clark, Gilmore Drayton, Harry F Johnson and H A Patten. The box office was in charge of F C Green and son.

Quarterly Conference.

The prayer meeting this evening in the Methodist Church will be addressed by Dr. Byman, the presiding elder. After the meeting the fourth quarterly conference will be held.

Mrs. Emily Thorne, who resides at Toledo, Washington, says she has never been able to procure any medicine for rheumatism that relieves the pain so quickly and effectually as Chamberlain's Pain Balm and that she has also used it for lame back with great success. CLEVELAND CRITICISED

Senator Fithian Condemns the President's Actions.

Shall the Chief Executive Protect Each State from Invasion, or Domestic Violence? - Controversy on the Late Chicago Strike - Governor Altgeld Not an Anarchist.

Washington, Feb. 27.—Mr. Fithian in his speech before the house regarding the late Chicago strike said:

The gentleman from New York (Mr. Bartlett) who is evidently opposed to this bill on constitutional grounds, takes the position that the action of the president of the United States in the late strike was constitutional and right, in face of the very provisions of the constitution itself, which ought to teach him or any other gentleman who has given any thought to constitutional questions, that the action of the president was in direct violation of the express provision of the federal constitution. The strike in the state of Illinois was a domestic affair. It was an affair between the people of Illinois themselves. There was no invasion by any foreign power. There was no invasion from the people of any other state of the union. The president had no power, under Section 4, Article 4, of the constitution, to invade and take charge of domestic affairs of that people.

Cleveland's Power.

When the president of the United States assumed the duties of the high office which he now fills, he was also required to take an oath that he would, to the best of his ability, protect, preserve and defend the constitution of the United States. Now, can any sane man, can my distinguished friend from New York, who assumes to be a constitutional lawyer, say that in the face of the language of the constitution, that the United States shall protect each state against invasion or domestic violence, on application of the legislature, or of the executive when the legislature cannot be convened, the president has power to step in and assume control by regulating such affairs, when there is nothing of domestic violence? Why, sir, this question was settled in 1794 in the Pennsylvania riots, growing out of the passage of the excise laws.

He Did Not Inquire.

Let me call your attention, gentleman, to the fact that at the time the federal troops were ordered into the state of Illinois, neither the sheriff of Cook county, who is a republican, nor the mayor of the city of Chicago, had ever applied to the governor of Illinois to send them any aid whatever in executing the law. Neither did the president of the United States before he ordered troops into the state of Illinois, inquire of the sheriff or of the mayor whether he was able to enforce the law or not. Neither did he inquire of the governor whether he was willing to enforce the law or whether he could enforce the law.

Now, gentlemen, what else did they do? Immediately following the issuing of the order to send federal troops into the state of Illinois, the administration appointed a gentleman by the name of Walker, a corporation lawyer and a republican, to act as counsel for the United States in all question growing out of this riot, to represent a democratic administration in this affair, contrary to and in violation of the constitution, and ignoring the local and state authorities.

Altgeld Not an Anarchist.

Now, Mr. Chairman, whatever these gentlemen may say about the governor of the state of Illinois, I want to say to them that they cannot put down the constitution. They cannot put down the precedents that have been established in this country since 1794, by President Washington, simply by raising the cry of anarchy. The governor of the state of Illinois is no more an anarchist than any gentleman that fills a seat in this house. He stands as much for law and order as does the president of the United States; and he has kept the peace and maintained law and order in the state of Illinois, and will continue to do so as long as he is governor of the state.

"I Am Harry Brown, of Michigan."

Buffalo, Feb. 27.—Tuesday evening a young man about 30 years old registered at the New Carleton hotel and was assigned to a room. Last evening his body was found on the floor and on a table near by was a note reading: "For God's sake don't bury me in potters field, I am Harry Brown of Grand Rapids, Mich. An empty bottle that had contained laudanum was thrown on the floor beside the bed. Undertaker McShane took charge of the body.

Cannot Find the Bodies.

Thompson, Conn., Feb. 27.—The search for the bodies of the Storweski woman and her child has been abandoned. The entire territory within a radius of five miles of the farmhouse where the bloody hatchet was found has been gone over without result. The matter is now in the hands of State Attorney Hunter of Willimantic, and what he proposes to do with the case will probably develop next Tuesday, when the superior court comes in.

Parents Angry.

Middletown, Conn., Feb. 27.—It was stated yesterday that formal charges will be made against Supt. Ferguson, of the high school, by parents of the pupils who were alleged to have been whipped by the superintendent last week. The members of the school board will not discuss the matter.

Nicholson Temperance Bills Passed.

Indianapolis, Feb. 27.—The legislature yesterday passed the Nicholson temperance bill by a vote of 75 to 20. During the debate Andrew Jackson apoligized for his charge that there was a barrel of whiskey in the state house cellar being used to bribe members to oppose the bill.

They Fought for Points.

Cincinnati, Feb. 27.—"Kid" Hogan and Australian Billy Murphy fought ten rounds for scientific points in this city last night. Hogan was given the decision after one of the best fights seen here this winter.

THE CITY MUST PAY.

Burning of Brooklyn's City Hall—It Was Not Insured.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 27.—Early yesterday morning, Brooklyn's citizens were alarmed by the cry of fire. The city hall was in flames. Keeper Dunne promptly sent in an alarm, and immediately gave his attention to his sick wife, and notified other members of his family to hurry out of the apparently doomed building. Firemen were soon on the spot, their efforts being directed on the cupola, but it was dry wood and their labor was in vain. Only a few minutes more and the great bell fell with a crash through the roof. Here it broke in two, one half going through to the floor below. The damage to the building, apart from the roof and tower is mainly from water. The question of loss cannot as yet be fully estimated, but it will be about $100,000. There is no insurance on the building and the city will have to pay the damage. The fire originated in a waste paper closet, through the carelessness of some person, who used it. The remains of the great bell were carried away by relic hunters.

A RIOTOUS PARTY.

Filled with Liquor, They Smash Things Generally.

Kingston, N. Y., Feb. 27.—Early yesterday morning Andrew Ostrich, an Austrian, who keeps a store at Rosendale, near this city, wished to close his shop and retire for the night. There was a crowd of six men in the store at the time, all of whom were under the influence of liquor and very noisy. When Ostrich ordered the men to leave they became very angry and smashed things generally. The proprietor ordered them to desist and upon their refusal he procured his revolver and fired seven times into the crowd. Wright Wood was shot in the left side and will die; Matthew Burns was shot in the leg, and a bullet passed through the coat sleeve of another member of the riotous party. Immediately after the shooting Ostrich surrendered himself to the village authorities and was locked up in the county jail.

KILRAIN TO MEET O'DONNELL.

Boston and New England People Curious To See Steve Perform.

Boston, Feb. 27.—A dispatch from Jake Kilrain states that he has accepted Steve O'Donnell as his opponent in place of Peter Maher at the Suffolk A. C., March 18. They are to box eight rounds with a decision. The club declared the Maher-Kilrain contest off on account of the "fake" between Maher and Hall. When this became known Manager Brady telegraphed that O'Donnell would fill Maher's place at a weeks' notice. There was some question whether Kilrain would agree to the change, but he has done so. Local sports are of the opinion that Kilrain and O'Donnell will make a better fight than the pair originally agreed upon. There is a great curiosity in this city and New England to see O'Donnell perform.

CELESTIAL WEDS A JEWESS.

Married in Joe Lee's Laundry to Obscure Curious Spectators.

Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 27.—Joe Lee, a Chinaman, and Ella Moses, a pretty young Jewess, were married here yesterday. The ceremony was performed by Judge Bloodworth. The groom wanted the ceremony performed in open court but the bride objected because of the crowd of curious spectators. So they substituted the groom's laundry for the temple of justice and the ceremony was duly performed. None of the brides family would attend and no Chinamen were present. Joe Lee states that since he lost his cue, two weeks ago, his fellow countrymen have cut him. Lee and his bride have been sweethearts for a long time but it was only recently that she consented to marry him.

Good-bye General Booth.

New York, Feb. 27.—A farewell reception was tendered General William Booth, leader of the Salvation Army, by the staff and soldiers of the New York division of the army last night at Carnegie hall. James Talcott, was chosen as chairman, and Commander Ballington Booth, on behalf of the staff and troops of America, read a farewell address to the general. The general since leaving England has covered 18,453 miles, and addressed about 437,500 people. General Booth replied to the address in a long speech. He reviewed the work of the Salvation army from its foundation down to the present time.

An Impostor Escapes Punishment.

Middletown, Conn., Feb. 27.—An impostor claiming to be Berty A. Davis, representing the Eagle Publishing company of Albany and an Odd Fellow, attempted to get H. M. Thayer, a prominent member in this city to cash a check for $10, for him last night. Thayer was suspicious and refused. The police arrested Davis, who had also another check for $50, both being drawn by the Eagle Publishing company. After an examination he was released, as Thayer refused to prosecute.

France Retaliates.

London, Feb. 27.—A dispatch to the United Press from Paris says that it is understood that the United States embassy to France will lodge a protest against the decree submitted to the French cabinet by M. Gadaud, the minister of agriculture, and adopted, prohibiting the importation into France of American cattle on account of the prevalence of Texas fever and pleuro-pneumonia.

Robbed an Insurance Company.

Chatham, Ont., Feb. 27.—Thomas McBride, agent of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company of New York, on trial here on the charge of defrauding his company, has been found guilty, and Charles Davis, also employed by the same company has been arrested on the same charge.

FRIGHTFUL EXPLOSION

A Brooklyn Factory Shattered Mysteriously.

One Person Killed and Several Fatally Injured, While Fifty Others Were Shocked or Bruised—Italians Engaged in Excavating May Have Struck Concealed Chemicals.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 27.—A terrific explosion which resulted in the death of one person, wrecked several houses, shattered glass for several blocks and injured at least fifty people, some of them fatally, occurred just before 5 o'clock last evening in the unoccupied factory building at 27, 29 and 31 Johnson avenue, this city, formerly used as a dye works and owned by Mr. Levy, of Nassau street, New York.

Near the factory is a vacant lot. Half a dozen Italian laborers, employed by Contractor John Auer, were engaged at the time excavating for the foundation of a stable.

Heartrending Cries.

Suddenly there was a terrific report which seemed to shake the earth and lifted the roof from the factory building.

In some miraculous way the laborers escaped injury. As soon as the cloud of dust had cleared away, the cries and shouts of the residents of the vicinity told the story that several had been injured.

A fire alarm was rung out and the police of the Sixth precinct were soon upon the scene.

In Death's Embrace.

It was found that two children, who were playing in the vicinity, were the most seriously injured. They were John Fluhr, 6 years, of 38 Montrose avenue, whose skull was fractured by the flying debris, and Peter Wenz, 4 years old, of the same address, who had his skull fractured, his left leg and forearm broken, with several contusions of the body.

These were taken to the St. Catharine's hospital, where the Fluhr boy died. The other lies in a critical condition with but little chance of recovery.

Explosion a Mystery.

The others injured were John Schoen, 14 years old, of 35 Johnson avenue, cut about face, and Annie Weiss, 30 years, of the same address, severe laceration of the scalp. These were attended by an ambulance surgeon at their home and not removed. The other injured and shocked persons went to their homes and their names were not learned.

The residence of Jacob Schoen, a two-story structure at 35 Johnson avenue, was the most badly damaged.

The origin of the explosion is a mystery. The building had been vacant since April.

WEAVERS' STRIKE SETTLED.

To Hold a Mass Meeting To Form a Union.

Clinton, Mass., Feb. 27.—Most of the weavers at the Lancaster Gingham mills who went out on strike yesterday morning and who voted last evening to return to work were at their looms as usual this morning. About 200 looms are now running.

A mass-meeting of the weavers will be held Saturday evening when a weavers' union will be formed.

Everything is quiet about the mills and the business men of the town are breathing more easily.

Butter and Cheese Men's Convention.

Rockford, Ill., Feb. 27.—The third annual convention of the National Butter and Cheese makers opened yesterday and will continue three days. The morning was devoted to the reception of reports of dairy interests from all over the country. The formal programme was opened in Central hall late in the afternoon. The exhibit of machinery is in the armory of Companies H and K, national guard, and is large and varied. Secretary Burridge says the meeting will be the best in the history of the association.

Their Difficulties Settled.

New London, Conn., Feb. 27.—The announcement is made that an agreement has been made between granite cutters and bosses at Niantic, Millstone and Waterford, whereby differences as to wages have been amicably settled for a year to come. A scale has been agreed upon by which a reduction of 3 per cent. is made in wages. It is calculated that the men can average 29½ cents per hour. The agreement only affects the workmen at the quarries named.

Factories Burned.

Warren, Pa., Feb. 27.—Yesterday fire completely destroyed Hood, Gale & Co.'s veneering works, two of Warren's ham Table works, two of Warren's leading manufactories. They furnished employment for 150 hands. The total loss will be over $100,000, with $75,000 insurance, and they will probably be rebuilt.

Great Loss of Saw Logs.

Huntington, W. Va., Feb. 27.—The "boom" in the Guyandotte river let go last evening, caused by an immense gorge of ice breaking away three miles up that stream. About 40,000 saw logs and a large number of cross-ties were swept away into the Ohio river, and the loss will reach into the thousands.

HERE'S JUDGE DE WITT!

One of the Ablest Lawyers in the South Advocates Paine's Celery Compound.

Judge William Henry DeWitt is one of the most prominent lawyers and judges in East Tennessee. He is a leading member of the Southern Methodist Church in Chattanooga. In legal business and social circles he stands high, and his statements, says the Chattanooga Press, are regarded of special weight because of his venerable character, he being now 67 years old.

He has held several prominent position in a legislative and judicial capacity having served as a member of the Southern Congress at Richmond during the war, and since that time as judge of the Chancery Court, one of the highest offices in judicial practice next to the Supreme Court.

He was admitted to the bar in 1850. In 1855 he was elected to the State Legislature, but declined a re-election.

After his removal to East Tennessee he was appointed special chancelor by Gov. Taylor, and filled the office for two years. He has successfully practiced before the Supreme Court of the United States for years.

In recent years, owing to the heavy work he has performed, he has been subject to nervousness, and his attention has been called at various times, both by friends and physicians, to the need of fortifying himself against physical collapse. His attention was called to Paine's celery compound as a vitalizing force. He sought and obtained this valuable aid, and to friends he recommended the use of the remedy for shatted nerves.

Overhearing his conversation, a friend asked him to write down his experience for the use of others so afflicted. In response he wrote as follows:

"Dear Sir—In obedience to your request, I state some of my personal knowledge of the value of Paine's celery compound as a medicinal remedy for certain afflictions and diseases, as follows, viz.:

"Judging from my own experience, it is a first-class remedy to restore the nervous system when broken down or impaired from overwork of mind or body, revivifying the energies. It strengthens the digestive powers and cures costiveness; truly it is a great nerve tonic, a good alterative, a splendid diuretic. It is good for the kidneys and the blood, renews vitality and restores strength. It surpasses anything I have used as a health renewer, a strength giver and system regulator. It quiets weak nerves, gives better rest, increases both appetite and digestion, and brings back lost power of balmy sleep, nature's sweet restorer.

Yours truly,
William Henry DeWitt.

BEAUTY IS POWER.

Perfection of Form, Feature, and Mind Render Women All-powerful.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Yet blended with those perfections must be perfect health. Women are to-day stronger in their character, better in their nature, truer in their love, warmer in their affections, than they ever were.

But most women do not know themselves; and often when their influence is doing the most good, break down. They drift gradually and unconsciously into that tempestuous sea of woman's diseases.

Then they should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restores natural cheerfulness, destroys despondency, cures leucorrhœa, — the great forerunner of serious womb trouble, — relieves backache, strengthens the muscles of the womb, and restores it to its normal condition, regulates menstruations, removes inflammation, ulceration, and tumors of the womb, etc.

It is a remedy of a woman for women. Millions of women owe the health they enjoy, and the influence they exert, to Mrs. Pinkham; and the success of her Vegetable Compound has never been equalled in the field of medicine for the relief and cure of all kinds of female complaints. So say the druggists.

Here is another one of thousands who speaks that others may know the truth:—

"For five years I suffered with falling of the womb, and all the dreadful aches and pains that accompany the disease. I tried several doctors and different medicines, until I lost all faith in everything. I had not tried your Compound. I watched your advertisements from day to day, and each day became more hopeful. At last I resolved to try it. I have taken seven bottles, and have gained forty pounds. My pains have all left me, and I am a well woman. I do all my own work, and can walk two miles without feeling tired. Your Compound has been worth its weight in gold to me. I cannot praise it enough." MATILDA EHNAM, Columbia, Lancaster Co., Pa.

ELBE'S INVESTIGATION

Testimony Taken Before the Coroner's Jury.

The Pilot of the Elbe Said That He Showed a Warning Light—He Burned Paper on the Boat in Order To Attract Attention of the Colliding Vessel—Batteries Frozen.

London, Feb. 27.—In the coroner's inquest yesterday in the Elbe collision, which cost nearly 400 lives, both the captain and the chief engineer of the Crathie deposed that their vessel's telegraph was frozen at the time of the collision. Orders were given to the lookout man, who shouted them to the engine room.

The engineer admitted that he had not looked to see whether the telegraph was all right when the vessel sailed from Rotterdam.

Capt. Gordon testified that when the wreckage was cleared away from the Crathie's bows the ship was turned around to go after the Elbe. This was about three-quarters of an hour after the collision, but the Elbe had steamed away.

Sixteen Miles an Hour.

The English pilot, Mr. Greenham, said that he burned paper in the boat in order to attract the attention of the colliding vessel, and expressed belief that if the Crathie had kept a good lookout it would have been possible for them to have seen it burning.

He said that the speed of the Elbe at the time of the collision was sixteen miles an hour, and she would consequently go some distance before she ran her way off after her engines were stopped. The steamer he had seen stopped at the time of the collision, but until after daybreak it was impossible for those on board to see a lifeboat without a light.

He also testified that after the crash he saw attempts made to close the watertight doors of the Elbe. When he got to the deck he saw that the Elbe had lost her port rockets, but her blue lights burned and her siren was blowing.

No Confusion.

Captain von Goessel was on the bridge until the last. The captain ordered the boats got out, but the ropes were frozen and had to be chopped away. The orders given by the captain were obeyed and there was no confusion. When Greenham got into the boat he saw a green light and a white stern light, which he believed to be the lights of the colliding vessel. These lights disappeared to the southward.

Miss Boecker, the only woman saved, was called to the witness stand, and confirmed her previous statements. She was unable to say whether the Elbe's engines had stopped when she went on deck.

No Verdict Reached.

It was decided to limit the inquiry to events occurring subsequent to the collision. No investigations will be made into the cause of the disaster in view of the proceedings in that direction which are pending in Rotterdam.

On the conclusion of yesterday's testimony, the coroner intimated that the inquest would be adjourned until March 26.

The solicitor for the captain of the Crathie objected to this proposal, and asked that the jury render a verdict. It would be cruel, he said, to let the matter hang fire over the captain's head for a month.

The coroner opposed the rendering of a verdict at the present time, and the inquest was adjourned.

Killed in an Explosion.

Philadelphia, Feb. 27.—By the explosion of a cylinder charged with carbonic acid gas in the drug laboratory of Smith, Kline & French company yesterday, Frank Robinson, aged 21 years, of Camden, N. J., was killed outright and Frank Duffy, aged 33 years, of this city, was fatally injured. The men were engaged in manufacturing acid at the time of the accident. The cause of the explosion is not known.

General Carr's Funeral.

Troy, N. Y., Feb. 27.—Secretary of War Lamont has, through Adjutant-General Ruggles, directed Major Isaac Arnold, commander of Watervliet arsenal to have the war department represented at the funeral of Major-General Joseph B. Carr, which will take place to-day in this city. Major Arnold will himself attend accompanied by Captains Hobbs and Blount and Lieutenant Pierce.

American Girl in London.

London, Feb. 27.—The marriage of Miss Annabel Winslow, daughter of Mr. George Scott Winslow, of Boston, Mass., and Mr. J. J. Cairns, of Stanneer, Drogheda, Ireland, took place at St. Mark's church yesterday. There were three hundred wedding presents, among them being gifts from the Duke and Duchess of Manchester, the Countesses of Fingall and Huntingdon.

How They Do It in Maine.

Belfast, Me., Feb. 27.—Constable McGee, of Unity, tried for corruption in office by inducing tramps to come within his town by which he obtained large fees for their arrest was yesterday held in $500 to the supreme court. Other constables similarly implicated are under arrest. These criminal procedures are novel in Maine and create much interest.

They Have the Grip.

London, Feb. 27.—Lord Rosebery, who has been suffering from influenza, is improving. His insomnia has lessened. The Hon. A. J. Balfour, the conservative leader, who has also been a victim of the influenza, is better and is able to leave his room.

They Know Him Not.

San Francisco, Feb. 27.—Joseph Dale, who registered from Port Huron, Mich., Feb. 15, at the American Exchange hotel, committed suicide with poison in his room last night. Nothing is known here about him.

Made Her Supervisor.

Boston, Feb. 27.—The school last evening elected Miss Sarah Lernod, for seven years past superintendent of the primary department of the Minneapolis public schools, as a supervisor of the Boston schools.

FLOWERS FOR HIS ANNA.

Comment on the Approaching Matrimonial Event.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 27.—It is said that everything in the world that is worth a thought, becomes food for controversy sooner or later. No better illustration of this can be given than the approaching marriage of Miss Anna Gould to Count de Castellane, a French young nobleman, with a comparatively empty title, but not an empty head, as can be seen by his persistency to win not alone Miss Gould's heart, but her millions, not alone her millions, but, demands that she renounce her Christian faith for the belief of the pope. This must be very displeasing to Miss Helen Gould, who still has the love of the American people, who devotes her time and money to the interest of the poor, but who would not renounce her Christian religion for a hollow mockery. It is but natural, that in sight of this great matrimonial event, with all its grandeur and brilliancy, with all its pompt and show, that we can see two pictures of human life. As the great dailies reach the homes of the people who have made the Gould millions, what do they say?

But, "its none of the publics' business." The people live in squalid dens where there can be no health, no hope, nothing but discontent in their own lot, and futile discontent at the wealth which they see possessed by others. Every one in this great American nation seem to like the name of "royalty" with its titles and for weeks the people have thought the Count de Castellane "an awful amusing chapple," but, no one ever associated the idea with work. Count Castellane has nothing much to do, his hardest work for many days has been carrying the box of flowers to his Anna, and the leader at a cotillion, after which he handles a very active knife and fork.

American girls no longer desire to marry American husbands, but crave for royal empty heads and titles, to reside in European palaces, where they can bask in the atmosphere of royalty and squander the plunder they collected from the American dupes; who will deny that they long for a monarchy here, of which they will be the nobles? But, "we are all born equal," and what are we going to do about it?

SKIPPED FOR PARTS UNKNOWN.

Thirty Employes Want Three Weeks Back Pay.

Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 27.—Benjamin Cohen, a manufacturing tailor, after borrowing all the money possible and mortgaging everything in his shop has skipped to parts unknown, leaving his thirty employes three weeks behind in wages and other bills said to amount to $5,000. John Steurmer who owns the shop became suspicious on Saturday and in the evening called at Cohen's home for rent money. Cohen met him at the door with tears in his eyes and said his poor wife was awful sick. At this Mrs. Cohen, who was in another room began groaning loudly and the landlord left without pressing his claim. All day Sunday Cohen and his wife were busy packing their goods and in the morning nothing could be found of them. A search is being made at Syracuse where Cohen's father resides.

Nabbed by the Police.

Chicago, Feb. 27.—The police authorities yesterday received information from Council Bluffs, Ia., to look out for a valise consigned to Mark Davis, a South Water street saloon-keeper and supposed to contain $500 worth of postage stamps, part of the proceeds of the robbery of the First National bank of Griswold county, Ia. Detectives went with the express messenger, and after the delivery of the valise to Davis, they arrested the latter and his bartender, John Whimartin. On opening the valise $600 worth of stamps were found.

France Sends War Ships.

Washington, Feb. 27.—It is stated that the presence of three French ships of war in the harbors of San Domingo has been made the subject of diplomatic representations on the part of the United States at the request of the Dominican government. France has long had claims against San Domingo which seemed incapable of settlement by ordinary diplomatic methods, and three vessels have been assembled in the vicinity as an incentive to speedy action.

Cannot Keep Out of Jail.

Saratoga, N. Y., Feb. 27.—Judge Houghton, in the court of sessions yesterday, sentenced Burtis Wells, the young desperado and horse thief on two indictments, to an aggregate of thirteen years in Dannemora prison. Wells has served prior sentences in that prison and at the Albany penitentiary. He escaped from the latter place last July, came home and stole a horse which he drove to Bridgeport, Conn., where he was recaptured.

Before England's Queen.

London, Feb. 27.—The Japanese minister will present his credentials at Windsor this afternoon. He will be introduced to the queen by the Earl of Kimberly, foreign secretary. Lord Kimberly next week will accompany to Windsor the Chinese minister, who will take handsome presents to the queen from the ex-empress of China in return for those sent by her majesty on the occasion of the ex-empress' birthday.

With His Bride to China.

Evansville, Ind., Feb. 27.—Charles Denby, jr., secretary of legation for the United States at Pekin, China, has arrived here and will be married March 19 to Miss Martha Orr, daughter of James L. Orr, who is the wealthiest man in this city. Mr. Denby will return to China with his bride immediately after his marriage.

He Was Unemployed.

Buffalo, Feb. 27.—Randolph Hagenbush, a cabinet maker, living with his wife at 100 Puener avenue, committed suicide yesterday by hanging. He left a letter in which he stated that he could not find work because he was too old. His wife says he had been acting strangely for several days and thinks he was demented.

Extradition Warrant Granted.

Albany, Feb. 27.—Captain Martin Short of the Brooklyn police obtained from Governor Morton yesterday a warrant of extradition for John Bohemann, under arrest in Hoboken for the murder of the two boys in the Williamsburgh hotel.

LABOR IS REPRESENTED

Board of Arbitration To Be Appointed by Congress.

The Board To Consist of Three Men Who Will Decide All Trouble Between Railroads Engaged in Interstate Commerce and Their Employes—Doings in the Senate.

Washington, Feb. 27.—Labor had its innings in the house yesterday with the result that an arbitration bill, recommended by the leaders of all of the railway labor organizations in the country, by Carroll D. Wright, the commissioner of labor; and drawn in part by Attorney-General Olney, was sent to the senate for its action. The bill was reported from the committee on labor by Mr. Erdman (dem., Pa.) who explained its provision in a brief statement to the house and answered questions that were put to him by various members with regard to its practical operations.

Must Be Incorporated.

The bill provides for the appointment of a board of arbitration of three persons to decide all controversies between common carriers engaged in inter-state commerce and their employes, which cannot be adjusted by mutual arrangement, and makes the award of the board enforceable in the United States courts, acting as courts of equity. It was stated by Mr. Erdman that in order to make the award effective, the various labor organizations interested had agreed to become incorporated concerns, and as such subject to liability for damages for failure to carry out the terms of the award. The bill was advocated by Mr. Hepburn (rep., Ia.) and various members of the committee on labor, and was opposed by Mr. Bartlett (dem., N. Y.) and Mr. Vanvoorhis (rep., N. Y.) The opposition, however, was ineffective, and after being slightly amended in committee of the whole, the bill was reported to the house with favorable recommendation and passed without a division. The bill was also passed authorizing the bureau of labor to issue bi-monthly bulletins, in editions of 10,000 each, upon subjects investigated by the bureau.

In the Senate.

The progress made by the senate yesterday in connection with the sundry civil appropriation bill was not very appreciable, as only two of the amendments reported from the committee on appropriations were disposed of. These were, to be sure, of the kind that were sure to be disputed. The first of them was on the subject of the protection of public lands from timber depredations.

The house had appropriated $90,000 for that purpose; the appropriations committee had recommended a reduction to $60,000; and Mr. Berry (dem., Ark.) had proposed an amendment to make the figure $120,000. The discussion of that question occupied nearly two hours, and the question was finally decided in favor of the committee—39 to 25.

Filibustering Continues.

The next amendment occupied practically the rest of the day's session and was decided only at the moment of taking a recess. This was the proposition to pay to the sugar producers of the United States the full bounty up to August, 1894, when the new tariff bill went into effect—those who had not yet received it—$258,289, and eight-tenths of a cent per pound bounty on all sugars above 80 per cent. polariscope test, produced up to June 30, 1895. Various side issues were raised, a proposition by Mr. McLaurin (dem., Miss.), who was opposed to the bounty, to pay it, if paid at all, in silver coin; one by Mr. Wolcott (rep., Col.) to purchase four millions ounces of silver per month for eight months and to coin it from time to time; one by Mr. Mitchell (rep., Ore.) to pay a bounty of five cents a pound on wool grown in the United States; and one by Mr. Hoar (rep., Mass.) to make an exception against the sugar cane producers of Louisiana on the ground that their senators, by voting for the tariff act of 1894, rejected and repudiated the sugar bounty. All these side issues were either ruled out as not in order, or were voted down.

Bank Burglar Captured.

Council Bluffs, Ia., Feb. 27.—Deputy Sheriff O'Brien, who was shot by the Griswold bank burglars, is very low and slight hopes are entertained of his recovery. The authorities have identified Smith, the wounded robber captured. He is Cad Maguire, of Omaha. Riley, the robber who shot O'Brien and then escaped, is the son of O'Connor, of Omaha, his right name being Charley O'Connor. The authorities are hot on O'Connor's trail and expect to capture him before many days.

A Terrible Accident.

Chillicothe, O., Feb. 27.—News has just reached here that the saw mill of Jacob Woltz, near South Ferry, was blown up and Woltz and his son William and a man named Curtis, were killed or fatally wounded. Curtis had his bowels blown out and Jacob's head was nearly severed from his body. William was found forty feet from the mill, with an arm and a leg missing. The engine was found 126 yards away, standing on end. The boiler was blown seventy-five yards.

Did He Kill Her?

Pottsville, Pa., Feb. 27.—Edmund Welch was yesterday brought to the county jail from Mahony Plains charged with the murder of his wife at that place on Saturday night last. The couple had been drinking during the evening. Welch denies all knowledge of the manner in which his wife met her death and claims to have found her dead body at the foot of the stairs when he arose Sunday morning.

His Body Found.

London, Ont., Feb. 27.—The body of Robert Huson, terribly mangled, was found on the Canadian Pacific railway tracks last night. He belonged to Jarvis and was to have been married next month. Suspicions of foul play are entertained.

Bond Against the Saloon.

Indianapolis, Feb. 27.—The Nicholson bill which deals a terrific blow to the saloons of Indiana, passed the legislature yesterday by a vote of 75 to 20.

THE DAILY PRESS.

E. L. FORCE, Publisher and Proprietor.
WALTER IRVING CLARKE, Managing Editor.

TOWN AND HOME FAVORITE.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., FEB. 27, 1895

"Between Scylla and Charybdis", a good story like all of The Press copyrighted serials, is concluded on Page 8 of this issue.

A new serial, a pioneer sketch by Hamlin Garland, will be published in The Daily Press tomorrow and Friday, under the title "The Wapsypinicon Tiger". It is a bit of thrilling realism, cleverly told. It will be succeeded by "The Thirteenth Column", a splendid story by Barry Pain.

The time to agitate for no-license is before as well as after election. Those who elect a Republican Council with the full knowledge that it is a license Council have no right to lash that Council for voting for license. If the people of Plainfield want their representatives to stand on a certain platform they must establish that platform at the primaries and convention, and bind their nominees to it. Plainfield has tried the experiment of running "dry" on this side of the brook while all is mellow on the other, and when the Plainfield people are really anxious to have the local bars closed they'll vote that way again.

Another gross injustice was done to the Plainfield Common Council by the discarded Republican organ last night. In two parts of the paper it was stated that the Council had unceremoniously filed the anti-license protest of the W. C. T. U., and editorially the Council was chastised by the self-appointed dictator for not heeding the Union's appeal.

Being a newspaper, and Plainfield's truest newspaper, The Daily Press told last night that the Union's communication was never presented to the Council. As a fact, no member of the Council received a copy of the petition, nor did the City Clerk receive it. None of them had any knowledge of the document till they read it in the papers last night. Yet it suits the ex-city-clerk to censure the Council for not considering a letter it never received. It is not a new departure in his system of personal abuse.

FEAR AS A CAUSE OF DEATH.

The Imagination a Potent Factor In Acquiring a Fatal Disease.

"Of the whole number of persons supposed to die of disease," said a prominent physician the other day, "I should say that at least 50 per cent are really carried away by fear. Were it not for this element mortality would be far less than it is."

In support of his statement he cited various cases where the element of fear had entered largely in as a potent factor to persuade people that their time had come. Presentiments, prophecies, premonitions and general nervousness all played their part. Some years ago four criminals, condemned in Russia to die, were taken to a house and shown several beds, in which, they were told, a number of cholera patients had died. In fact, the beds were new, never having been slept in. The criminals were informed that they would be set at liberty if they would undergo the ordeal of sleeping several nights in the beds. From the prisoners' point of view it was a possible though desperate chance of escape. They one and all decided to take the chances. At the end of the time prescribed two were uninjured and went free, but the others developed all the symptoms and died of Asiatic cholera.

Two physicians determined to take advantage of the impressionable mind of a female patient and prove a theory for the benefit of science. The lady had complained of an itching on her back. She was told that a blister would be applied. Instead a common postage stamp was applied, and, so runs the chronicle, performed all the offices of the plaster which was not there.

A college professor was once the subject of a practical joke at the hands of the students. They met him one after another, and each successively inquired after his health, saying that he looked ill. He took to his bed, a physician was called, and for days the professor imagined he was ill.—New York World.

IMMORALITY IN PLAINFIELD

REV. DR. LEWIS SAYS IT'S GETTING WORSE.

Police Officials Say Different—Interesting Information at the Meeting of the Plainfield Branch Alliance.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Plainfield Branch Alliance in All Souls Church yesterday afternoon the discussion of the "Criminal Classes" developed interesting facts in connection with the morality of Plainfield.

The meeting was called to order by Mrs. Edwin W. Conklin, vice president.

H. P. Reynolds opened the discussion with a paper on "The criminal classes; what are they and how should they be dealt". Mr. Reynolds spoke substantially as follows:

One subject there is on which most people are quite willing to confess ignorance and that is the life within prison walls—the world of the outcast and convict. Yet the modern spirit of inquiry is penetrating these barriers. A study of our modern attempts to deal with the law breakers which should enumerate the various methods in use and the experiments tried would occupy much time, but of these methods, two, at least, possess great usefulness and greater promise. First, as to the reformatory idea: Is it not strange with the reformatory principle imbedded in every great religious system that it should have been left to this century to try the reformatory experiment? We see reformatory schools increasing in our own country, while reformatory methods are being introduded into every grade of penal institutions in Engalnd. In accord with universal experience youth is the period when reform is most possible. Hence commitments to reformatories have largely been restricted below the age of 18. Faith in the possibility of reform is taking wider scope in the founding of such great establishments as those at Elmira, N. Y., Concord, Mass., and Huntington, Penn. Mr. Brockway's big school at Elmira has been turned inside down; its fame is literally "World" wide, but what has it proved. Barring some exceptions it has proved that even such appaling products of civilization as the American tough can be made a man of, and not a bad sort of a man. Many young men have gone there born and bred to emnity with society; their only school the slums only trade theft, only amusement drunkeness. They have come forth reading and writing, sober and healthy.

Reformed, you ask? Out of every 100 of these graduates, 80 and odd are never again committed for criminal offenses, while a somewhat less proportion are known to become self-supporting and respectable. Idleness, i. e., lack of a habit of industry is the source of more criminality than drink—plus ignorance. Of existing reformatories no two are alike in methods, although all rest upon a common basis. For example, we find at Elmira that Father Stick has played an important part. At Concord corporal punishment is unknown.

Some 25 miles southeasterly from Plainfield at Jamesburg is located the New Jersey State Reform School for Juvenile Delinquents. Here the boys are trained in some practical trade or occupation; worked upon the farm and instructed in the usual English branches. Moral and religious training are prominent features. The trustees have power to grant absolute discharge of such boys as merit freedom. In cases of those whose reformation is incomplete after three years of confinement the trustees may grant a parole to continue in force during the period of minority or good behavior. While paroled the boy may be apprenticed or allowed to return to his own home on his own recognizance, always subject to rearrest for misconduct. Thus he is aroused to a sense of responsibility and manliness. All reformatory work involves a trial of the inderminate sentence and of probation and parole laws.

A few conclusions are now generally accepted with regard to penal law. First, that fear of punishment does not greatly serve to prevent crime; second, society for its own protection must put the criminal under restraint for his own good, and the good of society, and every effort should be made for his reformation.

There is great need for a prison on the lines of the Massachusetts or Elmira reformatory in New Jersey. Six years ago a commission of five capable gentlemen was appointed by Gov. Abbett to investigate and report on the advisability of establishing a reformatory prison. This commission in April, 1890, presented a report that was strong, concise and practical. The commission took occasion to indicate an appropriate location for the new prison of interest to us as dwellers of Union County—at Rahway. If the prison was wanted then the want has grown with every year. But we have not the beginning of a reformatory system. More than anything else is this the hope and aim of the S. C. A. A., nor will the Association cease its labors till this aim is attained.

A paper on "Is Drunkenness Prevalent?" was read by Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, which answered the question in the affirmative.

G. E. Marx, secretary of the Boys Club, talked on the treatment of juvenile offenders. "Is Crime on the Increase," was discussed by Miss Erskine, who said that she had talked with Chief Grant and Judge Coddington, both of whom told her that they had encountered less vice in the past two years than ever before.

An informal discussion followed, during which Dr. Lewis made the interesting announcement that immorality had been constantly increasing in the last five years in Plainfield, the prevalence of which was not due to the lack of vigilance of officials, but to the mother and housewife who displayed in many cases great indifference as to the associations their children and servants kept.

My neighbor's jackass made more noise
Than all the hens in my back lot,
The jackass' bray was nothing worth,
But each day found eggs in my pot.
To tell the town of his new store
My neighbor scattered posters wide,
I used The Press—a page or more;
My store was filled; my neighbor—died.

O. W. O. Hardman, sheriff of Tyler Co., W. Va., appreciates a good thing and does not hesitate to say so. He was almost prostrated with a cold when he procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He says: "It gave me prompt relief. I find it to be an invaluable remedy for coughs and colds." For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

Personal Pleasantries in Congress.

(From The New York Sun.)

Mr. Bartlett (Dem., N. Y.) got the floor for a personal statement regarding a remark made by Mr. Dunn (Dem., N. J.) in the discussion of the Arbitration bill, to the effect that if the constituents of the gentleman from New York (Mr. Bartlett) knew his sentiments they would kick him into the gutter. With a full knowledge of his sentiments and of his services in this Congress, said Mr. Bartlett, his constituents re-elected him to the Fifty-fourth Congress. With the same knowledge of his sentiments and services, said Mr. Bartlett, the gentleman's constituents had kicked him into the gutter, or into oblivion.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt, of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave., Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

THE MODEL SOCIABLE.

Christian Endeavorers Have a Pleasant and Profitable Time.

When it was known among the Christian Endeavorers that there was to be a model sociable in the Trinity Reformed Church last evening everyone wanted to be present, and a very large number of them were.

Westfield, Rahway, Willow Grove, Dunellen, Cranford, and all the Plainfield societies were represented.

The social features of Christian Endeavor work is perplexing to most of the societies and just how to hold a sociable with the best possible results is no easy task.

E. E. Anthony of the Trinity Society has charge of the social work through the county and at his suggestion the first model sociable was held. Members from societies all through the county were present.

During the day a number of the young women gathered at the church and with artistic hands made a scene of rare beauty.

Wm. Milliken of Dunellen was the only Endeavorer to be found not engaged—in work, and he very willingly gave his time and experience in assisting the young women.

The decorations were pink, and green, and bunting with these colors encircled the room and neatly entwined the several pillars in the room. The presence of several banquet lamps added much to the beauty of the scene.

The chief feature, of course, was sociability, and everyone present was doubly impressed with this fact. It was a happy departure from the old style, when a person securing a seat would hold it the rest of the evening.

The young people moved and chatted freely with those whom it was made possible they should know through the use of a card prepared by Wm. Milliken and Wm. Crawford, with the bearer's name on and which was attached to the lapel of the coat.

Mr. Anthony arrested the attention of the large audience, and introduced Miss Bessie Blair who rendered a beautiful vocal solo, "Who is Sylva?"

The merry company then without any difficulty joined in social convereation. When Mr. Anthony thought that they had talked enough, they were called to order, and Mr. Beekman gave a pleasing piano solo which was finely executed.

After another intermission the audience enjoyed a delightful alto solo by Miss Nancy Randolph. Then the least important feature of the event, as so stated, was indulged in. The committees then served cocoa and wafers which were all to be desired.

The last number on the programme was a vocal solo by Miss Fanny Mattison, accompanied by Miss Nettie Mattison on the piano and Miss Florence Bates, with the violin. The rendition was enjoyed to the fullest extent. Miss Bates is a pupil of Carl Feininger, and her work is of high merit. Mr. Anthony then asked for interchange of ideas on the social question, but none were able to offer a more novel plan than that presented, and all were highly pleased with the success of this model sociable.

The committees acting under the direction of E. E. Anthony were as follows:

Social—Miss Fanny Mattison, Miss Jennie Buidk, Miss Ella Gardner, Miss Jennie Smith, Mrs. Clarence Mundy.

Flower and Decorating—Miss May Sheppard, Miss Carrie Mehl, Miss Viola Huff, Miss Grace Berg, Miss Lizzie Dunlap.

Reception—Miss Cora Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Woodruff, Miss Garretta Wikoff and Elmer Garretson.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Mrs. E. D. Moffett has returned home after spending a week with her daughter, Mrs. W. H. Toms, Trenton.

Miss Stone of North avenue was summoned today to her home in Annandale on account of the dangerous illness of her sister Lizzie.

—Bath Beach lost its entire business district of 18 buildings by fire this morning.

—The removal of the postoffice to the Babcock Building will probably be delayed until next week owing to the death of Postmaster Hetfield's father.

—A horse of Hoff's stage line fell on the icy street in front of Thorn's block on Somerset street this morning. It took the combined effort of the driver and of Messrs. Hoff, Gratton, Coddington, McCarthy, Randolph and several unknown persons to get him on his feet again.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

Mrs. Lynn Linton, the novelist and essayist, who is one of the esteemed Serial Contributors of The Daily Press, and author of the charming story concluded in this issue, is the wife of William James Linton, the wood engraver. After a stirring, early life, in which Chartism art and poetry were mixed, Mr. Linton came to this country in 1867 and settled in New Haven, Conn. He is a charming old man, with very white hair and beard and a ruddy face. Dickens once recommended Mrs. Linton as a person capable of any sort of work to which she was put. She is a strong-minded woman who is reactionary in her views as to her own sex. She does not believe in the new woman. She would keep women out of the open competition which the modern emancipated strive after. "What Zilah is in the tents of Kedar", says she. "Women are everywhere, the world over. In the life of even the most undesirable and belated Cinderella of the village is a moment of exultation when she carries in brown little hands that gift for which more than one Collie Clout would willingly pay the prince". This is a mild specimen of Mrs. Lynn Linton's views. William James Linton's greatest delight is to write a set of poems, set up the type himself, print, bind and finish off the volume with his own hands, and send off copies to his friends on birthdays and such occasions.

Street-Lighting Improvements.

The electric lamp in front of 59 Westervelt avenue, whose light in the Summer time is hidden by the dense verdure of trees, is likely to be turned so as to shine over the roadway instead of the sidewalk.

The lamps in the Netherwood district are to be rearranged so as to be more evenly distributed over the territory. Now many of them are bunched, while some portions of the Heights are neglected. More light is to be given to far Watchung avenue, which in spots would be a very dark street were it not for the private lights of the large grounds.

We have no doubt of their success here.

On March 6 we shall begin publication of a detective story by Nym Crinkle, entitled

"EIGHT MINUTES TO THREE".

A. C. Wheeler, who uses this pseudonym, is one of the best known journalists in the United States. He has been for many years the dramatic critic of the New York World, and is today one of the most brilliant writers on the American press. It is to his inimitable sketches o New York life that the Sunday World owes a considerable part of its popularity. Mr. Wheeler has written many successful stories, of which the best known is perhaps "The Great Laran Rebellion".

"Eight Minutes of Three" is in every way a remarkable piece of fiction, and deserves to rank with some of the weird tales of Poe. It will run five days, and will be followed by a short story of New England life by Mary E. Wilkins.

This story, like all the Daily Press serials, is brand-new, and copyrighted to Daily Press use.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. TODAY IN HISTORY.

Short Stories of Heroism from Real Life.

Hot Shot For a Privateer.

On the 27th of February, 1863, Captain Worden, the hero of the Monitor fight, destroyed a dangerous Confederate privateer in Ogeechee river. The swift blockade runner Nashville, having been hemmed in by the Union fleet, was transformed into a privateer and lay in the river above Fort McAllister. The bed of the river was lined with torpedoes to prevent Union vessels running up to destroy the Nashville before she could get to sea, where, her owners hoped, she would prove another Alabama. Scouts reported that she had dropped down near the fort, awaiting a chance to slip out. Worden promptly steamed up in the Montauk to verify the report, and seeing the Nashville aground above the fort went ahead in defiance of the torpedoes and the guns of the fort. When within 1,200 yards of the privateer, he opened with shells and continued to bombard until she burst into flames and blew up. Turning back, he ran the Montauk through a gantlet of fire, both shot and shell, from the fort and batteries opposite. The iron sides of the Montauk turned the balls like water, but in contact with infernal machines no vessel is invulnerable. Near the mouth of the river she ran upon a submarine torpedo, which tore a chunk out of her hull, and she grounded, fortunately within range of companion vessels which had stood at safe distance to witness Worden's gallant exploit. GEORGE L. KILMER.

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. SLOWLY STARVING.

Surrounded by Plenty, but Dying for Food.

An Every-day Occurrence.—Our Friends Perishing Before Our Eyes.

A terrible experience for any one to go through, that of seeing some beloved friend actually wasting away before our eyes, unable to derive sufficient nourishment from their food to sustain life.

Medicine naturally becomes of little avail, and the various organs of the body, debilitated from a lack of nourishment, take on themselves the disease that was originally the cause of the "breakdown," and help hasten the end.

Such cases, though too prevalent, are happily becoming less frequent. The prominent physicians of to-day do things differently from those of twenty years ago. They first put the patient in a condition to stand the "siege," then enrich his blood, create for him new strength, and "build him up" generally. The patient is then in a condition to derive benefit from his medicine.

This is done by the use of Bovinine, the original raw food. It is an extract that contains the greatest amount of the life-sustaining and tissue-building properties of lean, raw meat, concentrated in the least possible bulk.

The advantage of this is obvious. A patient already greatly weakened by disease, needs to husband every particle of strength. A few drops of Bovinine will impart as much nourishment to the body as would be derived by a well person from an ordinary meal; and, in getting this nourishment, the stomach has been forced to do the least possible amount of work.

Bovinine, continued throughout an illness, greatly hastens recovery. Taken at the beginning of a wasting disease, it diverts the cause of the trouble by toning up the various organs, and getting them in a normal condition.

Bovinine is indorsed by 25,000 doctors. Its action is always beneficial, as a single trial will convince the most sceptical.

LILI'S DISCRETION.

SHE MIGHT HAVE HAD WEALTH IF SHE HAD SUBMITTED EARLIER.

The Ex-Queen's Part in the Last Revolution. Hawaii Doing Business for Itself. It Was All Ready to Be Annexed to the United States but Cleveland Said "No."

When the monarchy was overthrown in Hawaii two years ago the government which succeeded it, then as now recognized by foreign powers, sought annexation to the United States. The agreement drawn up for that purpose treated with great consideration the deposed queen, making a most liberal pecuniary provision for her.

Mr. Cleveland, however, withdrew that treaty from the Senate, and sought instead to restore Liliuokalani to her throne. The attempt failed utterly; but while it was going on the queen, whose hopes had been raised by the interference, still further discredited herself by refusing to agree to pardon her enemies, preferring the privilege of beheading them.

Now, lately we have seen the royalists of Hawaii engaged in a conspiracy to destroy the republic and put the queen back in power. This project has failed as miserably as did our own plan directed to the same end; and the latest news concerning it is that the wretched queen has been arrested as an accomplice in the plot.

EX-QUEEN LILIUOKALANI.

What a contrast between the present condition of this hapless woman, under guard, and perhaps in jail, threatened possibly with the confiscation of her property, should the charge of conspiring against the government be proved against her, or at the least with banishment, and what she might have been. She might be living in luxury in her island home, free from the ambitions that have since distressed her. Was ever a dusky potentate so luckless in her self-constituted champion?

Her abdication is the best victory yet won by the Dole government, and puts an end to the power of this intriguing woman, who, it is now clearly shown, was at the bottom of all the royalist plots against the provisional government and the republic. That so proud and stubborn a woman as the ex-queen should have made this unconditional surrender shows that she was in desperate straits and only adopted this course to save her life.

In the safe of her Washington place residence were found documents in her own handwriting which establish a clear case of treason against her. Had her arrest been made two days earlier, as Marshal Hitchcock urged, the government would have secured important secret papers relating to the days of Kalakau's reign. In her house was found a regular arsenal of guns and dynamite bombs. All the bombs were provided with one-minute fuses and were prepared to throw among the crowds that should oppose the royalists. A portion of one of the cement-covered bombs was found on the ex-queen's private desk, and among her papers was evidence that she had devoted considerable thought to the dynamite feature of the conspiracy.

Of the fifty foreigners placed under arrest, 75 per cent. were English. In fact, the number of English leaders and sympathizers caused this revolt to be called the "English rebellion."

Her Hair Is Twenty Feet Long.

Aunty Nancy Garrison came to Chicago from Holly Springs, Miss. Aunt Nancy brought her hair with her, a statement which at first blush does not sound as though it involved any undue exertion on her part. But when Aunt Nancy binds her hair about her brow she takes up the burden of a day's work in cartage. It is kinky hair—aunty is a colored woman—and when let free it falls the five and one half feet of its owner's height and stretches away a like distance on the floor. There are eleven feet of hair as it drops from the big coil. Take hold of the end of the mass and pull it so that the kinksstraighten out and twenty feet of heavy strands are developed.

Mrs. Nancy Garrison was born in Tennessee somewhere about sixty years ago. In 1878, after she had moved into Mississippi, she had the yellow fever. At that time her hair was a foot long. It began to grow when she had recovered.—Chicago Daily Tribune.

METROPOLITAN NOTES.

Interesting Facts and Opinions Chronicled by the Daily Press of New York.

A well dressed, sharp eyed man entered the office of one of the largest jobbing houses in New York recently and said to the head of the firm, a man worth many millions:

"Mr. ——. I want to get a report on the credit of John Jones of Waukegan."

The merchant touched a button which summoned the chief bookkeeper.

"I want you," he said, "to allow Mr. —— to examine our account with John Jones of Waukegan since he began trading here."

The visitor went out with the bookkeeper, and for an hour thereafter was looking over the books. He made a written statement from them, showing when and under what conditions John Jones had opened his account, the number of times he had purchased goods, the dates of shipping and payment and such other details as would appear in the accounts of a mercantile house. Then he went back to the office of the head of the firm and asked some further questions about Mr. Jones, which the merchant, although very busy, promptly answered. Finally he saw the salesman who had waited on Jones and had a confidential talk with him, so that when he left the store he knew all that this great firm could tell about Jones and his financial standing.

Information of this sort is most difficult to obtain from any merchant and the books of this particular firm are especially hard to get at. In fact, with the exception of this one man, no one except members of the firm and the bookkeeper ever has access to them, not even the heads of departments. The explanation of this one outsider's privilege lies in the character of his business. He is engaged in protecting four of the leading jobbing firms of the United States, of which that referred to is one, from bad debts. He does this by examining their books. Each of these firms has about the same class of customers, although their business is not identical. He has a contract with each which allows him to examine its books at any time. Such examinations he always makes in person. When it is understood that there is hardly a merchant of any standing throughout the country who does not purchase from one of these four firms it will be seen that such a privilege enables the person who uses it intelligently to get a pretty thorough knowledge of the financial standing and responsibility of nearly everybody who comes to this market to buy goods.—N. Y. Sun.

To one enterprising man the storm that has blocked the railroads and kept the babies waiting for their regular supply of "one cow's" milk has proved a silver mine. And not only did he reap a rich pecuniary reward, but he brought to the memory of those who have been abroad recollections of odd customs in London, Paris and especially in South America.

It is not often that one sees a man walking through the streets of the city leading a cow by a rope, but the residents of the upper east side caught a glimpse of Herman Muller struggling through the deep snow and dragging behind him an unwilling 5 year old that looked and behaved as though it had never visited the metropolis before. Perhaps nobody would have noticed him had he not called in loud tones that penetrated to the innermost recesses of the topmost apartment:

"Milk! fresh milk! Milk fresh from the cow!"

The word milk in itself was enough to attract the attention of the mothers, for there had not been a drop in any household for three days. But when it was emphasized by "fresh from the cow" it caused a rush to the windows. Muller had provided himself with a folding stool, and, tying the cow to a lamppost, placed the stool by her side and then in a snowdrift, watched by many women from windows, he milked.

In Eighty-first street he found a crowd of mothers eager for milk and before he finished there even the "strippings" had been converted into money and he trudged home with his cow and more coin, he said, than he had made in a month before.—N. Y. Herald.

If Col. Waring has no other solace amid the perplexities of the street cleaning department, he is certain of the admiration of New York women. He is the hero of the town, as far as they are concerned, for he has paid particular attention to the shopping streets, and women are quick to appreciate any improvement in the condition of such thoroughfares. To business men who rise at a certain hour every morning and hurry to their offices, engrossed in reflections about the day's work the condition of the sidewalks and crossings is not a matter of great moment. If it is damp the business man pulls on a pair of overshoes, turns up the collar of his overcoat and runs mechanically after his car. Then he is immersed in the morning's paper until he reaches his office. But to the women the condition of their boots and skirts is of extraordinary moment and they apparently have an inherent horror of overshoes of any kind. Col. Waring's work in their behalf has made him stand first in their affections. The colonel, by the way, is already a well known figure about town. He is easily recognizable from his portraits, published in the newspapers, and he seems ubiquitous. He is in the business in earnest. There cannot be any mistake about that, for he hangs over the rear railing of a car, peers up the side streets, hurries from one inspector to another and is seen bowling about in his hansom at all hours of the day and night. It would be interesting to find out exactly how many miles he travels through the streets of New York in the course of a week, for he seems to be constantly moving.

Mr. Cleveland's Money.

The President of the United States always uses new money. He never gets any old notes, except in change when making purchases. His salary is paid him in installments of $4,166.66 each on the last day of every month, and the treasurer always makes it a point to send him notes of the latest issue. Mr. Cleveland, as his predecessors have done, keeps a private bank account with Riggs & Co., and makes a deposit regularly the 1st of every month, reserving enough from his salary to pay current expenses and setting a good example by putting the rest aside for a rainy day.—Chicago Record.

A HINDOO TRICK.

IT IS RIDICULOUSLY EASY WHEN YOU KNOW HOW IT IS DONE.

Professor Herrmann Explains the Mystery of the Sealed Box and the Crafty Way in Which the Performer Who is Tied in a Bag Exchanges Her Prisons.

Where, if not in India, should we turn for the weird and mysterious, for the wonderful, for that which may not be understood by any one, even those who profess to understand everything? India, with a civilization that was older than Europe's when Europe's civilization began. What is developed is naturally more fully developed in India than in any younger country. What has been made a study for years must be surpassed by that which has been made a study for centuries. Although the magic of the Hindoos is by far the most celebrated, it is not the most scientific magic in the world.

European and American magicians, a few years since, introduced an illusion called the Hindoo box trick, for no other reason than that Hindoo is a very good word to tack on any illusion, as it is to a certain extent mystifying. This trick was performed in the following manner:

A large box capable of holding a human being was brought in and examined by a committee invited on the stage for the purpose of making this inspection. It was found to be a strongly built iron bound box, with great hasp hinges fastening one side of the lid to the box, the other side of which was held down with a hasp and staple, firmly riveted through the wood, and any one in the audience was called upon to secure it with a padlock. This was done. Then the box was placed on two trestles sufficiently high to sustain it about eighteen inches from the stage floor; a coil of rope, usually about a hundred feet in length, was handed to the committee and they were requested to tie the box, which was invariably tied by lashing it so securely as to render it an impossibility to open the lid in any way without destroying the rope. The knots of this rope were often sealed with sealing wax, marked with rings and charms worn by members of the committee in such a manner as to prevent the seals being tampered with without a discovery.

After this was done to the satisfaction of the committee the assistant, generally a young woman dressed in a page's costume, was called in. This assistant was placed in a strong linen bag, the bag drawn up over her head and securely tied with a stout string, the knots of which were sealed in the same manner as those on the box. The page was then taken and seated on the box, a screen drawn around both the box and the performer, when in an incredibly short space of time, never exceeding thirty seconds, a smart tap on the box announced that all was ready; the screen was hastily drawn aside, and the empty bag, still sealed exactly as left by the committee, with every seam intact, would be found lying on top of the box, the page having disappeared entirely.

A rapping on the inside of the box proclaimed the fact that the performer was inside of it, and after the seals and knots were inspected and untied and the network of rope wound around it removed the key was produced and the box unlocked. The performer would step out as cool and unruffled as though she had been lying on a sofa during the whole affair.

Now, unexplained, this appears truly wonderful, but the explanation is so simple as to be ridiculous. The box, carefully corded and locked, of course could not have been opened at the top, the bottom was resting on the trestles, and we naturally turn to the sides for an opening. The front side of the box, just below the hasp, was so arranged that an invisible hinge or rod running through the bottom of the lower half of the box front allowed this to drop down inside the box, leaving no obstacle in the way of the performer's entering it but the ropes, which, of course, were pushed aside enough to allow the small body of the page to pass through.

Once inside the box she simply rolled to the back of it, raised the front lid and with a small, flat, knifelike instrument shot two tiny bolts into place, rapped on the box, concealed her instruments to open it and was ready for the inspection of the committee. The bolts were hid by the other half of the box lid, they being set into the upper edges of the board and the smallness of the cracks prevented their discovery.

But how about the bag? you ask. That was managed in this way: There were two bags, one inside the other. The performer was placed in an outer bag, leaving an empty one exactly like the outer one flat against the back of the bag. When the magician was pulling the bag over the young lady's head, ready to be tied and sealed, he simply brought the tops of the two bags to be sealed up, that of the empty one above that of the one containing the page, and held it in his hand to be tied and sealed, the hands clasped around the top of the outer bag concealing its mouth so that the committee working above his hands really tied and sealed the top of the empty bag. When this was done he would pick up the slight figure of the page and seat her on the top of the box, quickly draw the screen around her and she would slip the outer bag down from her shoulders, draw up and shake out the inner or empty one and lay it on the top of the box. The inner bag would then be wound around her body inside a blouse waist or outer garment; she would then open the box, crawl into it, fasten the front and call for "light." A. HERRMANN.

"You know old John Goodner?"

"Yes."

"Never called anything but 'Honest John' for forty years?"

"Um."

"County treasurer for twenty-eight years and guardian for half the orphans in the county? Trusted by everybody?"

"Yep."

"Dead three weeks and experts have gone over his books?"

"Well?"

"They found he was honest in every way!"

It May Lead to a Solution of New York's Rapid Transit Problem.

The Baltimore Belt Line Tunnel Railroad is almost a perfect illustration of the feasibility of a like road under Broadway, New York city. The difficulties surmounted in its construction were exactly such as would be met with in the metropolis.

The tunnel is a connecting link between Camden station, the present terminus of the Baltimore & Ohio, close to the heart of the city, and Bay View, seven miles distant. Much of the tunnel is under the business portion of the city, and yet it was completed without interruption to traffic. A large section, for instance, was under Howard street, which might be compared to New York's Twenty-third street. It is devoted in its lower blocks to wholesale trade, with large four, five, six, seven and eight story warehouses, hotels and banks. A little further up it is a retail business street, and for a block or two comprises part of the shopping district. Still, further up is the Academy of Music, the Howard Auditorium (a theater), and Johns Hopkins University, besides one or two halls for concerts, &c. Above these it becomes a semi-business street, many of the dwellings being boarding houses. The Fifth Regiment armory is also on the street.

Howard street is eighty-two feet in width and Broadway is eighty feet. Like Broadway, Howard street has large stores on either side, with vaults extending beyond the street line. Each has an underground system of pipes and sewers, and on the surface cable and other cars, in addition to the general heavy business traffic. The subsoil in both streets is chiefly sand and gravel, with rock at intervals.

Part of the work was performed from the surface and part by tunneling. There was considerable iron roof construction close up to the pavement, after plans almost identical with some proposed for Broadway.

Broadway is the only street in New York under which a railroad should be built, because of the conformation of Manhattan Island. It is the ridge of the island, and the railroad through its whole extent, excepting for a short distance at Canal street, would be in dry sand and on high ground. There is not a location on either side of Broadway where the railroad would be out of tidewater until a distance of nearly two miles from the Battery is reached. There is a very slight exception to this in the vicinity of Printing House square. Even if it were possible to build or tunnel in such unfavorable conditions, there is no street other than Broadway wide enough to accommodate a four track road.

HER ORIENTAL CORNER.

The Inexpensive Bit of Decoration Devised By a Clever Woman.

If there is anything in the line of interior decoration capable of bestowing quite as much pleasure as a well arranged "cozy corner," diligent research has failed to discover it. It is a delight to the eye and a delight to the tired body. It gives an air of homelike coziness to the biggest, most barren apartment, and it is a charming bit of appropriate decoration for a small one.

Of course any woman whose purse is big enough can have a reasonable cozy corner by calling in those obliging gentlemen, the interior decorators and upholsterers. When completed it will probably be a very correct and pretty corner, but it will represent the taste and skill of the aforesaid gentlemen, and not those of madam herself. Besides, it will represent an alarming outlay. It is better to be one's own decorator and upholsterer.

One woman who came to this conclusion some time ago achieved a corner which is the joy and admiration of all who see it. She placed a divan—one of those cheap, comfortable cot-bed divans, costing only $6.50—diagonally across a corner. The divan was covered with a "bargain" Bagdad costing $3.50 more, and on it were piled sofa cushions of appropriately Oriental design.

In the triangular space back of the divan stood a piano lamp with a wrought iron shade and vase. It cost $9. The shade of dark red silk was sufficiently voluminous without being frivolous, and was made by madam's fair hands from a silk dinner dress of antediluvian pattern. Beneath it and a little nearer to the divan stood a small mahogany tea table of antique make. Its proud owner had bargained with a ravenous antique dealer until she had succeeded in purchasing it for $7. One of the doilies made of Turkish embroidery, protected the shining wood from contact with the dainty little tea things, which were always in readiness to serve the stray guests. On the wall at one side was another Oriental portiere, like that on the divan lining, breaking the straight line of the wall and giving a bit of effective color. On the wall near the head of the couch a simple little set of bookshelves were fastened, containing madame's favorite books and a few pieces of bric-a-brac.

"And it will cost less than $40," says its ingenious mistress when she hears other women telling of Oriental corners for which the decorator has charged $150.

BETWEEN SCYLLA AND CHARYBDIS

By Mrs. E. Lynn Linton

[Copyright, 1894, by Bachellier, Johnson and Bachellier.]

II

They were not adventurers of the vulgar type—that is, adventurers in the sense of holding a different social position from that which they assumed. They were gentlemen of good family; but fortune hunters to whom the income was of more account than the woman, and who made pretense of a love they did not feel. For Gerald's somewhat brutal attitude of command was love-making in his way—a way analogous to that of the savage who first knocks his intended wife senseless and then carries her off to his own hut in the bush—his conquest, lover, wife and victim all in one.

She had her choice then between the two. In Gerald she would find a spirit of domination that would crush her to the earth—a materialistic, unpoetic kind of nature that would leave her soul as arid as the parched sands of the Libyan desert—a tyrant, a master, a conqueror. In Giulio di Siena she would have infidelity, intrigue, jealousy, and what to an Englishwoman, accustomed to much open-air exercise and absolute freedom of movement, would be practically incarceration. In the princess she would have a mother-in-law who would rule her with a rod of iron, and never take her to her heart as a daughter—who would persecute her to become a Catholic; who would ridicule her English ways and decry her nationality; who would make up for her husband's neglect by a system of espionage which would not leave her one shred of spontaneous freedom, and who in all of whose persecutions here, and glacial barriers there, would be joined by her married daughter, La Contessa Maria del Sole (who would repeat and exaggerate all that her mother might say and do). Of the two the balance of unhappiness would be on the side of the Italian, but neither man would treat her well, and in a marriage with each alike would be her misery.

The two aspirants had nearly come to that duel, with the buttons off, which seemed as if it must eventually take place, over the fifth seat in the carriage, which meant who should sit outside with the coachman. The friction had been so great, and the courtesy disguise so thin, that the princess had half-laughingly proposed drawing lots for the chance. But, perhaps because she had proposed it, perhaps because he disdained to put himself in any sense on an equality with the despised Italian, Gerald had rejected this arrangement. With as much haughtiness as sullenness he had flung up the contest by mounting the box, whence he revenged himself by turning round and engrossing, so far as he could, Ida's whole attention by his persistent talk. He spoke to no one else. If the princess or the baron cut into the conversation, he ignored each as if neither party existed; save when obliged to answer a question directly addressed to him, and then he answered in a monosyllable, and his voice was more like a bear's growl than even before. If it were the baron who spoke to him, on any subject independent of the matter in hand, he contented himself with a reply that effectually put a stop to all such advances, for this time, at least. He was more unpleasant than could have been believed, as the princess said in her pretty broken English, and, so far as he could, he spoiled the day's pleasure for all concerned, anxious as he was to punish all and sundry for the infliction of that undesired association. For this, too, as for some other things, the baron owed him, more than one; and in his own mind resolved to pay his debt with interest. The only difficulty was: How could he pay that debt? The Englishman was stronger than he, and braver. And stabbing him in the back, in the dark, was not apparently very feasible.

HE SPOKE TO NO ONE ELSE.

The way from the Schloss led down to the valley by a road cut in the side of the mountain. A mass of rock and unscalable escarpments rose sheer from the path above—a precipice with eternity at the bottom fell sharply down below. The road was full of these acute angles and hazardous curves so well known to continental travelers—angles and curves which were veritable deathtraps and where the marvel was that anyone should escape with his life. Two half-broken loosely-harnessed horses, mainly guided by the voice of a voluble and vociferous coachman, who held his reins as slack as a bunch of ribbons in a cotillon, were the locomotive agents of the carriage, in a transit where the chances of disaster were as innumerable as there were flowers on the broad ledges of inaccessible rocks. Yet tragic occurrences was as rare as the passing of a herd of chamois or a fight between an eagle and a vulture in the sky. Rains had washed away some of the edges, both of the cliffs above whereby the road was strewn with stones that rolled as the horses stepped on them, and of the outer line against the sharp decline below. Still, they had gone up in safety in the morning and they supposed they should come down in safety in the afternoon. The horses, if loosely handled and not broken according to our ideas, were familiar with the road, and the coachman, for all his outlandish methods of driving, knew his work.

Something startled them. The horses, used to the road as they were, sure-footed and as a rule trustworthy in their own wild way, suddenly broke loose and took matters into their own keeping. Disdaining bit and bridle they tore down the steep incline, the shouts of the terrified driver maddening them still more, and the hand of Gerald Frobisher on the rein of no avail. They had taken the bit between their teeth, and their teeth were strong. The danger was imminent. They were close to the worst bit of the road, where the most careful driver, doing all he knew, could never be quite sure of safe steering. Now as things were destruction seemed inevitable.

The princess shrieked and flung her arms abroad, calling on the saints and adding to the horror of the moment by her ungovernable terror. The young baron was in a state of collapse. Almost fainting, speechless, motionless, his eyes closed, his form drooping, he lay as if half dead. Ida sat perfectly still, her eyes wide open as if she were watching how things would go; and Mrs. Brand, looking into vacancy, moved her lips in silent prayer. The carriage swayed from side to side and one wheel hung over the abyss, when Gerald leaped from the box and at the risk of his life somehow managed to secure the bridle of the off horse, and by sheer force of strength stopped him in the plunge and flung him back on his haunches. His grasp missed would have sent them all to the bottom of the abyss together. As it was they were safe, through his gallant action gallantly performed; and however unpleasant his temper might have been he had undoubtedly saved them all from destruction.

But the contempt with which he grasped the baron by the shoulder and shook him as a terrier shakes a rat! —the driver meanwhile having got to the head of his horses, with whom he was reasoning and arguing, pointing out the error of their ways and the folly as well as wickedness of which they had been guilty; the superb tone of disdainful superiority with which he said: "Come, baron, pull yourself together like a man! Your precious life is in no danger—no thanks to you for yourself or the others. You were not too frightened, I can see," he added, turning to Ida and speaking with more genuine admiration than he had ever yet shown to her. "You are English and know how to face danger with courage!"

"It is well to be without nerves," sobbed the princess. "We southerners have susceptibilities which you cold northerners want."

"They are inconvenient things at times," said Gerald, significantly.

By now the baron had recovered and could take part in things as they were.

"I can face a bullet," he said, quite as significantly. "Where my mother and la signorina are concerned I confess I lose my head. Had I been alone you would have seen a different man."

"Possibly," said Gerald, with a sneer. "Meanwhile the man we have seen has not contributed much to the safety of the ladies for whom he professes so much regard. We can judge of the unseen only by the seen."

"We will speak of this again," said the baron, with meaning lightly touching his own breast.

"At your pleasure," said Gerald, measuring him from head to foot with eyes that spoke more than lips could have done. It was as if they had said: "Reluctant to meet you? I, the crack shot of the African wilds and the Indian jungles, afraid to face a nerveless coward like you?"

All that evening the Englishman waited for the challenge which never came. When dinner was over he strolled about the hotel gardens and made love to Ida in his domineering, trenchant way. But the baron and his mother did not appear. They had been at the table d' hote dinner where Gerald had almost insulted the young man—where Ida had been now cool and now sorry as her mind dwelt now on her young lover's cowardice and now on his charms. But after dinner they had vanished into space, and no message came to any of the group. Ida was restless and of uncertain mood. She sometimes laughed almost hysterically and sometimes was near to tears. The brutal strain in Gerald's character had never rasped her as it rasped her to-night, and in her heart she hated him as if he had been a murderer. When she saw that, for sure, the Italians would not come back this evening, she too slipped away with an aching heart and a temper nearly as bad as Gerald's.

"The one a brute and the other a coward," she said to herself; "and the coward the best of the two!"

The next morning mother and son had gone, and a sweetly-worded note to Ida from the princess told the reason of this sudden flight. They went, it said, because they saw how things were between her, la signorina and Mr. Frobisher. He was her lover and she loved him. The baron's heart was broken; he loved the signorina to distraction; but he was too delicate to interfere in a thing already arranged—and his only duty was flight. Might all the saints bless the sweet young English girl whom they, her Italian friends, would never forget!

When he heard of this sudden flight Gerald laughed aloud.

"That cur! that coward!" he said, contemptuously. "He has shown his true colors at last, and we are well rid of him. Now, Ida, we can be happy, and you will be my wife before the year is out."

On which strength came to the girl through her very terror.

"Your wife?" she said, her large eyes wide open and full of horror. "I would rather die first! If I cannot marry the baron I will marry no one else, and certainly not you who treated him so ill!"

So there it was. The fortune-hunters were balked of their bag, and the young heiress escaped the Scylla of brutality and the Charybdis of deception; she went home a sadder if not a wiser woman, free to bestow herself and her fortune on whom she would—as, when the right man came along, she would certainly do.

MAX HANSEN'S FUNERAL.

A Large Number Attend to Give Their Respect to Their Departed Comrade.

The obsequies attending the death of Max Hansen were largely attended at his late home on Liberty street yesterday afternoon. A delegation of 48 members of Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., 20 members of the fire department, and several members of Iron Moulders Union, No. 81, were present, in addition to a large number of friends to pay their last respects to a man who had always been a loyal fellow member and a good friend to all with whom he came in contact during his life here on earth.

The remains reposed in a drab colored casket, the interior of which was lined with white roses, while at the head was a beautiful floral pillow, the gift of Zephyr Hook and Ladder Company. The lower end of the casket was almost obscured from view with flowers, among them being a wreath and a handsome floral arrangement from the K. of P.

The services at the house, conducted by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, were of a simple character, consisting of reading a few verses from the Bible, and offering a few words of condolence to the mourners. The interment services were conducted from the K. of P. ritual, and were very impressive.

The pallbearers were as follows: J. C. Blimm and S. L. Miller, of the Hook and Ladder Company: John H. Tier, Jr., and Robert Jackson of the K. of P.; Alexander Ross and John Cheethem, of the Iron Moulders Union.

Sheriff Kyte's Position.

A prominent resident of Fanwood tells The Press that the recent criticisms of Sheriff Kyte and his Improvement Company concerning the borough project do Mr. Kyte a great injustice.

"He was—writes a correspondent—"an enthusiastic advocate of the borough long before there was any prospect of a trolley road, and has done more to improve and help the township than any other five men here. Even now there is an open offer from him to spend two dollars of the Land Improvement Company's money for every one the township will spend towards improvements."

They're In Hock by This Time.

The rogues gallery in the police station has suffered a great depletion of exhibits in the last few week from the hands of those who have taken a fancy to the various things that have been accumulated from time to time. Only a couple of rusty knives, ball club and mask, and dust covered revolver, remain to remind the onlooker that Plainfield once really had tough people.

Chopping Away the Icebergs.

Street Commissioner Stout of the borough had a force of men at work on Somerset street today breaking up the ice and snow which accumulated there during the blizzard, and which has since been a source of great impediment to teamsters driving along the thoroughfare.

A Model for the Metropolis.

Fire and Water, a prominent New York journal, reproduces from The Daily Press, with credit, the cuts illustrating the Plainfield Fire Department Headquarters, with description by Chief Engineer Doane.

To Administer the Estate.

Captain George D. Morrison has been selected by the widow of the late Robert W. Rice, and appointed by the Surrogate of Somerset county, as administrator, to settle up Mr. Rice's estate.

Good People in the Borough.

If any police records are entered in the borough this month it will be necessary to make them before 12 tonight, for up to this afternoon not a single arrest has been made during the past 28 days.

A Des Moines woman who has been troubled with frequent colds, concluded to try an old remedy in a new way, and accordingly took a tablespoonful (four times the usual dose) of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy just before going to bed. The next morning she found that her cold had almost entirely disappeared. During the day she took a few doses of the remedy (one teaspoonful at a time) and at night again took a tablespoonful before going to bed, and on the following morning awoke free from all symptoms of the cold. Since then she has, on several occasions, used this remedy in like manner with the same good results, and is much elated over her discovery of so quick a way of curing a cold. AN EVENING WITH JEAN.

The Gentle Poet of the Heart Discussed by Plainfield Admirers.

"An Evening with Jean Ingelow" was the title of the entertainment that the Christian Endeavor society of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church gave to their friends last evening. Mrs. J. G. Miller was in charge and her efforts proved very successful.

The evening commenced with a vocal solo by Miss Nancy Randolph, Miss Bessie Titsworth accompanying her. Miss Ernestine Smith then gave a brief history of the life and works of Jean Ingelow, which was followed by "My Son's Wife Elizabeth" recited by Miss Lulu Lewis. "On the Rocks by Aberdeen" was characteristically rendered by D. E. Titsworth. He was accompanied on the piano by Mrs. D. E. Titsworth.

A series of tableaux were next given representing the well known "Songs of Seven." Miss Lulu Lewis read the selection while it was being illustrated.

The first tableau was entitled "Exultation" in which Miss Vamie Rogers took the part of "She is just seven today" to perfection. "Romance" was the second and Miss Ethel Titsworth took the principal part.

The maiden of twenty-one, Miss Elizabeth Allis, was represented as waiting for her lover. Mrs. Charles Dunham with Evelin Rogers, Ellen Rogers and Paul Russel as her children represented the motherhood.

The fifth tableaux consisted of Miss Lena Tomlinson as the widow.

In the next the widow was giving her daughter, Miss Bessie L. Titsworth, in marriage.

The seventh was the bridal scene. Miss Bessie L. Titsworth the bride, and Harold Tomlinson the groom, were about to receive the benediction of the minister, D. E. Titsworth. Just as the curtain fell the minister leaned over and kissed the bride. This was not part of the programme and when the curtain rose again in response to the loud applause, the groom performed the same ceremony completely bringing down the house.

The bridemaids in the scene were Mrs. Dunham, Miss Tomlinson, Mrs. Tomlinson and Miss Elizabeth Allis.

The last tableau of the evening was "Longing for Home" in which Mrs. D. E. Titsworth sang "Give us home and give us peace".

A collection was then taken up for the Nebraska sufferers and netted $13.

Refreshments were then served by the young people and everybody pronounced the entertainment a splendid success.

Surprised.

Miss Helen Cuming of Putnam avenue was given a delightful surprise party Tuesday evening by her friend Miss Bessie Smith. An enjoyable evening was spent with games and dancing and, to conclude, refreshments were served.

Among those present were the Misses Lillian Schoonmaker, Edith Beach, Edith Huribut, Alberta Irwin, and Messrs. Henry Brower, Clifford Halloway, Howard Martin, Seymour Smith, Fred Smith and Stanton Smith.

O. W. O. Hardman, sheriff of Tyler Co., W. Va., appreciates a good thing and does not hesitate to say so. He was almost prostrated with a cold when he procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He says: "It gave me prompt relief. I find it to be an invaluable remedy for coughs and colds." For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

SIGN THEIR NAMES TO IT, TOO.

Not Only His Original Falsehoods Concerning Them, But Also His Reiteration of Them, Stamped Emphatically as Untrue and Without Foundation—Men Whom He Accused of Being the Authority for His Abuse, Utterly Refute His Statements.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:

In the issue of the "courier" of 23d inst. the following statements appear in its editorial columns.

"After considerable effort and careful investigation we have discovered that Geo. W. Grant was appointed Captain of Police pro tem., because the Mayor was unanimously in favor of the appointment.

"We are surprised to learn that the relations between the Mayor of the City of Plainfield, and the other members of the Police Board are not quite as cordial as they appear to be. At a recent meeting of the Board—and, by the way, it was the first meeting that has been called by the Mayor for many long and weary moons—some things were talked about, some questions were asked, and some incidents occurred which, we have heard, would greatly interest the voting population of the city."

These statements are untrue and without foundation in every particular, and as such we wish to denounce them in a most public manner.

We wish to denounce also as untrue, the statement of the editor in a subsequent issue of the same paper, that a member of the Police Committee was authority for his misstatements.

THE GRIP TO BLAME.

A Swede Before the Bar of Justice for Trying to Stay a Malady.

The monotony of City Court was broken this morning when for the first time in 10 days a delinquent of justice stood before the rail charged with drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

The culprit was a Swede who gave his name as Herman Hernanstole. He is employed by a family on Woodland avenue, and yesterday morning filled up with intoxicants to keep off an attack of the grip. He misjudged his measure, however, with the result of its having a disastrous effect on his ability to guide a team along the roadway of Watchung avenue, and instead driving on several well-kept lawns. Sergeant Kisly was called, and gave him a chance to regain his senses in a cell in the police station.

This morning Judge Coddington gave him the choice of paying a $5 fine or spending 20 days in the County Jail. The fine was paid.

Hager's Great Republic.

J. M. Hager, whose "Great Republic" has been given with much success in Plainfield, was in town yesterday interesting H. M. Maxson, Superintendent of the Schools, in an effort to reproduce the production in Music Hall with the help of the public-school pupils. Mr. Hager has produced his allegory 17 seasons in Brooklyn, where he lives, and 15 seasons in Jersey City. He has brought it thoroughly up to date and made it practically a new entertainment. Mr. Hager is held in kindly remembrance by Plainfield people, who will be glad to enjoy again his "Great Republic".

To Make a Big Land Sale.

W. M. Williams of Mount Pleasant, S. C., who came to Plainfield for the purpose of selling several thousand acres of rice land in his State, left for his home on the steamship Seminole, of the Clyde line, yesterday afternoon. He boarded at Hotel Grenada while in Plainfield, and has been very ill for over three weeks.

Lawyer W. S. Angleman sailed for Europe Tuesday to sell the property which Mr. Williams represents, to English capitalists.

The experience of Geo. A. Apgar, of German Valley, N. J., is well worth remembering. He was troubled with chronic diarrhoea and doctored for five months and was treated by four different doctors without benefit. He then began using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, of which one small bottle effected a complete cure. It is for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. A GOOD MATCH.

Local Sportsmen Enjoy a Shoot at Benner's.

An audience of fully 200 enthusiastic sportsmen assembled at Benner's sporting grounds Tuesday afternoon to witness the long talked of shooting match between Neaf Apgar of this city and Aaron Woodruff of Elizabeth. The conditions of the match were that each man should shoot at 100 live birds, governed by the American Shooting Association rules, the stake being $125 a side. The birds furnished for the occasion were an unusually strong lot of flyers, and the high wind that prevailed throughout the match made them still more difficult to bring down. It was thought by a majority of the spectators that Apgar's chances were by far the best, and after he had scored 23 out of his first 25 in the most skilful manner, his opponent's chances looked very slim indeed; pigeon shooting however, is a largely governed by the character of the bird, and the hard birds that continually fell to Apgar's lot, was remarked by all. Bird after bird was liberated for him, from the most unfavorable traps, while seemingly easy birds fell to the lot of his opponent, the "luck of the birds" as it is termed by trap shooters, was entirely against him. Mr. Woodruff shot a good up hill race, and while the majority of the spectators were in sympathy with the local man, they gave him credit for his skillful work. A second match will be arranged at an early date as "little" Neaf is hardly satisfied with Tuesday's result. W. Terry officiated as referee in a most and acceptable manner, C. Smith acting as scorer.

The score as shot in strings of 25 was:

Woodruff.....	20,	21,	23,	20—84
Apgar.....	23,	15,	20,	20—78

At the conclusion of the match a miss and out affair with 12 entries was shot, which resulted in favor of T. H. Keller and William Ross of Elizabeth, they each killing six birds and dividing the pool. C. Smith scoring 5, Scott Terry 5, D. Terry, 4, Apgar 3, Astfalk 2. Botch 2, Noel 2, Scott 0, Dan 0, Brewer 0.

PROGRESS DEMANDS A BOROUGH.

The Station End of the Township Demands Improvements for Which It Is Willing to Pay.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—The articles in your Monday's issue, copied from the New York Evening Post and Union County Standard, are hardly a fair statement of the Borough question now being agitated here.

The energetic, pushing, goahead residents of the township are mainly located in close proximity to the Jersey Central Railroad station, and being desirous of all the improvements to be had in the way of good roads, walks, water, electric lights, and everything in that line, are willing to pay for them; but under township government the entire taxable property of the township is assessed for improvements which only a part get the benefit of, and as is natural those situated at a distance complain, and not without reason! It certainly is an injustice to tax them for improvements not common to the whole township; but it is not an injustice if those who do get the benefits pay for them.

There does n t seem to be any way under the present condition of things, of arranging these matters in a way fair to all concerned, and it can be done with a borough, and without any detriment to the portions of the township not included.

The trolley question seems to be settled, and it is expected the franchise for the main line and the loop will be granted at the next meeting of the Township Committee. ANOTHER FANWOODER.

BISSELL'S RESIGNATION

The Postmaster General Resumes His Law Practice.

His Letter to the President Created a Surprise in the Cabinet — He Regrets That He Is Compelled To Sever His Official Relations with Mr. Cleveland and His Aids.

Washington, Feb. 28.—Postmaster-General Bissell set at rest all doubts as to his purpose of remaining in the cabinet by tendering his resignation to President Cleveland yesterday. This action was not taken hastily. As far back as the early autumn Mr. Bissell felt that his law practice at Buffalo required his personal attention and at that time he notified the president that sooner or later he would be compelled to retire to private life. Nothing further passed between the two gentlemen with reference to the matter until ten days ago when Mr. Bissell again assured the president that he must soon resign his portfolio.

His Relations Most Cordial.

In a statement made by Mr. Bissell to a representative of the United Press last night he says that he has found the work of his office agreeable, notwithstanding its onerousness. He says that he leaves the department with regret and adds that his official relations with the president and his cabinet ministers have been most cordial. He denies emphatically the reports of disagreements between the president and his cabinet and asserts that no ministry could in its official and personal relations be more harmonious.

It Will Be a Surprise.

The postmaster-general's resignation was not known until a late hour last evening to his private secretary, nor will it be known in all probability to any of his subordinates at the department until its publication in the papers. The letter of resignation is said to have been brief and to have been couched in the usual formal terms. It recites the fact that he deems it advisable to retire from the cabinet and that he will do so upon the appointment and qualification of his successor. The letter was written by the postmaster-general at the close of office hours and was by him personally handed to his chief a little after 5 o'clock.

To a United Press reporter who called at his residence last evening Mr. Bissell frankly stated that he had resigned.

Is He Disheartened?

Said he: "I have placed my resignation in the hands of the president. The reason is that my professional work at home demands my attention and I feel that I cannot longer remain away from it. The business of the department is in good condition and its transfer to my successor can be made without affecting the public service.

"I have found my work agreeable, although at times quite onerous. I confess I leave it with regret because I have become deeply interested in it and had a desire to accomplish something more in the development of the postal service than I have found possible in these two years of effort. I deeply regret, also, that I am thus compelled to sever official relations with the president and his cabinet which have been most satisfactory and cordial throughout."

A COWARDLY ANARCHIST.

A Sleeping Family Blown Up with Dynamite.

Mount Carmel, Pa., Feb. 28.—A fiendish plot to blow up Henry Sullinger's residence and kill six people was partially carried into effect here early yesterday morning.

A large quantity of dynamite was piled in front of Sullinger's home. The villian, while the family was asleep, attached a fuse to the terrible explosive and lighted it.

The perpetrator of the plot fled just in time to escape a dreadful explosion which shattered Sullinger's residence. The front of the house was badly damaged and three children were thrown from bed by the great shock. Debris filled the air and the neighborhood was startled. Windows in a neighboring house were broken by the concussion or by the flying missiles.

Mr. Sullinger has no idea who designed the plot to kill his family, and as yet the police officials are no wiser than he.

Prohibiting Our Cattle.

Washington, Feb. 28.—The protest which the American embassy in Paris has been instructed to lodge with the French government on account of the decree prohibiting American cattle products is identical with that filed in Germany at the time of the alleged discovery of Texas fever in our cattle exportations to that country and represents that the department of agriculture is making redoubled effors to stamp out veterinary diseases and that the most vigorous measures of inspection and control of cattle and dressed meats intended for exports are being practiced.

Grover's Enemy a Postmaster.

Elmira, N. Y., Feb. 28.—The appointment of George Cotton as postmaster is a complete surprise to politicians here. The sentiment here is that this recognition of Hill's lieutenant is the first act of friendship between Cleveland and Hill. Cotton has been a bitter enemy of Cleveland and his appointment brings forth lurid expressions from the anti-snappers.

His Fight for Liberty.

Hazleton, Pa., Feb. 28.—Constables Zeigler and Trescott, yesterday arrested James Scharvo, who is charged with murdering an Italian girl at Scranton a year ago. Scharvo told the officers that it was his brother whom they wanted. He made a desperate attempt to escape and nearly killed Officer Zeigler by cutting open his abdomen.

England Needs Him.

London, Feb. 28.—The term of Admiral Freemantle, in command of the British fleet in Chinese waters, will expire soon, but, in view of the critical situation in the east, his transfer may be delayed. His successor will be Admiral Buller.

HE THOUGHT IT WAS WHISKEY.

Drank Carbolic Acid and Died Fifteen Minutes Later.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 28.—Fifteen minutes after drinking two ounces of carbolic acid, which he had taken by mistake, thinking it was whiskey, William Busch, 32 years old, died in the greatest agony yesterday afternoon.

Busch returned home from work and before going to bed he had his wife prepare a whiskey punch, some of which they drank. A pint bottle was filled with it and placed in the pantry, alongside a bottle of the same kind which contained carbolic acid.

Mrs. Busch was aroused from sleep by a violent ringing at the door bell. On going to the door she found Edward Appel, an undertaker, whose place is at 286 Springfield avenue and by whom her husband was employed. Appel told Mrs. Busch to waken her husband, as he wanted him to assist him at some work.

Busch hurriedly arose and dressed himself. He had his overcoat on his arm going out the door when he thought of the punch and turned back. He went to the closet, and picking up a bottle which he supposed contained the whiskey, put it to his mouth and drank a good quantity.

In an instant Busch dropped the bottle and, putting his hands to his mouth and throat, began screaming that he was on fire. He rushed into the bedroom, where his wife was.

"My God, Mary, I've drank something awful," he cried out.

Mrs. Busch instantly saw the mistake made by her husband and she rushed to his aid. She placed her arms about him and escorted him to the front room, where he fell. The wife rushed from the house and went to Appel's place, a hundred yards away, and informed him.

Appel went to a nearby drug store, secured some drugs and hurriedly made his way to the house, but when he reached it Busch was dead.

HER SKULL WAS CRUSHED.

Found in Her Burning Home with a Bloody Axe Near the Bed.

East Lebanon, Me., Feb. 28.—A murder believed to be the act of an insane son, was committed here yesterday at the homestead of the late Deacon John J. Fernald, about two miles from the East Lebanon station. Some of the neighbors discovered that the Fernald buildings were in flames.

During the excitement attending the fire somebody discovered in a small bed room the dead body of Mrs. Fernald. Her skull was crushed, and there were marks of a sharp instrument. Further search revealed a bloody axe near the bed. The son Leroy Fernald, aged 38, was missing, which fact aroused suspicion. At first it was thought the fire had started in the barn while he was feeding the stock, and that he had perished in the flames. A search was instituted, and the missing man was discovered in an attic concealed behind the beams, from which concealment he was dragged and placed under arrest. Fernald shows signs of insanity.

GROCERY STORE WRECKED.

Great Excitement Follows the Explosion of a Can of Paint.

New York, Feb. 28.—A small three-story brick building on Madison street was almost wrecked yesterday afternoon by an explosion of paint which occurred in a grocery store on the ground floor. The proprietor of the store and a negro were thawing a can of paint on a stove, when the stuff exploded with such force that the concussion was heard six blocks away. Great excitement among the families living in the house followed the explosion, and many hastened to make their escape to the street. The concussion did not damage the grocery or injure those in it at the time of the explosion, but it wrecked the chimney and tore the plaster from the walls on the top floor. The scattered chimney crashed down on the roof, narrowly escaping toppling into James street which was crowded with children.

NO MONEY IN MATCHES.

Low Prices Has Demoralized the Market—Advancement Asked.

Montreal, Feb. 28.—Representatives of the Canadian Match factories met here yesterday to consider an advance in prices. The cutting has been general and the market is demoralized, the production being much in excess of the demand.

The statement for the present month shows that stocks in jobbers and manufacturers' hands are so large that it would be impossible to obtain higher prices even if the manufacturers agreed to it. The meeting adjourned indefinitely without taking action.

We Wish Her Success.

Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 28.—Miss Laura C. Morgan and Prof. F. B. White, an invalid, were married last Sunday afternoon in the professor's sick chamber. He was so ill that he could barely whisper the responses. The two have long been engaged and were to marry next summer, but the professor fell desperately ill. His fiancee believed that she could save his life if she could be with him constantly and at her suggestion they were married.

Another Trolley Victim.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 28.—The Rev. A. P. Knell, of Cornwall Bridge, Conn., was painfully hurt yesterday by falling to the pavement at Kent avenue and Broadway, this city, while stepping from the platform of a trolley car of the Meeker avenue line. Mr. Knell struck the stones on his face. An ambulance surgeon dressed the wounds.

Curling Match.

Utica, N. Y., Feb. 28.—The curling match between New York and Utica clubs closed yesterday. Utica won both games, the first 21 to 17, and the second 33 to 22. The totals for the four games are: Utica 125, New York 110.

Capitalists Want the Earth.

Jacksonville, Fla., Feb. 28.—Eastern capitalists have purchased sixty-five hundred acres of phosphate lands in Levy county, Florida, paying therefor $65,000 cash. A large mining plant will be established near Bronson.

Women Must Suffer On.

Concord, N. H., Feb. 28.—The house of representatives yesterday by a vote of 185 to 108, refused a third reading to the bill providing for municipal suffrage for women.

LADIES STILL TALKING

Needed Dress Reform the Discussion of the Day.

Miss Seavey Tells What the Bicycle Girl Should Wear—A Dig at High Heels and Sharp Toe Shoes—Corsets and Tight Lacing Injurious to Health.

Washington, Feb. 28.—At the Womens' council yesterday, there was much debate on dress reform. Mrs. Martha Strickland, a lawyer of Detroit, opened the discussion. She placed herself on record as against the dress of the fashion plates which, she said, was of a character entirely contrary to natures dictates. The complaint that our dress makers were not artistic was denied by Mrs. Strickland, who contended that they did what was required of them from the artistic standpoint of their patrons, but they certainly were not artistic in the sense of creating gowns embodying beauty, grace and comfort.

The Bicycle Girl.

Frances B. Seavey of Boston told about what the bicycle girl should wear. She wanted a perfect dress for the wheel, and exhibited the dress she wore as her ideal. The interest was intense when Miss Seavey explained the various garments composing the creation. It did not have a divided skirt. The skirt was very simple but Miss Seavey said she had spent more thought on it than on any other thing that she had taken up. She said the wheel had come to stay (Applause). It brought the emancipation from conventional dress (Applause). Why should women ape men? She asked. Men had so little variety in costume that it was a pity for women to repeat them (Applause). She was therefore in favor of a dress on the general idea of that worn by women and she exhibited her costume as an example of her attempt to attain the ideal.

Character Shown in Her Feet.

Ellen A. Richardson of Massachusetts, told about improved dress from a hygienic standpoint. Hygienic dressing was exygenic dressing or dressing so as to give pure breathing, she said; breathing from every pore, from head to toes. To do this the dress must be loose and of porous material. She gave a dig at high heels and sharp toes and was applauded. The comfort of the feet was the basis for our physical, mental and moral well-being. One glance at a woman's feet, said Mrs. Richardson, showed her more of a woman's character than a study of her face and head. Difficult it was to say which was the greater sin—the constriction of the waist or of the foot. A constricted understanding could not beget good morals.

About Their Corsets.

Mrs. Richardson then proceeded to pay her respects to corsets, but her time expired and she had to sit down despite the continued applause by which her hearers sought to have her continue.

Mrs. Clara B. Colby of this city, also had something to say about dress. She favored hygenic dress and was down on the corset. Mrs. Colby wore a loose fitting gown, full in the back and the figure merely suggested by a belt in front extending half way around the waist. Women suffered not from any divine intent that they should suffer, but from their own manner of dressing. Women who dressed unhealthily chained themselves to animality.

Dressmakers in the Way.

Mrs. Julia Pauline Leavitt closed the formal discussion. Her black silk gown embodied her principles in its looseness of fit. The harm that dressmakers had done, she said, was colossal. They prevented women from taking up dress reform. Women who pretended they wanted to reform their method of dressing, hid themselves behind their dress-makers when the latter refused to make a gown on reform principles. But here the bell rang.

He Probably Forgot It.

Amesbury, Mass., Feb. 28.—John Mahoney, jr., a well known carriage manufacturer of Troy, N. Y., was arrested here yesterday at the instance of Bradley Hastings & Co., of Boston. He is charged with neglecting to settle for $900 worth of goods obtained from that firm. He failed to obtain bail. He will appear in court to-day for examination.

Another Female Brute.

Lebanon, Pa., Feb. 28.—Mary Loeb was given a hearing yesterday on the charge of cruelly torturing a child. She is accused of holding Martin Reager, aged 4 years, over a fire until the flesh was roasted and otherwise abusing him. The woman was held in $500 bail for a hearing.

Who Knows This Suicide?

Buffalo, Feb. 28.—A man about 35 years old was found dead in bed at the Crystal hotel last night. He had committed suicide by shooting himself in the head. The name F. Young, on his linen, is all there is to establish his identity.

Rev. W. E. Andrews, of Westfield, Mass., writes:

"I wish to add my testimony in favor of Munyon's Homoeopathic Home Remedies to the mass that has already been published. I sincerely pray God's blessing upon the proprietors of such valuable remedies."

SHE TELLS ALL.

The Whole Truth About the Matter Comes Out.

ALL THE DETAILS EXACTLY AS THEY HAPPENED.

And a More Remarkable Thing Never Was Known.

When a woman once makes up her mind to tell the whole truth about a matter, she does so with all her heart, and gives, without reservation or hesitation, all the facts just as they occurred. It is so with Mrs. C. E. Hudson, who resides in Brunswick, Me., from whose lips fell as interesting a story of extraordinary facts, as a newspaper writer ever gleaned for the reading public.

"Last year I was in such a condition that I could not walk or use my hands at all. My husband was obliged to lead me from the bed to the table, and almost carry me, I was so bad off.

"I was taken with the grip in the form of muscular rheumatism. It took me in the right leg first, and the pain was awful. It was about two years ago that I was taken, and I suffered all the time up to last fall, when I began the use of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

"I had tried many other kinds of medicines, but steadily grew worse. Last fall I commenced with Nervura. My bones were growing out of shape, and I could not so much as wring out a handkerchief, or stir up a mess of bread, or use my hands at all.

"I took twelve bottles in all. After using the first five bottles I began to gain, and now I call myself well.

"I am so grateful that I have recommended it to many persons and shall continue to do so. It seems almost a miracle to my neighbors and myself, that from being so terribly afflicted as I was last fall, I should be a well woman today, a space of only six months.

MRS. C. E. HUDSON.

"For a year and a half I did not get over one and one-half hours sleep each night, but after taking the Nervura I began to sleep and as I began to sleep, I began to gain, and after I had gained one hour's sleep more than I had before, I was greatly rejoiced.

"My husband has paid out hundreds of dollars for my cure, in each kind of medicine I could name, but nothing helped me until I took Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy."

A wonderful story this, and yet every statement is absolutely true. No person ever suffered more than Mrs. Hudson, and no more wonderful cure was ever effected than the marvelous cure by Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. If this medicine will cure such a terrible and extraordinary case, it will surely cure anything and everything in the line of rheumatism or neuralgia. How anyone can read about this remarkable cure and not give Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy an immediate trial is beyond the comprehension of the writer. In the face of such strong evidence of its curative powers, sufferers who will not at least give it a trial, deserve to continue to suffer. Particularly should it be taken now, as such diseases always yield more quickly and are cured more readily in the spring.

Another reason why this grand medicine can be taken with the utmost confidence, is the fact that its discoverer is our most successful physician in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th street, New York City, who can be consulted free of charge by all who choose to write him or call upon him.

UNCLE SAM MUST WAIT

His New Building May Be Erected Next Year.

Time Wasted in the Senate—Five Hours Spent Debating the Sundry Civil Appropriation Bill—Antagonized by Democratic Senators—Other Measures Considered.

Washington, Feb. 28.—The effort to induce the house to unite with the senate and vote to purchase what is known as the Mahone lot as a site for the government printing office, failed again yesterday, and the probabilities are that nothing will be done towards the erection of a new building this year. The matter came up under the special order adopted Tuesday alloting the session to the consideration of measures reported from the committee on buildings and grounds. After discussing the bill for three hours, Mr. Bankhead, chairman of the committee, finding it impossible to effect an arrangement limiting debate, abandoned the contest, and surrendered the remaining portion of the session to the consideration of general business.

Must Live on Their Routes.

In the course of the day, conference reports on the following bills were agreed to: The pension appropriation bill; a bill granting a pension of $50 a month to General Harrison C. Hobart; the bill to equalize the duties and salaries of the steamboat inspection service; and the postoffice appropriation bill. Upon each of the pension and postoffice appropriation bills there was quite a debate, and with regard to the latter the house voted by an overwhelming majority to concur in the senate amendment limiting to railway postal clerks hereafter to be appointed the operations of the departments order requiring them to live on the routes where they are employed.

The senate amendment to the house joint resolution suspending the transfer in bond through the United States of articles destined for the Mexican free zone was concurred in, and the following bills were passed:

Fifteen private pension bills; granting an American register to the steamer Kauli; extending until Jan. 1, the time within which certain forfeited railroad lands may be purchased.

The house adjourned at 5:35 until 12 o'clock to-day, the session to be devoted to District of Columbia measures.

In the Senate.

The senate spent nearly five hours in debate on the amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported from the committee on appropriations, providing for an issue of $100,000,000 certificates of indebtedness bearing 3 per cent. interest, to meet deficiencies in the treasury and also requiring future issues of bonds to be offered to the public for at least twenty days.

Mr. Gorman Talks.

Mr. Gorman (dem., Md.), who was recognized as the responsible author of the amendment, spoke for over an hour in advocacy of it, showing the probable needs of the treasury during the fiscal year and declaring that the secretary of the treasury was entirely mistaken in his estimates. The antagonists of the amendment were all found on the democratic side of the chamber, in the persons of Senators Hill, Mills, Voorhees and Vilas, which was, perhaps, the cause of Mr. Gorman's subsequent allusion to "sudden conversions—such as were read of in scripture."

No Night Sessions.

The supporters of the amendment were on the republican side, and included Senators Sherman and Allison. Finally, as it was clear to Mr. Gorman and all other senators that the amendment—if held to be in order—would be debated till the 4th of March next, Mr. Gorman withdrew the amendment; and the appropriation bill was then offered and agreed to. Unanimous consent was given to have a final vote taken on the bill this afternoon. A night session was thereby avoided; and the senate at 6:30 adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning.

Boys, Gunpowder, Explosion.

Huntingdon, Pa., Feb. 28.—Seven boys, who had gathered about a five pound can of gunpowder here yesterday and took turns in applying lighted matches to it, caused a terrific explosion, which will probably result in the death of two of the lads. George Rupert and Chester Harton, each about 16, were hurled thirty feet against a building. The clothing of the remaining boys was set on fire, and that of Robert Shaw and Thomas Earl burned from their bodies. The boys only escaped cremation by jumping into a nearby pond. The windows in all the neighboring houses were shattered.

It Was Comstock's Work.

Philadelphia, Feb. 28.—Charles C. Rickerson, 17 years of age, of Lancaster, Pa., who on the 18th inst., in the United States district court here pleaded guilty to sending obscene letters, books and pamphlets through the mails from Lancaster, was yesterday sentenced to seven months imprisonment. Rickerson was arrested through the efforts of Anthony Comstock of New York.

A Brooklyn Belle Objected.

New Haven, Conn., Feb. 28.—In the United States district court, J. M. Leydes, of Danbury, charged with having sent Miss Beslin, of Brooklyn, an obscene letter, pleaded guilty to the charge and was fined $100. Judge Townsend remitted the fine. The lenency of the court was because the contents of the letter was not a very grave violation of the law.

Their Horrible Fall.

Harrisburg, Pa., Feb. 28.—John Jacobs and Albert Maul, painters, fell from a swinging scaffold on North Sixth street yesterday morning. Maul was killed and Jacobs is dangerously hurt. The scaffold was thirty feet from the ground.

Bishop Manogue Dead.

Sacramento, Cal., Feb. 28.—Bishop Manogue, of the Northern Catholic diocese of California and Nevada, died in this city yesterday.

"PAID FOR MAKING MISCHIEF."

So Says Colonel Waring to the Labor Unions.

New York, Feb. 28.—Colonel Waring, the commissioner of street cleaning, yesterday gave out for publication a copy of a letter he recently sent to Patrick Murphy, secretary of Knights of Labor, District Assembly 49, in answer to a communication from that assembly which stated that it had approved and endorsed the resolutions adopted by another labor assembly demanding that the mayor immediately remove the commissioner on account of his hostility to organized labor. In his letter Commissioner Waring says: "I regard your organization as being an anti-labor organization, opposed to workingmen and opposed to work; an association carried on in the interest of idleness. I believe its chief cause of existence to be that you leaders may earn your salaries by making mischief. I shall, therefore, oppose every movement emanating from you with which my official work brings me in contact, until I see some evidence on the part of 'Knights of Labor' and 'Labor Unions' of an interest in workingmen and in the industrial interests of the community. I have no opposition to the employment of citizens, but I am opposed to the infliction of the burdens on workingmen and the cost on the whole people that the infamous conduct of 'organized labor' has caused."

KILLED BY THE TROLLEY.

Three Victims Meet Death in Brooklyn Yesterday.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 28.—Gustav Carlson, an 11-year-old boy, was killed in a shocking manner by a trolley car in this city last night. The lad was returning from school, when, as he attempted to cross Humboldt street, at the corner of Conselyea street, he was struck by a car of the Meeker avenue trolley line, and instantly killed. The front wheels of the car passed over the boy's body, mangling it in a horrible manner.

Thomas Dugan, while assisting in lifting the car from the boy's body, had his leg fractured. The motorman and conductor were placed under arrest.

This is the one hundredth victim of the trolley car since its introduction in this city.

Two other fatal accidents occurred last evening. Frederick Dumbleton was struck by a car on the Fulton street line and died later in the hospital.

Stephen Gill, a 12-year-old boy was instantly killed by a cross-bound car at Columbia and Amity street. Both of his legs were cut off and his body badly bruised. The motorman and conductor were arrested.

HAVE THE FORTY PERISHED?

Terrible Explosion in a Mine—Eleven Bodies Found.

Cerrilos, N. M., Feb. 28.—A disastrous mining accident was reported from White Ash, three miles from here yesterday. Enough is known to show that many lives have been lost. Late last night there had been eleven bodies taken out. The accident occurred in the mines of the Santa Fe company. It was caused by an explosion. The employes at the entrance to the mine heard a terrific roar, followed by the ground trembling. A dense volume of smoke poured from the entrance, making it impossible to enter until it had partially cleared.

There were forty men in the mine when the explosion took place. None of them have so far been rescued and it is feared that many, if not all, have perished. There is no way of escape through the entrance to the mine at present. The first body recovered was that of a driver, who was near the mouth when the explosion took place. Judging from his fate, there is little hope for any in the mine. Over half of the men employed in the mine have families and they surrounded the mine with woeful faces.

OUTLAWS CAPTURED.

A Terrible Fight at Midnight—U. S. Marshal Killed.

Muskogee, I. T., Feb. 28.—The Hughes gang of bandits that held up the Texas Pacific express in daylight six weeks ago and got $100,000 have begun to operate in the Indian Territory. Yesterday the United States marshal received a telegram from Checotah, twenty miles south, giving the whereabouts of the gang and stating that they had planned to hold up the Missouri, Kansas & Texas. Five marshals were ordered to Checotah at once. They trailed the gang all night and after a severe fight, in which they lost one man (an Indian) they captured two of the outlaws, the others escaped to the woods.

Electrical Workers' Strike.

New York, Feb. 28.—The board of walking delegates held a meeting yesterday afternoon, and it was afterwards announced that no action was taken that would extend the strike. One of the delegates said that no new strike would occur until the Contractors' association had taken some further steps to antagonize the men, such as attempting to employ non-union men.

Uncle Sam Objected.

Philadelphia, Feb. 28.—Charles Wilson Rowe, who was convicted of using the mails in carrying on a scheme to defraud, known as the bogus lumber business, was yesterday sentenced by Judge Butler in the United States district court to $100 fine and eighteen months imprisonment. Harry Wells, Rowe's partner in the scheme, was sentenced to $100 fine and a year's imprisonment.

To Eject Her Husband.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 28.—Mrs. Ellen Morehouse has brought suit to have James P. Morehouse ejected from her house on Cottage street, this city. Mrs. Morehouse recently secured a divorce from her husband, and he now refuses to leave the house, which Mrs. Morehouse claims as her property.

Flour Mill Burned.

Peabody, Kan., Feb. 28.—Wilson Brothers' flour mill east of this city was destroyed by fire yesterday, the origin being unknown. The loss is $100,000; insurance $70,000.

A Queen with Measles.

Madrid, Feb. 28.—Queen Regent Christiana has the measles, but is not seriously ill.

THE BATH BEACH FIRE

Many Houses Wiped Out by the Flames.

Brave Rescue by a Policeman—Assistance from Brooklyn and Other Places Called—Volunteer Firemen Jealous—Spontaneous Combustion the Supposed Cause of the Fire.

Bath Beach, N. Y., Feb. 28.—Sixteen houses were totally destroyed and some eighteen families made homeless by a fire which broke out in a drug store at this place shortly after midnight yesterday morning. That more houses were not destroyed is looked upon as remarkable, for nearly all of the buildings are of wood, mostly yellow pine, and a strong wind was blowing all during the early morning.

Bath Beach's business district, consisting of two blocks of frame buildings, was a series of piles of ashes three hours after the fire started. The origin of the blaze is supposed to have been spontaneous combustion, as it started in the cellar of Thomas McNichol's drug store, where a quantity of oils and other combustibles were kept. A clerk who slept in the store was awakened by the smoke, and he gave the alarm to Policeman Flanagan, who promptly rang an alarm bell a short distance away.

A Bucket Brigade.

Like all the country towns recently annexed to Brooklyn, Bath Beach has no regular fire department, so the alarm was responded to by the volunteer hook and ladder company. They soon had the flames out, and as they supposed the fire was all over started for home.

An instant later a loud explosion was heard and within a few seconds the whole of the drug store building was wrapped in flames. The front and rear walls of the store had been blown out and a dwelling in the rear of it also took fire. Calls for assistance were quickly sent to the fire laddies of Fort Hamilton, Unionville and Gravesend. All of them responded, and although they fought heroically their efforts had little effect upon the flames. The entire male population of this place turned out and assisted in the fight by forming bucket brigades.

Jealous Firemen.

At 2:30 the men fighting the flames saw they were getting the worst of it and they called on the Brooklyn fire department for help. Assistant Fire Chief Murray and District Engineer Doyle went down there with Engine Company No. 1, which is at Fourth avenue and Fifty-second street.

The arrival of the latter caused some jealously on the part of the volunteers, and when Chief Murray asked the Gravesend firemen to give up a hydrant near the heart of the fire they refused and a dispute followed. The Brooklyn firemen then had to go down to a hydrant 1,200 feet away to get water. Murray says he could have stopped the fire in fifteen minutes if it had not been for this.

Meanwhile the fireboat David A. Boody had come down from Brooklyn and soon had a big stream of water flowing into the flames through 1,400 feet of hose. The effect of this and the work of the big Brooklyn engine was soon seen, and after twenty minutes' fighting the fire was practically out.

He Saved the Baby.

The bright flames, which could be seen for miles around, made the spectacle a dazzling one. Sparks were blown long distances by the wind, and several small fires began away out from the main fire. The residents of this place were frightened nearly out of their wits, for at one time it looked as though not a cottage in the vicinity would escape the flames.

During the worst of the fire there were several rescues, the most notable of which was that by Roundsman Frank, who went into Mitchell's hotel while it was burning and rescued a baby which had been forgotten in the flight from the building. The hotel was totally destroyed. The total loss is estimated at $107,000, which is partly covered by $75,000 insurance.

Fears for the Schooner Johnson.

Provincetown, Mass., Feb. 28.—Fears are arising here for the safety of the fishing schooner Joseph P. Johnson, Captain George Brier, which sailed for the western banks, Jan. 28, and from which no report has been received since the heavy gales and bad weather of the first of this month. The Johnson carried a crew of twenty men, all belonging in this place, seventeen of whom were married and leave families.

A Publisher in Trouble.

Philadelphia, Feb. 28.—L. Lum Smith, publisher of the Agents Herald of this city, was arrested yesterday on charges of violating the postal laws by sending through the mails copies of his paper which contained an advertisement of an obscene book and for "engaging in a scheme to defraud by opening correspondence through the mails with another person." The charges were preferred by Postal Inspector Holden.

100,000 Miners Affected.

London, Feb. 28.—The negotiations for a revision of the sliding scale in the South of Wales mines have failed and the owners will notify the men that contracts will be terminated at the end of March when the scale will expire, unless revised. About 100,000 miners are affected. The decision of the owners will cause much bitterness and excitement.

Eight Years for That Job.

Boston, Feb. 28.—Eight years in the state prison was yesterday imposed by Judge Lilley in the superior criminal court upon Henry E. Stone for manslaughter, in causing the death of his wife Ellen E. Stone. The crime was committed December 29, at a lodging house, where Mrs. Stone was living apart from her husband.

"Cherokee Bill" Laughed.

TOWN AND HOME FAVORITE.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., FEB. 28, 1895

The editor of the discarded Republican organ professes to treat as a huge joke the castigation he is getting from those in authority. He will probably find much amusement in the communication from the Police Board published in this issue—an official utterance which needs no comment and from which there is no escape.

The Daily Press serials continue the best that the best living authors can produce. They are brand-new, copyrighted, and first published in these columns. Hamlin Garland's dramatic story, begun today, will be concluded tomorrow. In Saturday's issue will be commenced "The Thirteenth Column", by Barry Pain. Nym Crinkle's masterpiece, "Eight Minutes of Three", is scheduled for the issues of March 6, 7, 8, 9 and 11. Then come "Comfort Pease" by Mary E. Wilkins, "The Second Promise" by Howard Fielding, and "Toxin" by Ouida. How's that for a feast of variety and excellence in literature!

TODAY IN HISTORY.

Short Stories of Heroism from Real Life.

Bearding the Lion In His Den.

Feb. 28, 1864, was the date of one of Torpedo Cushing's famous exploits in Cape Fear river. In order to convince his superior that a certain plan he had matured was feasible he offered to bring the enemy's commander to breakfast on board the admiral's flagship. With 20 men in two boats he pulled past Fort Caswell and the batteries at Bald Head, in the mouth of the river, and landed at Smithfield, where the Confederate headquarters were located. Hiding his boats and their crews within 25 yards of a battery, he went with two men to the house occupied by General Hebert, passing through the main street of the town. Near the house were 1,200 enemies sleeping in their barracks. It was past midnight before the house grew still and lights were put out. Cushing left his comrades on the porch, and entering the unbolted door crept up stairs to the general's room, which had been located for him by a negro familiar with the house. With his hand on the door he was startled by a crash below and a cry from one of his men. Springing down the steps, he found that his comrades, in overconfidence, had alarmed the adjutant general, who hoisted a window and then brought it down on a Union revolver which looked him in the face. Cushing leaped into the room with a lighted taper and dragged from bed a dazed sleeper, who proved to be Hebert's chief engineer, Captain Kelley. From him he gleaned that the general, like Lord Erskine during the Battle of the Kegs, was lodging away from home.

The adjutant general had fled through a back door after encountering the revolver at the window, leaving the drowsy captain as the next best substitute for the more distinguished prisoner to grace the admiral's board next morning. The headquarters desks were rifled of papers and plans, and while the alarm cries sounded through the camp and the drums beat the long roll in the forts, Cushing and party, with Captain Kelley under guard, were in the middle of the river dropping down stream as noiselessly as they came. When Hebert reached his quarters, it was to meet a messenger bringing from a flag of truce the following:

MY DEAR GENERAL—I deeply regret that you were not home when I called. I inclose my card. Very respectfully,
W. B. CUSHING.

The department knew its man when Cushing was selected to sink the Albemarle. GEORGE L. KILMER.

A FULL REPORT.

How Young Mr. Docket's Parting Instructions Were Carried Out to the Letter.

When young Docket went down to Washington to argue a case before the Supreme Court he left instructions with his office boy to take a list of the names of all the people who called during his absence and their business.

On coming into the office the next morning he found the following interesting memorandum on his desk:

Century Co. called.

Man called on personal business. Large; thin; gray sideboards; bad teeth; patent leather shoes; long striped pants, turned up at the end. Said later he had some very good books to sell me; but I told him I was deaf and dumb.

Here comes Mr. Jenkins at just exactly fifteen minutes to one. He came in and said:

"Is Mr. Docket in."

"No, sir," said I.

"Well, how is things?"

"Well," said I, "they're as good as can be expected."

He admired the picture and commented on the long, thin legs and things in general, just like a critic.

"Well, I must be going now," he said.

I said "Good day." And he said it was, and he hoped the weather would keep like this till next month. He said he would call at 10 Wednesday.

Mr. Hawley came in and took a seat and showed me a new patent arrangement he had just bought, and asked me if I thought he got stuck on it. It was pretty slippery, and I don't think he did, for he let it fall. He went away and said he would call again.

"Ha! ha! ha! Why, howdy do, Mr. Miller?" (He just came in, 2:59.)

"When is my case on?" (Smithers vs. Ferris, ain't it?) says he.

"Next week, first Friday," says I.

Then he says I should tell you that when you come downtown again you should stop in and see him.

I am going over to Miss Ribbon's now.

Just got back from the typewriter's.

The woman you bought a dozen cakes of soap of last week came in and wanted to sell you some more. But I told her she must think we eat soap here.

A gentleman called to see about putting up a Louis XI. hat rack. But I advised him he would do better to get something more up to date.

A clerk from the office of Coats, Evans & Tracey called.

This is what he said: "Isn't Mr. Docket in? Oh, dear! he's a pretty hard man to find, ain't he?"

"Oh, no!" says I; "I can always find him when I want him."

He said if he could see you a minute he would be happy.

That's all; and I call it a pretty good day's work for $3 a week. I'm going home as soon as I get my overcoat on.

Yours respectfully, JOHNNY SHORT.—Puck.

THE REASONS WHY

Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites is so useful in all wasting diseases, such as Consumption, Anæmia, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Bronchitis, and Marasmus and Rickets in children, is because it furnishes to the depleted blood the fattening and enriching properties of the oil, and to the bones and nervous system the phosphorescent and vitalizing properties of the Hypophosphites, which together nourish the body arrest the progress of the disease, and commence a process of repair that finally means restored health and vigor.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt, of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave., Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

DRAMA AND OPERA.

DAMROSCH'S SEASON OF OPERA INAUGURATED IN NEW YORK.

Josef Hofman, the Boy Pianist, is Coming to America. New York's Casino Opens Again as a Beer Garden. The Dog Show Outdid Its Predecessors.

For the second time in its history the Casino has started as a music hall. It was provided with a new and well painted curtain, and the colors about the proscenium arch had been freshened with new gilt and paint. But in many respects the theater was the same that it had been for many seasons. "Trial by Jury," which Gilbert and Sullivan wrote nearly twenty years ago, was part of the programme. It was credibly done, but it has not even the novelty which might have come from lack of use, for it is sung often enough to keep fresh in public memory.

Josef Hofman, the pianist, will come to this country next November, under Messrs. Abbey & Grau's management. Hofman, it will be remembered, began a series of concerts here under the same management several years ago, but on account of the interference of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, which forbade the appearance of the then boy artist, the contract had to be canceled.

None of Shakespeare's plays probably has been acted so little as "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," which is running at Daly's. It has only been seen once in New York city, and that was in 1846, when Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean gave it its first American production at the old Park Theater. It was then played only four times. Shortly after it was acted in Baltimore, Boston and Philadelphia, and prints are in existence (almost as rare as the play itself) showing John Owens and William Warren in the part of Launce, which Mr. Lewis essays in Mr. Daly's production. Ellen Tree (Mrs. Kean) was the original Julia of the American stage, and it is this part which Miss Ada Rehan now plays.

Mr. Tree, of London, seems to delight in running from one end of the dramatic gamut to the other. On his first appearance here he contrasted the poetic youth in "The Ballad Monger," with the foxy veteran of the Russian police in the "Red Lamp." A short while ago he presented the fat and portly Falstaff, and followed with the lean and hungry Gringoire. It may be thought to be something of a theatrical trick to do this—to play upon your audience by opposing broadly opposite effects, and thus hoping to emphasize, by contrast, the impression of your worth as an actor in either part. It certainly has its popular results, and Mr. Tree's versatility has been proven, no matter how opinions may differ as to his exact position among the actors of the day.

The nineteenth annual bench show of the Westminster Kennel Club, at Madison Square Garden, outdid all its predecessors, both in the number of entries and the general excellence of the 1,636 dogs, which come from the best kennels of this country and Canada, with not a few choice specimens from England to give the affair an international tone. The dog, like the horse, seems to meet with the approval of society, and the annual shows organized by the institutions which have for their object the improvements of the breeds of man's best friend have been clever enough to cater to fashion to such a degree that these annual shows are part of the functions which the social world believes itself under obligations to make a success. Certain it is that as the years pass by, the Westminster Kennel Club and the National Horse Show Association have by their enterprises brought to such perfection the annual exhibitions given under their auspices that they are gigantic successes from a financial as well as spectacular standpoints. Breeders vie with each other for the trophies offered for the various strain of blooded dogs and horses, and while the Dow Show is hardly as impressive and the display of fashion is not so great as during the Horse Show, there is enough of that desire to excel that is the groundwork for all ambitions, and owners and handlers are on their mettle constantly.

Again the king of composers is to reign supreme upon the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House. Richard Wagner's stupendous music dramas have replaced the works of Gounod, Verdi and Bizet, and "the liquid Tuscan and sibilant French" that have been heard in New York's home of opera for several seasons have yielded for a brief period to the sterner Teutonic spoken by the troupe that Mr. Walter Damrosch has gathered around him for the performances of Wagnerian opera. Only four weeks is the season to last; only sixteen performances are arranged for in New York city; yet the preparations have been made with as much care as though the representations were to be continued through a long period. A remarkable company is engaged, and the New York Symphony Ochestra supplies the instrumental part of the music. That the public interest felt in the enterprise is very considerable is proved by the fact that the advance subscription is said to amount to close upon $48,000.

Children usually grieve their parents by turning out badly, but in Paul Lindau's new play, "Ungerathene Kinder," which Manager Conried will produce for the first time in this country at the Irving Place Theater, we have the unusual spectacle of a father mourning because his children turned out well. A wealthy gentleman, Johann Oberstaedt, is blessed with a son, Emil, and a daughter, Agathe, who, he proudly hopes, will prove shining lights of society. In sheer desperation old Oberstaedt secures the good offices of Baron Von Klattau, an impecunious nobleman, who has made his mark as a high roller. To him he intrusts the task of plunging Emil into the vortex of dissipation and fashionable life. He is delighted when his son comes to him for a considerable sum of money, which he believes to be for the payment of a gambling debt or some other extravagance. His hope, however, is crushed when he finds that the money had been devoted to charity.

LINWARD.

A bashful young man of Crown Point, while attending revival meetings, was approached by an earnest young lady, who said to him: "My dear friend, it would do my heart good to lead you to the altar." The young fellow hesitatingly replied that he appreciated the honor, but as he was already engaged to two girls he could not accommodate her.

Wait for the Big Show.

A manager who expends thousands of dollars in order that nothing will be neglected that might add to the enjoyment of his patrons certainly deserves success, and, as a rule, he generally gets it, if the public would endeavor to discriminate between responsible companies and those who posees no stability.

There are plenty of good shows, but, unfortunately, there are hundreds which are utterly devoid of merit. Now, any one can tell at a glance if they see a magnificent new store with massive plate glass windows, that it necessarily calls for a great outlay of money to erect it, and the stock in such a store is generally of the finest. The same line of reasoning to theatrical enterprises; for instance: when you see a show billed in the lavish and expensive manner that characterizes "She Couldn't Marry Three" company you can rest assured that there is money and push back of it. The beautiful, artistic pictorial lithographic work, is the finest and costliest on the road. No lithographic firm would attempt that kind of work without having ten thousand dollars down to insure them from loss. This is only one of the many items of a great show, and the same good taste which provides this beautiful printing will neglect no other department of the show. So there is no doubt that the production of "She Couldn't Marry Three" is the biggest show of the season.

A Good Indication.

Medical practitioners of prominence are prescribing for the cure of diseases springing from derangement of the digestive organs, Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. This professional endorsement is justified by the fact that no other preparation has been found so efficacious in that class of disorders even in the most advanced and severe cases. It has cured gravel in the kidneys, stone in the bladder and inflammation of the kidneys, where all other medicines had failed. It can be purchased of any druggist. A book is wrapped about each bottle, explaining its use.

METROPOLITAN NOTES.

Interesting Facts and Opinions Chronicled by the Daily Press of New York.

The Nineteenth Century Club had before it for discussion at Sherry's the subject, "The Wealth of New York." President Walter Page was in the chair, and the speakers were William M. Ivins, ex-City Chamberlain; Prof. F. H. Gedding, Department of Sociology of Columbia College, and Mr. Gieed, of Kansas.

"We have spent in New York city during the past ten years for the administration of the Government $500,000,000," said Mr. Ivins. "The corporation of New York city is the largest, wealthiest, and most important business corporation in the world. Its expenditures are not so large as those of Paris and London, but in those cities they have national as well as local expenditures.

"We have no financial system in New York city. They have in London, Paris, Vienna and Berlin. Their financial scheme centers in a 'financial body.' The Government makes the estimates for the next year's expenditures, fixing a maximum and minimum. If the financial body favors the Government party then in power it grants the maximum, if not, it gives the minimum.

"If any railroad, bank, or other private corporation were to be run in the shipshod, haphazard way that our Government corporation is run it would fail utterly. I once asked a Commissioner of Accounts if he could tell me what the sinking fund was. He said he could not, and didn't think any other municipal officer could.

"The annual reports of the Comptroller are so untelligible, officials are so incompetent, and we are so wealthy, that we do not mind our wasteful methods, especially if people do not get up meetings and speak about it."

Though Paris is responsible for the many gowns, wraps, sets on sets of exquisite lingerie and headgear, provided for Miss Gould's trousseau, to New York jewellers were given orders for wedding gifts from the young woman's family and her fiancee. That Count Jean de Castellane has an appreciation of the merits and beauty of diamonds is shown by a splendid corsage decoration completed under his direction, and the most enviable of all the contents of Miss Gould's jewelry box. The value of this ornament, that contains nearly 250 large, purely white brilliants and two very perfect emeralds, is estimated at $14,000. It consists of a central piece, nearly as large as a woman's hand, in an elaborate diamond crusted foliated pattern, inclosing one of the emeralds. When this is caught in the center of an evening bodice, double chains of diamonds will run up from it to right and left, high on the bust caught at one end by a cluster of three diamond feathers and at the other by a small copy of the middle piece, also holding an emerald.

In addition to this dazzling breastplate is a pendant, the like of which the Empress of Austria, whose emeralds are famous, could hardly show. Here is one as nearly flawless as those capricious stones are ever found. It is the largest for depth and brilliance that has ever appeared in New York. It is to be suspended in solitary magnificence in a hoop of picked white diamonds.

Speaking of poets, one sees John Hay—I should, perhaps, say colonel—about New York a good deal now. In fact, he may be safely called a New Yorker now, for he has for years been doing editorial work on the paper for which he did some of his earliest writing—the Tribune. It was for this paper, while Mr. Greeley was yet living, that Colonel Hay wrote that delightfully human bit of verse, "Little Breeches." He had no idea it would make the hit it did. In a few hours all New York was repeating the lines that went to say that the angels in rescuing "Little Breeches" and giving him back to his own, were doing

"A darned sight better business
Than loafin' around the throne."

A trifle profane, perhaps, but human. And then "The Wreck of the Prairie Belle," when Jim Bludso who had

"A wife at Natchez under the hill,
And another one down at Pike," and who was yet hero enough when "The Prairie Bell" took fire to

"Hold her nozzle agin' the bank
Till the last galoot wuz ashore."

Colonel Hays would undoubtedly rather be remembered for the work he did on the history of Abraham Lincoln, written in partnership with Mr. Nicolay, who was Lincoln's private secretary, than for his early verses. But the public has its own opinions in these matters. It was only the other day some men, discussing another bit of verse by Colonel Hay, in which Tillman Joy comes to the rescue of a runaway slave boy in the anti-Tillman period, and tells a ponderous town committee

"You kin resolute 'till the cows come home,
But if one of ye teches that boy,
He rastles his hash in hell to-night,
Or my name ain't Tillman Joy."

"But you don't call that poetry," said one critic.

"No, I don't," more forcibly than grammatically; "I don't call it a sonnet, or a madrigal, or a love song. I call it dad gasted nervy stuff, and I wish there was more like it!"

This criticism is submitted for what it is worth. Colonel Hay, perhaps, will not agree with it.—N. Y. Advertiser.

St. Bartholomew's Mission, in New York, is conducting under the direction of Col. Henry H. Hadley, Superintendent one of the finest equipped kitchens in the city, at which prepared food is furnished to the poor for about half its actual cost, thus removing from the poor who patronize the "soup and coffee bar," as it is called, the feeling that they are subjects of charity. This is the menu:

Mrs. Grant and the South.

A special to the Times-Union from Tampa, Fla., says the Confederates and G. A. R. men of that city gave Mrs. U. S. Grant a reception on the occasion of her sixty-ninth birthday. Speaking of the South, Mrs. Grant said:

"I love the South, for I was raised in a Southern State—Missouri—and I hardly knew which side to go with. But the General went with the North and I went with him."

"I see that Jones has made a big step forward in the widow's affections."

"Yes, and I fancy that one more will make him a step-father."—Smith, Gray & Co's. Monthly.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

CABINET RUMORS PLACE SECRETARY CARLISLE ON THE BENCH.

Startling Revelations With Regard to the Cost of the Railway Postal Service. Efforts to Modernize the Indians Unavailing. People's Curiosity Offensive.

Congress does not seem disposed to pass the bill introduced a few days ago by Senator Harris, giving Justice Jackson of the supreme court the right to retire from the bench on full pay after ten days' notice. The judiciary committee of the Senate reported the bill favorably, with an amendment removing the time limit, but the impression is gaining ground that the passage of the bill would be regarded as a reflection upon Justice Jackson's sense of honor and propriety. The history of the supreme court affords no precedent for the retirement of a judge until he shall first suggest such action. Justice Jackson is very ill and apt to die soon, but it is known that Senator Harris received no request from him to introduce the retirement bill. But, as Justice Jackson will soon leave a vacancy on the bench, either by retirement or death, the political gossips are busy naming his successor. Speaker Crisp, Wm. L. Wilson and Secretary Carlisle are all regarded as possibilities. The report that

SECRETARY CARLISLE.

Postmaster General Bissell is to resign in the spring, and that his successor in the cabinet will be Representative Tracey of Albany—"Cuckoo" Tracey, as he is now generally known—seems to have been circulated upon good authority, and Gen. Tracey does not deny it, although, of course, he has nothing at all to say on the subject. It is intimated in certain quarters that Secretary Carlisle may be Justice Jackson's successor on the bench, in which case William L. Wilson would become Secretary of the Treasury.

When the post office appropriation bill was taken up in the Senate Mr. Vilas (Dem., Wis.) offered an amendment to the pending amendment regarding the railway mail service looking to the purchase, ownership and management of the necessary postal cars by the Government, and appropriating $500,000 for the purpose. He said that when he was at the head of the post office department he had caused careful inquiries to be made, and had learned that the then total value of the railway postal cars was only $1,600,000, while $2,000,000 a year was then paid by the Government for their rent, besides paying by weight for the mails they carried. Figures just prepared by the railway mail bureau showed a total of 740 railway postal cars, worth about $3,500 each, making a total investment of $2,590,000. The maintenance of these 740 cars would cost $822,360. He illustrated his argument by showing that to the Pennsylvania Central Railroad there was paid for the year more than $2,000,000 for transportation of the mail and $575,000 for the use of 59 postal cars, and to the New York Central $2,080,000 for transportation and $425,000 for the use of 50 postal cars, the rent of the postal cars being about double their actual value.

The Dawes commission was unfortunate in not being able to get any counter propositions from the Indians in response to their own looking to a division of their reservations. The Indians held conferences with the commissioners, listened attentively to what was said, and asked time for consideration, but promised nothing, and all the indications were against a favorable conclusion. It is this fact that makes it difficult to supply legislation of a sort that will be at once acceptable to the Indians and desirable for the Government. The proposals submitted to the Five Tribes by the commissioners were, with slight modifications, the same for each of them. First, all lands except town sites and coal and mineral lands were to be divided in severalty among the citizens of the tribes according to treaties now in force, the land thus taken for homes being made inalienable for 25 years, or such longer period as was agreed upon. Each allottee should receive his land without expense, any trespassers being removed. Town sites, coal and minerals already discovered before allotment were to be disposed of by fair and just agreement, protecting the interests both of the tribes and those who had invested in them. All claims against the United States were to be settled, and all invested funds not devoted to school purposes and all moneys found due from the United States or derived from the sale of town sites, coal and minerals were to be divided per capita among the citizens. Finally, a territorial government should be formed by Congress over such of the tribes as might consent to it, the present tribal government meanwhile continuing until after the allotment of land and money. For some tribes a board of three persons, one to be a member of the Dawes commission, another a member of the tribe, and a third selected by those two, was to be appointed upon all questions of citizenship and right to allotments. But in the case of the Cherokee tribe, which, according to a decision of the interior department, is the exclusive judge of who are citizens, this proposal was withdrawn.

Almost any woman in high official life in Washington can tell interesting stories of her experience with the free American citizen. The fact that the reception days of the ladies of the cabinet are advertised in the newspapers brings to their homes crowds of people who come through curiosity alone. Under previous administrations, when refreshments were served at the cabinet houses on reception days, the number of this class of people was very much larger, but they are numerous enough now. "Now they are often offensive," said a cabinet lady last night as she was relating some of her experiences. "They are well meaning people, and seem to be prompted only by a good natured curiosity to learn all about people in official life."

BLIZZARDS ON THE PLAINS.

No Person Can Know What They Are Like Until He Has Seen Them.

The blizzard, as the plain man's vernacular designates the prairie snowstorm, is utterly incomprehensible to one who has not experienced it. Generated in the great storm breeding regions of barren British America, and swept on arctic blasts along the vast level reaches that stretch eastward from the Rocky Mountains, with no forest to break its force, it becomes a demon of the air, second only to the cyclone or tornado in destructiveness. The moisture is ground as between millstones, hurled with bullet like energy over hundreds of miles of level plain, and finally, transformed into yeasty sleet by the softening effects of lower latitudes, falls in bleak showers on the ranges of Texas and No Man's Land.

Lack of cheap building material and the brevity of the winter season on the prairies contribute to make the settler's cabin a poor refuge. When the blizzard comes every resource of fuel is husbanded, and it is faced with a grim determination to see it through.

But not all are prepared even so well as the settler. Occasionally a belated emigrant, en route either to a chosen claim on the frontier or toward the pleasantly remembered East, where he hopes to find old friends and helpers, is caught by the blast. He may have a tiny stove inside the canvas topped prairie schooner, but its heat can do little against the power of the storm. Sheltered by the low bluff of some ravine or water course he may weather the dragging hours of suffering, but the chances are that team and driver will be found a ghastly monument to the storm king's strength.

The farmer who has hurried ten or fifteen miles to the nearest village to secure supplies for the impending visitation is often overtaken before reaching his waiting family and perishes on the road, for no matter how well he knows the path, when the blizzard rages his way is as that of the mariner without a compass.

At the prairie schoolhouses, where the settlers' children are gathered from a territory covering many miles in every direction, the blizzard brings terror to the pupils as well as to their parents. Rescue is impossible until the lull comes, and awful possibilities lurk in the bosom of the storm. A Dakota schoolmistress last winter failed to dismiss her scholars in time for them to reach home, and found herself and them prisoners from a blizzard's approach. A night and a day at least were before her, during which her little charges must be protected. Deliberately she apportioned the food remaining in the dinner pails, divided the larger boys into squads to keep the fire burning steadily, and, when darkness came on, put the younger pupils to sleep on the benches. Then through the bitter night she sang, declaimed, told stories, invented games, and kept the frightened children amused and cheered as best she could. The following day passed much the same, but still no abatement of the storm nor any rescue. The second night was dreary indeed. The children cried themselves to sleep, hungry and cold. With her own hands the teacher broke up desks and blackboard to feed the voracious stove. With morning came a shout at the doors as the settlers shoveled away the snow, and then the plucky girl to whom the children owed their lives showed her womanliness—and fainted.—Detroit Free Press.

Negroes Who Owned Slaves.

It may not be generally known, but free negroes in Maryland and probably in other States 100 years ago owned negro slaves. The following deed of emancipation, bearing date Dec. 9, 1793, is duly recorded in record book No. 25, page 312, in the clerk's office of the circuit court at Easton, Talbot county, Md.:

Know all men by these presents that I, Negro Tom, late slave of Christopher Birkhead, of Talbot county and State of Maryland, being possessed of a negro girl named Grace, who is now about the age of sixteen years old, who is held by me in a state of slavery, and think it in my conscience that all mankind are entitled to equal freedom in this life and being desirous of securing to her liberty and freedom:

Now know ye that I do hereby declare that the said negro girl Grace shall be free immediately from the date hereof, and I do hereby for myself, my heirs, executors, administrators, renounce all right, title, and claim from and after the date hereof.

It witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 9th day of December, anno Domini 1793.

His NEGRO X TOM
Mark.

Signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of us, PETER WEBB, SARAH TRIPPE.

A similar deed of emancipation was recorded by a free negro, Abraham Gastus, May 17, 1794. There were afterward other deeds of emancipation by free negroes of slaves purchased or otherwise acquired.—Baltimore Sun.

Both Played With Fire.

At a recent gathering of notable men the after dinner chat turned upon personal experiences, and a distinguished jurist related this:

After graduation he migrated to a Western town; months of idleness, with no prospect of improvement, induced him to seek a new home. Without money to pay his fare, he boarded a train for Nashville, intending to seek employment as reporter on one of the daily newspapers. When the conductor called for his ticket he said:

"I am on the staff of the ——, of Nashville; I suppose you will pass me?"

The conductor looked at him sharply.

"The editor of that paper is in the smoker, come with me; if he identifies you, all right."

He followed the conductor into the smoker; the situation was explained; Mr. Editor said:

"Oh, yes; I recognize him as one of the staff; it is all right."

Before leaving the train the lawyer again sought the editor:

"Why did you say you recognized me! I'm not on your paper."

"I am not the editor, either. I'm traveling on his pass, and was scared to death lest you should give me away."

DEPEW ON LINCOLN.

HIS ANALYSIS OF THE WAR PRESIDENT'S CHARACTER.

Love for the People and for the Union His Chief Traits. Story of an Afternoon Dr. Depew Spent in the White House. Some Remarks on This Administration.

In an address upon Abraham Lincoln, delivered at Burlington, Vt., Hon. Chauncey Depew said:

"As we study the characteristics which made Lincoln great and successful, we find them not in the usual gifts of great statesmen. They were an instinct for the right, a comprehension of justice, a boundless sympathy and compassion, an intense and yearning love for his fellows and their welfare which knew neither rank nor race, but gathered within its boundless power all mankind. The force and effect of this power in Lincoln can be best illustrated by the contrast between him and his great antagonist, Douglas. In any condition of the country's affairs, when great moral questions were not at issue, Stephen A. Douglas would have been President. A clerk in a store on starvation wages, a storekeeper without capital and his business sold out by the sheriff, a surveyor earning ten or fifteen dollars a month and a lawyer with no other equipment than Blackstone and the statutes of Illinois—such was Lincoln at a period when the accomplished and cultured Douglas was already the idol of his State. And yet thus, on the threshold of a career, with such surroundings, such teachings and such impressions; in the midst of a community which drank, Lincoln was a temperance man; in the midst of a community that swore, Lincoln was free from blasphemy; in the midst of a community not highly moral, Lincoln was as pure as an angel; in the midst of a community that regarded the negro as no better than the horse or the mule, Lincoln was an abolitionist.

"There never was such a President—never such a ruler as Abraham Lincoln. He did not represent hereditary privileges, for he came from the plainest of the plain people; he did not represent heredity, for he had none; he did not represent the colleges or the universities, for he knew them not; he did not represent capital and great accumulations, for he had neither; but he did represent the toiler upon the farm, in the workshop, upon the highway, in the factory, anywhere, everywhere where honest men and honest women were striving to better their conditions and to illustrate the dignity of labor and the nobility of American citizenship.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

"Lincoln knew nothing of the dignity, so far as it is expressed in manner and dress, which belongs to high station. The instinctive sense of propriety and consciousness of superiority and greatness which hedged Washington was absent in him. The test of greatness is the wearing of the halo. It destroyed Napoleon, it ruined two-thirds of the generals in the war, it has driven great and little politicians, from the commencement of our republic until now, into obscurity. But Lincoln was never troubled as to the size of his head. He never overestimated nor underestimated who he was, what he was, nor what he represented. He never forgot where he came from and never lost sight of the fact that except by the accident of position he was neither better nor worse than those who placed him in the presidential chair. He possessed what no other ruler ever did, or, if he did, no other ruler ever dared to use, the power of humor. The portentous solemnity of our public men pervades our political atmosphere even to depressing melancholy. The less the statesman knows the more solemn he is, the thicker his head and the more owlish his bearing. A President of the United States once said to me: 'No man can ever succeed in this country who gives rein to his humor or his fun. The people no longer look upon him as a serious man, and only serious men are recognized in the consideration of public affairs.'

"When Mr. Lincoln came to Washington he was unknown to the great leaders of his party. He had the courage, which only a very great man can have, of summoning them all into his cabinet. This Illinois lawyer, orator and statesman called to his aid the men who had demonstrated in the Senate, in the House and in the courts that they were the leaders of men. What a spectacle! This ungainly giant of the West, angular and awkward, uncouth of manner, inelegant of address, with the courtly Seward for secretary of State, the stately Chase for secretary of the treasury, the worldly, dominant and shrewd Cameron for secretary of war and the imperious Stanton as his successor! Chace turns to his friends and intimates that the country has a mountebank for President. Seward, ever anxious to be useful, writes a private note offering to perform all the duties of the presidency and leave the ornamentation of its name and station to Lincoln. He receives in reply a letter which ignores the insult, but says in effect: 'I will run the administration and you run your department, except when I think that you had better run it in some other way.' In less than a year every one of these great leaders recognized that he was in the presence of his chief and superior.

"I remember as if it was yesterday an afternoon with Mr. Lincoln. I was but a boy, though secretary of New York State. Horatio Seymour was the Democratic governor and the legislature was Republican. The soldiers' vote was to be obtained. The Republican legislature would not trust the governor and it devolved upon me the duty of collecting the soldiers' vote. Mr. Lincoln looked up as I pressed my way through the crowd in his reception room and said: 'Well, Depew, what can I do for you?' I said: 'Mr. President, I do not want anything; I am in Washington on a mission from our State to get out from the armies our New York soldiers' vote and I simply called to pay my respects.' He said: 'It is so rare that anyone comes here who wants nothing; please wait and I will get rid of these people in a few minutes.' The room was soon emptied, the faithful Jerry was guarding the door and on the lounge the tired President was rocking to and fro, holding his long knees in his hands and telling story after story to relieve his mind; and he said: 'Depew, they say I tell a great many stories. I think I do. They say I lower the dignity of the presidential office by these broad anecdotes. Possibly that is true. But I found in the course of a long experience that the plain people of the country take them as they are and are more easily reached and influenced and argued with through the medium of a humorous illustration than in any other way.'

"While I was there Mr. John Ganson, of Buffalo, was a member of Congress. His face and his head were hairless and polished like a billiard ball. He was a Democrat, but supported the President. The conditions of the army were very blue in the East and in the West. Ganson came in one day and said: 'Mr. President, I am risking my re-election in supporting your war measures. The campaign seems very unsatisfactory. Of course I will not give out anything you tell me. What is the situation at the front?' Mr. Lincoln, in his searching and sad way, looked at him for a moment as if he was about to reveal the secret of the whole army and then tumbled Ganson out of the reception room by saying, 'Ganson, how clean you shave.' Lord Lyons, who was a bachelor, went up to announce the marriage of the Princess Alexandra. As is usual on such occasions, the secretary of State had prepared a formal reply to the address of the English minister. Mr. Lincoln fumbled in his pockets and, unable to find Mr. Seward's courtly response, grasped Lord Lyons by the hand and said, 'Lyons, go thou and do likewise.'

"As I sat in his room that afternoon, it was not congressmen who crowded about him, it was not senators, but it was wives and mothers who wanted to get to the front and whom the war department would not permit to go where loved ones lay wounded in the hospitals. It was wives and mothers and fathers pleading for husbands and sons condemned to be shot. No petitioner for mercy ever left Lincoln with his petition not granted. I was dining one night with Gen. Sherman and, except Mr. Choate and myself, all the guests were commanders of armies in the war. They were all lamenting how Mr. Lincoln had impaired discipline by pardoning the men who had been court martialed and condemned to be shot, and the proceedings of the court martial approved by them, and finally Slocum said, 'Sherman, what did you do?' That stern old warrior answered grimly, 'I shot them first.' But with Mr. Lincoln it was impossible to approve a death warrant. To the father pleading for his son he gave a respite and when the father wanted something more his answer was: 'If your boy lives till that sentence is carried out he will be so old that the world will think Methuselah was a baby in years when he died.'

"He was first, last, and all the time an American; an American when Napoleon, invading Mexico, would have broken up the Union; an American when Great Britain would have interfered for the purpose of destroying the republic, because, as Lord Salisbury said, we kept shop and were her rivals in business; an American in his earnest devotion to the Union and the Constitution, an American in his love of liberty, an American in his belief that within the borders of the United States could be manufactured all that the people of the United States might require for themselves. He loved the Union above all things. He was the representative of the cult which was started by Daniel Webster. The world little knows what it owes to that great brain. 'The Union, one and inseparable, now and forever,' was the inspiration of the schools. It created a mighty wave of unreasoning worship of the Union. Lincoln absorbed it, Lincoln understood it. In his inaugural address—the first one—it was the Union; in his inaugural address—the second one—it was the Union; in all his letters and speeches it was the Union. It was the Union with slavery, or the Union without slavery; but always the Union of the States.

THE BLIND TIGER IS SICK.

The Dispensary Law of South Carolina Has Benefited the Blacks.

In South Carolina the blind tiger is not dead, but he is mighty sick. On every hand one comes across abandoned saloons with time worn lettering over the doors; in many cases other forms of business, like green grocers, grocers and butchers, are doing business beneath the time honored sign. There is much that is pathetic in the ghost of a departed industry, whatever its character. And then there are here and there great big breweries, whose flaring signs are mocked by the closed shutters and the awful silence. The trade in liquor as a traffic sanctioned by the law is dead there. The State has practically outlawed it by taking charge of its sale and restricting the quantity which can be purchased at any given time by any given person, and then making him, when he walks up to the State dispensary and gives his order, sign his name in a big book where all who run may read. It is a very inquisitorial sort of arrangement, something like the operations of the income tax, and very repugnant to the ideas of American citizens of high and low degree. A man may want his toddy, but he does not want to have to register the fact in a big book.

The county of Charleston is entitled to ten State dispensaries, but as a matter of fact only four are in operation. There are enough people there who want liquor to keep the ten going, but they resent the facts of restriction and publicity incident to patronizing the dispensaries, and patronize the blind tigers, where they can, or go dry, or patronize the artesian waters, which are not bad when you have a cultivated taste. And to cultivate a taste for artesian waters when one has been used to the best rye and Bourbon and corn whisky is not an easy matter.

CHAPTER I.

It was Saturday night in Rock River. Teams covered with the dust of the August roads stood in rows along the sidewalks. Harvesting was in full drive, and the town was filled with nomads from the south, men who had worked their way north following the isthermal line of ripening wheat.

Farmers had driven in for provisions, and their hands had come with them for an evening's outing. The streets swarmed with rough, lawless characters. Few women ventured abroad, but bands of yelling boys, feeling the unstable equilibrium of the atmosphere, fought or played up and down before the saloons which were crowded to the door.

The better class of farmers hitched up and drove away before nine o'clock, gathering together as many of their hands as possible, but others remained to see the fun, which everyone felt to be coming.

It was reported that the "Wapsey gang" was in town. The Swedes from Rock Run were also well represented down at Ole's "Hole in the Wall." The Vesey boys and Steve Nagle had been seen, and last and most important, Bill O'Shea, "the Wapsey Tiger," was down at the red saloon.

Bill was brother to the deputy sheriff, who had been in his day the most feared of all the Wapsey gang. He it was who used to terrorize the constable and make men like Steve Nagle quail when, on his infrequent sprees, he took offense at the sound of their voices. He dominated the gang and ruled as if with naked sword in hand.

By the advice of Dr. Carver, Jim O'Shea had been made constable of the town. The doctor had quoted with great effect the experience of Boston in making the famous crook, Tukey, marshal, in the days when thugs ran the city in their own way. From being constable, Jim came naturally to be the deputy sheriff of the county. He had given up drink entirely.

Bill, also from the Wapsey prairie, was quiet enough ordinarily, but when in liquor was ferocious as a panther. At such times no one dared to oppose him nor lay hands upon him, that is, no one but his brother, the deputy. Every law-abiding citizen regretted the infrequent visits of the Wapsey Tiger.

Constable Ranney, a tall, mild-mannered man, grew more and more nervous as the night drew on and reports came in about Bill. He kept sedulously out of sight after eight o'clock; in fact, he went to the mayor's office for comfort and reinforcement. He made a feeble effort to cover his flight by saying to several of the uneasy citizens on the street:

"If I'm wanted, I'll be at the mayor's office. I'm going up to consult him."

This deceived no one. Every man and boy in Rock River knew Ranney was afraid of Steve Nagle, to say nothing of O'Shea. They shouted cat calls at him as he went along the street, but they could not blame him very much. There was a sort of horse sense in keeping out of the Tiger's way.

The matter was being discussed in the mayor's office. Ridings was there, and Judge Brown, and two or three others. Foster, of the Saturday Morning Call, took a humorous view of the matter, the others did not. Foster quoted a line or two while sharpening a pencil.

"Now, 'whether Roderigo killed Cassio, or Cassio Roderigo, all makes my gain,' I'm getting news."

"We may pull through all right yet," said the mayor, a small man of a scholarly turn of mind, not fitted to cope with such crises.

"Depends on how soon Bill gets whisky enough to put 'im to sleep," said Ridings, one of the council men.

A wild volley of whoops arose on the street. Ranney turned pale, the mayor started up in his chair, Ridings set his lips grimly.

"The fun begins," said Foster. "Ranney, why ain't you out there on the street? You'll miss something."

Ranney gave up all pretense. "I can hear just as well a little further off."

Judge Brown cleared his mouth of tobacco.

"Mr. Constable, we who are peaceable and not of powerful physical organization hire you to fight our battles for us. Mr. Mayor, order the constable to the scene of carnage."

The mayor smiled faintly. "Mr. Constable, you know your duty."

"All too well," said Foster.

Another series of whoops arose, maniacal laughter and then a single wild voice in a sort of chant.

They all were at the corner and looked out. Up the street, clearly outlined in the brilliant light of the moon, came the Tiger. He walked with a curious action as if his legs were made of steel springs. His bare feet glistened, his head was flung back in a wild gesture. He was Red Brian defying the English battle line on Balley Moor.

"Come out, ye sons o' dogs, ye all, ye white-livered whelps. Come to me arrums, come, smell o' me fist." He leaped in the air. "Come down out o' that," he snarled as he caught sight of the men in the mayor's office.

The heads disappeared, and the crowd on the street laughed, and the Tiger kept on waving his fist. "I can whip the worruld."

"Constable, arrest that man," commanded the mayor.

"I can't do it, y'r honor," said Ranney, in deep distress.

Ridings broke out: "Things have come to a narrow lane, if we can't control the streets of our own town. If our constable can't or won't do his duty—"

Ranney, nearly sobbing in his shame and fear, dragged the star off his coat, and extended it to the mayor.

"Take back the office, I don't want it. I didn't go into this thing to arrest grizzly bears nor crazy maniacs, for three dollars a day. It's all very well for you fellows to sit here and order me to go and arrest that infernal devil; go do it yourself."

He flung the star on the floor and walked toward the back stairway: "I'm going home."

Foster dryly remarked: "There's a certain degree of justice in what Mr. Ranney says. There are too many commanding officers here and too few active warriors. There's just one man in this country who can arrest Bill O'Shea."

"You mean Jim?"

"Yes, of course."

"Jim's in Cedarville."

"Then telegraph him."

"I telegraphed him an hour ago," said the judge. "I knew we were in for trouble. He ought to be here soon if he started at once."

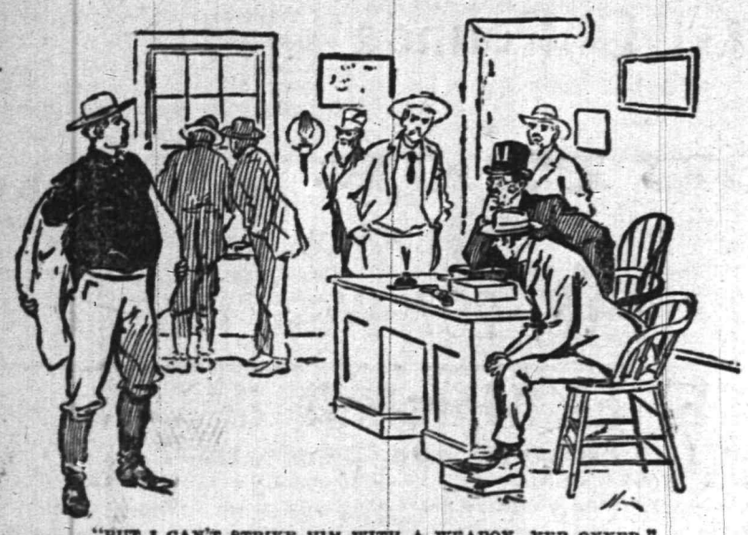
The mayor sighed with relief. "Well, there's nothing to do but wait."

They looked out of the window at every fresh burst of noise. The Tiger still paraded up and down, leaping into the air occasionally with a shrill "Wherroo!" He had the weight of a lion and the activity of a leopard. He was transformed from a slouchy, quietly humorous farmer into a demon. Everybody gave way before him, behind him followed a howling mob of admiring friends. Silence came only when he led the way into some saloon.

The better citizens kept dropping in at the mayor's office to ask why that man was not arrested. The mayor cooled each one off by saying: "I'll deputize you to arrest him, if you wish."

While they sat waiting they heard the sound of hurry out in the street, then a word of command that brought them to a halt.

"Here comes Jim!"



"BUT I CAN'T STRIKE HIM WITH A WEAPON, YER ONNER."

Quick, powerful steps were heard on the stairway, and Jim came in. He was of moderate height, but the girth of his chest was enormous. His face was dark and handsome. His eyes had something placid and sorrowful in them. His drooping mustache concealed his mouth. Altogether he was a fine Irish type.

"Where is he?" he asked.

"In the red saloon, just now."

"Is he wild, boys?" Jim asked in a hesitating way.

They felt no inclination to laugh.

"He is plumb crazy."

Jim gave a groan of sorrow and dismay.

"Murtherin' divils! What a task I have." He took out his big clasp knife and laid it down.

"There's a gang with him, too;" said Ridings.

"I don't moind that, it's Billy, poor divil." He laid aside his revolver and took off his coat.

"It'll be desprit, boys," he said with a sad quiver in his voice. "I can't shoot him, yer anner. It's me duty to arrest him, an' I will, but it's loike embracin' a lion to take Billy when he's dhrunk. He'll kill me if he can, if he's crazy, but I can't stroike him with a weapon, yer anner."

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

On March 6 we shall begin publication of a detective story by Nym Crinkle, entitled

"EIGHT MINUTES TO THREE".

A. C. Wheeler, who uses this pseudonym, is one of the best known journalists in the United States. He has been for many years the dramatic critic of the New York World, and is today one of the most brilliant writers on the American press. It is to his inimitable sketches o New York life that the Sunday World owes a considerable part of its popularity. Mr. Wheeler has written many successful stories, of which the best known is perhaps "The Great Laran Rebellion".

"Eight Minutes of Three" is in every way a remarkable piece of fiction, and deserves to rank with some of the weird tales of Poe. It will run five days, and will be followed by a short story of New England life by Mary E. Wilkins.

This story, like all the Daily Press serials, is brand-new, and copyrighted to Daily Press use.

$100 Reward $100.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

A False Diagnosis.

La grippe is confounded by many persons with a severe attack of catarrh, which in some respects resembles the former. These individuals suffer severely with pain about the forehead, eyes and ears, with soreness in throat and stoppage of the nasal passages and in fact, are incapacitated for work of any kind for days at a time These are catarrhal sufferers. Ely's Cream Balm has been used with the best results in such cases. The remedy will give instant relief.
